The bill was read. It provides that every person entitled to a pension under section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and who has lost one hand and one foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $37 per month, and that the act shall take effect from and after the 1st of September, 1876.

The substitute reported by the committee was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all persons who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or have been totally and permanently disabled in both, shall be entitled to a pension for each of such disabilities at such a rate as is provided for by the provisions of the existing laws for each disability: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce a pension in any case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe this is a House bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not; it is a Senate bill with an amendment reported by the House committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The substitute then comes from the House committee?

The SPEAKER. It is an amendment recommended by the House committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin, before asking action on the bill, will explain the effect of the amendment upon the original bill.

Mr. RUSK. I will state that the amendment which I have reported is precisely the substance of a bill passed by the House at the last session, but which has not yet been acted upon by the Senate. The Senate bill proposes to make the pension for the double disability of $37. The amendment proposed by the committee, and which I have stated passed the House last session, gives the pension for each disability according to the provisions of the present law, and, provided a man has lost a hand and a foot, he receives $36 per month, $1 less than the Senate bill proposes to give. If he has lost a leg above the knee and an arm above the elbow, he will then be entitled to $48 per month.

The substitute reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

The bill of the Senate, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Has the Committee on Naval Affairs been called?

The SPEAKER. It was called.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The call did not arrest my attention at the moment. I would ask unanimous consent to go back so that I may submit some reports.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object to going back.

T. WILLIAM BULLARD.

Mr. RIDDLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3706) granting a pension to T. William Bullard; and the same was laid upon the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATHANIEL JOHNSON COFFIN.

Mr. RAINEY. Will it be in order for me to report some private bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions under this call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a public bill cannot be reported on private-bill day except by unanimous consent; but private bills may be reported on public-bill day. The Chair is informed that is in accordance with the practice of the House.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1952) granting a pension to Nathaniel Johnson Coffin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RAINEY, from the same committee, also reported adversely upon the following; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3247) granting a pension to John Etzell; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3429) for the relief of Nancy Dixon.

COUNTERFEITING COIN.

Mr. DURHAM, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 739) to amend section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to counterfeiting.

The bill provides that section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"Every person who falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits, or causes, or procures to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aids or assists in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any coin or bars in resemblance or similitude of the gold or silver coins or bars which have been, or hereafter may be, coined or stamped at the mints and assay offices of the United States, or in resemblance or similitude of any foreign gold or silver coin which by law is, or hereafter may be made, current in the United States, or are in actual use and circulation as money within the United States, or who passes, utters, publishes, or sells, or attempts to pass, utter, publish, or sell, or brings into the United States from any foreign place, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, with intent to defraud any body politic or corporate, or any other person or persons whatsoever, or has in his possession any such false, forged, or counterfeited coin or bars, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, with intent to defraud any body politic or corporate, or any other person or persons whatsoever, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than ten years."

Mr. DURHAM. The object of this bill is to perfect the section of the Revised Statutes in relation to counterfeiting or having in possession counterfeit coin. In the original section the clause "with intent to defraud," &c., is omitted. Under that section whenever any person is found, for instance, with counterfeit coin of a foreign country in his possession, although not knowing the same to be counterfeit, and not intending to defraud any person by passing it, he is liable to the punishment prescribed by that section. This bill proposes to amend the section in that respect.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. O'BRIEN, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back, with an amendment, a joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to attend an international conference upon the subject of the relative values of gold and silver.

The joint resolution provides that should the government of one or more countries invite a conference or convention to consider the important change which has recently occurred in the relative values of gold and silver and the adoption of international measures for the removal of embarrassments arising therefrom, the President of the United States is authorized to appoint three qualified persons as commissioners to attend such conference or convention.

The amendment was to add the following:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to propose such conference or convention to the governments of the leading nations of the world, if he should deem the same desirable.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call the previous question upon the joint resolution and amendment.

Mr. FORT. I wish to raise a point of order on that resolution.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FORT. Well, let us see.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It does not appropriate a single dollar.

Mr. FORT. It provides for a commission.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order rests against the joint resolution.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to say a word before the Chair makes his decision.

The SPEAKER. Upon rereading the joint resolution, the Chair thinks it is not subject to a point of order, for it does not, on the face of it, make an appropriation.

Mr. FORT. How is it possible to appoint a commission without paying them? It seems to me that the very idea of employing an agent or servant involves his payment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair quite agrees with the gentleman in that respect, but the rule does not reach the case.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It may be that the President may appoint Army officers or Navy officers or some of our ministers abroad, or other salaried officers of the United States, who could not receive two salaries. The joint resolution does not necessarily contemplate the expenditure of a single dollar of money.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution, as amended, to be read a third time.

Mr. REAGAN. Is this joint resolution open to discussion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland has called the previous question upon it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] without waiving my right to call the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I look upon the appointment of this commission as a matter of much more importance than it would seem to be considered from the slight interest apparently taken in it by the House. It is proposed to create a commission for the purpose of determining a question in which American interests are certainly very different from English interests, and perhaps from those of other parts of the world. That difference consists in this: Our country is very largely a debtor country. Taking into consideration our national debt, our State debts, our municipal and corporate debt, we are perhaps the largest debtor nation in the world. One of our resources for meeting this indebtedness is the value of our silver. To encourage its mining and to bring it into use as a part of the currency of the country are of great interest to our people.

What is the condition of the English people in reference to this question? England, I take it, is the largest creditor country in the world. A very large proportion of the English revenue-yielding property consists in the bonds of other governments and of corporations in other parts of the world. These securities aggregate billions. Whatever may give value to these securities will benefit English interests. Any restriction as to the kind of currency in which the principal and interest of those bonds may be paid augments their value in relation to the other property of the world by increasing the difficulty of such payment. It is obvious, therefore, that English interests tend toward augmenting the difficulty of paying these bonds by making gold alone the medium of payment. American interests are exactly opposite and in a very marked degree.

This being so, I am not willing to submit American interests to a commission composed largely of representatives of other governments, whose interests are different from ours and who will have stronger representation and greater influence than ourselves in the organization and action of such commission. It seems to me the highest duty of statesmanship, in fidelity to our own people and their interests, that we should control this question for ourselves as an American question. I trust, therefore, that this bill will not pass.

Mr. CLYMER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I believe this bill goes over till the next morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It does.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The special order for to-day after the morning hour is the bill (H. R. No. 2263) for the repeal of so much of the act of December 17, 1872, as provides for a pivot-draw in any bridge to be erected across the Ohio River between the cities of Covington, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that this bill will not be called up in the absence of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] who feels great interest in it.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Ohio understood very well that this bill was set for to-day. If it be not acted on to-day it loses its place. I did not know of his absence or intended absence, but supposed he would be here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inform the gentleman from Texas that unless this bill is taken up to-day it loses its preference.

Mr. REAGAN. I must insist on the bill being proceeded with.

The bill was read. It provides that so much of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Ohio River, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same," approved December 17, 1872, as provides for a pivot-draw in any bridge hereafter to be erected across the Ohio River between the city of Covington, in the State of Kentucky, and the city of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, be repealed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Commerce directed me to report this bill back to the House and recommend its passage. This was agreed on during the busy part of last session, and no written report was prepared to accompany the bill.

The measure was discussed on both sides before the committee; and the passage of the bill was objected to on the ground that it would tend to obstruct the free navigation of the Ohio River.

Under the sanction and authority of the laws of the United States, and of the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Indiana, bridges have been built across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Wheeling, Bellaire, Parkersburgh, Cincinnati and Newport, Cincinnati and Covington, and at Louisville, and one is being built, known as the Cincinnati and Southern Railroad bridge, for the accommodation of the vast and increasing inland commerce and travel which crosses that river.

It is no doubt true that these bridges do, to a small degree at least, interfere with the navigation of that river; and its commerce is very large. But the commerce and travel which cross it is also very extensive. And it is not probable that the obstruction to commerce and travel on that river caused by the construction of these bridges is greater than the obstruction to the commerce and travel of the country would be if denied the facilities which these bridges afford for crossing it. This would seem to be the just and practical way to look at that question, taking into view all the interests involved and seeing how we can best promote the general interests of commerce and travel, and at the same time cause the fewest impediments to them.

Comprehending this necessity, and in this spirit, Chief-Justice Taney in the Wheeling Bridge case said:

> The general convenience and interest of the public, in travel and trade across the river as well as on its waters, must be taken into consideration.

And as evidence that the Federal Government, which has authorized the construction of all the bridges on the Ohio, has never lost sight of the necessity of preserving its navigation, I may state that Congress has at various times, and down to the present, made appropriations of money to improve its navigation, amounting in all to millions of dollars.

But the question presented in this bill is narrower probably than the one above presented, while the same elements in a large measure enter into its consideration.

There is now, I understand, a bridge across the Ohio extending from the upper part of the city of Cincinnati to Newport, known as the Louisville Short Line Railroad bridge. Then there is the wire suspension bridge across this river, about a mile below the railroad bridge, which extends from about or a little above the business center of Cincinnati to Covington, on the Kentucky side of the river. There is also still another bridge in process of construction about a mile and a half below this wire suspension-bridge, known as the Cincinnati and Southern Railroad bridge.

It is also contemplated to construct another bridge across this river about sixteen hundred or two thousand feet below the wire suspension bridge, connecting Cincinnati and Covington lower down. It is proposed to build this bridge with "at least one span of a height not less than one hundred feet above low water, and not less than forty feet above the highest water, measured to the bottom chord of the bridge," and "that this span shall give a clear opening of at least four hundred feet between piers over the main channel of the river," as provided by the act of Congress of December 17, 1872.

But this act of Congress requires "that all bridges over the Ohio River, below the Covington and Cincinnati bridge," the one I have been calling the wire suspension bridge, "shall have, in addition to the high span prescribed above, a pivot draw, giving two clear openings of one hundred and sixty feet each, measured at right angles with the current at the average stage of water in the river," &c.

Now, the object of this bill is to enable those interested to build this new bridge, with the high span four hundred feet wide, and to relieve them from making the pivot-draw. This immunity is insisted on upon two principal grounds:

First. Because this bridge is to be "free to all the world for foot passengers, and likewise for all other uses, save and except such minimum tolls as shall be barely sufficient to meet the current expenses of the bridge." It is to be built at the expense of the city of Covington, to secure a cheap and convenient mode of intercommunication between that city and Cincinnati. And as a bridge for passengers, who would probably be passing over it quite constantly during all hours of the day, and who would necessarily be often impeded and delayed by the opening of the draw, it is not believed it would answer the purposes of its construction or the necessities of the community, if the pivot-draw should be required.

Second. It is believed the bridge with the pivot-draw, with two openings of 160 feet each, would be more of an impediment to the navigation of the Ohio than one with one opening 4[illegible] feet wide. And that, therefore, in view of both these important considerations, the repeal of so much of the act referred to as provides for a pivot-draw in any bridge hereafter to be erected across the Ohio River between the city of Covington, in the State of Kentucky, and the city of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, is proper.

It will be observed that this repeal would not extend to bridges built across the Ohio below these two cities. It would only extend to a bridge or bridges between these two cities.

Besides these considerations the bridge, it is estimated, would cost from sixty to a hundred thousand dollars more with than without the pivot-draw.

It is urged in behalf of this measure that the construction of this bridge would meet a great local necessity to these two cities in addition to affording general facilities of travel and transportation to the public. And there seems to be no objection to the construction of this bridge with the pivot-draw.

No bridge on the Ohio River, from and including the wire suspension bridge at Cincinnati to Steubenville, has a pivot-draw, and there are six of them. I will incorporate in my remarks a tabular statement showing in separate columns the height of each of these bridges above low water, the height of each above high water, the maximum local rise of water at each, and the width of the main channel span of each.

Bridges.	Above low water.	Above high water.	Maximum local rise.	Width of channel span.
	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.
Steubenville railroad bridge	90	45	43	303½
Wheeling highway bridge	71½	48	43½	980
Bellaire railroad bridge	90	40	50	222
Parkersburgh railroad bridge	90	40	50	326½
Newport and Cincinnati railroad bridge (as commenced)	71½	9	62½	400
Newport and Cincinnati railroad bridge (as altered, &c)	100	37½	62½	400
Cincinnati suspension highway bridge	102½	40	62½	1,005

From this table it will be seen that the bridge at Steubenville is 90 feet above low water, 45 feet above high water, with a maximum local rise in the river of 43 feet, and with a main-channel span of 303½ feet over the channel of the river; that the Wheeling high bridge is 91½ feet above low-water mark, 48 feet above high water, with a maximum local rise in the river of 43½ feet, and with a main-channel span of 980 feet; that the Bellaire railroad bridge is 90 feet above low water, 40 feet above high water, with a maximum rise in the river of 50 feet, and with a main-channel span of 222 feet; that the Parkersburgh bridge is 90 feet above low water, 40 feet above high water, with a maximum rise in the river of 50 feet, and with a main-channel span of 326½ feet; that the Newport and Cincinnati railroad bridge, as commenced with a pivot-draw, was 71½ feet above low water, 9 feet above high water, with a maximum rise in the river of 62½ feet, and a main-channel span of 400 feet; the same bridge as altered, under the advice of the United States engineers, without a pivot-draw, is 100 feet above low water, 37½ feet above high water, with a maximum rise in the river of 62½ feet, and with a main-channel span of 400 feet; and the wire or Cincinnati suspension bridge is 102½ feet above low water, 40 feet above high water, with a maximum rise in the river of 62½ feet, and a main-channel span of 1,005 feet.

The height of the proposed new bridge between Cincinnati and Covington is to be 105 feet; height above low water 102½ feet, above high water 40 feet, with a main-channel span of 400 feet in width.

Now, from what has just been said it will be seen that there is not a pivot-draw in any bridge across the Ohio from Steubenville to the Cincinnati suspension bridge, including these two. It will also be seen that a pivot-draw was commenced in the Newport and Cincinnati bridge, and that under the opinion and advice of the United States engineers the pivot-draw in this bridge was abandoned and a single span of four hundred feet was adopted. Without producing them I refer those who may wish to look more carefully into this question to the report of General Warren, General Weitzel, and Colonel Merrill, of the Engineer Corps, to General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, on this subject, of April 19, 1871, in which they say "that time and experience have shown the utter incompatibility of bridges with draws with the peculiarities of Ohio River navigation." And on the same subject reference is made to the report of General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, of 1871, page 400.

I have neither time nor inclination to go further into this view of this subject, and only say this much to show that, as there seems to be no objection to the construction of this bridge with a pivot-draw, there ought to be none to its construction without the pivot-draw; as this plan, as shown in the construction of all the bridges along the Ohio from this point up to Steubenville without pivot-draws, and as the judgment of the Corps of Engineers must have been and appears to have been against them. And this view is fully sustained by reference to the steady, continuous, and rapid increase of commerce on this part of the Ohio River, with a steady and continuous reduction of the cost of freights since these bridges were built. This needs no illustration to those familiar with that river.

Among the reasons urged for the construction of this bridge and in favor of the repeal asked for to secure its construction, one is that the present bridge between Covington and Cincinnati does not sufficiently accommodate those communities and the traveling public and transportation between them, and because the present bridge is a monopoly and is used more to obtain dividends for the company owning it than for the benefit of the public.

That we may the better understand the business relations between Cincinnati and Covington and the necessity for an increase of the facilities of intercommunication between them, in addition to the general interests of commerce and travel, I may say that Cincinnati has a population of over 275,000, as I am informed, with a taxed valuation of property of over $175,000,000; with an annual import trade of over $331,000,000, and an annual export trade of over $221,000,000; with an annual production of manufactures of over $144,000,000; while Covington has a population of about 30,000 and her taxable property is assessed at more than $15,000,000. Covington is really a suburb to and forms part of Cincinnati, as Brooklyn does of New York. The business intercourse and social and private relations of the people are as if they constituted one city. And it is natural, necessary, and proper that they should seek to enlarge, improve, and cheapen the means of that intercourse. They have now but a single bridge for that purpose, and it is managed for the benefit of the corporation which owns it rather than for the interests of the public.

The average daily number of foot-passengers crossing over the present bridge, for the year 1875, was 9,737, equal to 3,553,005 per annum. During the same year there was a daily average of 1,900 foot-passengers crossed at a ferry, which also belongs to this bridge company, between these two cities, and a short distance below the bridge, equal to 693,500 per annum; showing 4,246,505 foot-passengers crossing between those cities that year. I have only spoken of the foot-passengers, and not of the freights, vehicles, cattle, and other stock, &c. And the number will of course increase with the growth of those cities and of their business with each other and with the increase of general commerce.

I should also state that the northern terminus of the Kentucky Central Railroad is at Covington, and that the whole business of this important railroad going to or from Cincinnati passes over the present suspension bridge; and without the construction of this new, free bridge, these people, with all their business intercourse with each other and their means of intercommunication, will be at the mercy of a single corporation. The result of such a condition of things all know in advance would be the exaction of an enforced tribute from the people for the benefit of a monopoly—from the many for the benefit of the few—which could not fail to become odious and to produce a partial paralysis of all the great interests concerned, with real injury to both these cities and to the general public.

These are some of the reasons why the committee recommend the passage of this bill and why I believe it ought pass.

Much more may be said in behalf of this measure, but I leave the further discussion to those more interested and better prepared to discuss it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. KEHR,] who wishes to present views perhaps adverse to mine.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas what arrangement the committee provide for the opening of bridges across the Ohio River at the point under consideration. This measure appears to be simply a negative upon the method of having a draw. There certainly ought to be some method provided in regard to any bridge built over the river, unless it is built entirely above the reach of steamers.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state to the gentleman that it is proposed to have this bridge constructed just as the Cincinnati and Newport bridge is constructed: not less than one hundred feet above low water; not less than forty feet above high water; without a draw, and with an open span four hundred feet wide over the main channel.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is that all provided for in the bill? I want to know what provision the bill makes.

Mr. REAGAN. Under the act of Congress of December 17, 1872, which is a general law regulating the construction of bridges over the Ohio River, it is provided that any bridge built across the river above the mouth of Big Sandy shall have a certain height and a certain width of span, the latter being not less than three hundred feet; that bridges built below Big Sandy shall have an open span of not less than four hundred feet and that they shall be of a height which is indicated. From Cincinnati down the height must be at least one hundred feet above low water and not less than forty feet above high water.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the height between the Big Sandy and the Ohio?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not the table before me just now, but it is less than this. I believe it is ninety feet. There are some bridges varying in height, and as I have the table here now I can tell the gentleman exactly the height of each.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say I merely make the suggestion to him. Of course I have not seen the bill, and gentlemen who live in Cincinnati should know more than I do about it. But I should deem it unsafe to repeal the arrangement now made by law for the height of bridges and the passage of steamers through or under bridges and make no provision in place of it, leaving it to the general laws, which may be vague. Whatever may be done, I think there should be added right in connection with the repeal such proviso as will regulate any bridge to be built at Cincinnati.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will wait for a moment, I will explain the matter to him and show that it is in harmony with the provisions already made in the law.

Now a word as to the height of these bridges:

Bridges.	Above low water.	Above high water.
	Feet.	Feet.
The Steubenville railroad bridge	90	45
Wheeling highway bridge	91½	48
Bellaire railroad bridge	90	40
Parkersburgh railroad bridge	90	40
Newport and Cincinnati railroad bridge, (as commenced)	71½	9
Newport and Cincinnati railroad bridge, (as altered, &c)	100	37½
Cincinnati suspension highway bridge	102½	40

The latter is the same which it is proposed to make this bridge.

The gentleman's difficulty, however, is not yet answered. If we make this repeal we must also show what arrangement will be substituted for it. Now, by reference to the act of Congress of 1872, the gentleman will find, after prescribing the height of bridges above the mouth of the Big Sandy and below the mouth of the Big Sandy, it provides that those built shall not be less than one hundred feet above low water and forty feet above high water, and that there shall be an open span of not less than four hundred feet across the main channel of the river; it adds then a proviso that all bridges built across the Ohio below the wire suspension bridge at Cincinnati shall, in addition to the span of four hundred feet wide and one hundred feet above low water and forty feet above high water, contain a draw. That is the provision of the law now, that they shall contain a draw. The object of this bill is to exempt those building any bridge between Cincinnati and Covington from making a draw.

The bill only provides that the repeal shall extend to so much of the proviso as applies between the cities of Cincinnati and Covington. Now then, looking at that subject, immediately above the wire suspension bridge, a bridge may be built just as it is proposed to build this one, of the same span, same height, and without a draw; and that covers all that part of Cincinnati, and Covington, and Newport which lies above the suspension bridge.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. REAGAN. Not now. It covers a considerable distance from the mouth of Licking River to the suspension bridge. Now, then, what can be the difference between putting a bridge fifteen hundred or two thousand feet below this bridge without pivot-draws and putting a bridge the same distance above without pivot-draws? It seemed to us it was not necessary. And the great reason which exists for making a free bridge here for foot-passengers and for all the world besides, except such minimum charge as would keep the bridge in repair, is, and it ought to be, one which can be passed at all times. And if it is to be made with a draw, whenever the draw is open the foot-passengers must be stopped and impeded, and all other passengers and transportation upon the bridge must likewise be stopped. Therefore the great convenience to those communities and to the general public and to commerce which will arise from enabling them to build a bridge without a draw is manifest. And added to that, as I have already stated in my opening remarks, it seems to be the judgment of the United States engineers that a single opening of four hundred feet is less an impediment to the navigation of the river than two openings of one hundred and sixty feet each. The gentleman will therefore see that the provision he speaks of is already made in two law, and that we simply propose to suspend one provision of it as to that part of the river which lies between Cincinnati and Covington.

I will be glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER. I wish to suggest to the gentleman as a fair statement in regard to the situation of this bridge that, placing it as he does half a mile below where the law provides no bridge without a pivot draw shall be placed, he necessarily forces the landing of all the larger steamboats navigating the Ohio River below the localities in Cincinnati adapted to this business during every period of high water, and I wish to say to the gentleman and to the House that there is a protest against this bill from every business combination of citizens of Cincinnati, and that the only purpose of it is to save a corporation about $60,000 or $70,000 by authorizing them to evade the provision of a law which has been recognized ever since 1872, and which ought to control the bridging of the Ohio and Mississippi and all our rivers.

Mr. REAGAN. The statement of the gentleman from Ohio makes it necessary for me to add one word. The gentleman ought to be better acquainted with that river and its navigation than I am, and yet his statement does not show that he is so. He informs this House that the building of this bridge without pivot-draw would necessarily impede the reaching of the wharves of Cincinnati by a great many steamboats that come there. Now the gentleman ought to have known, and he will know when I call his attention to it, that the wharves at which the steamboats lie are above the suspension bridge and that none but three mail-boats, as I am informed, lie below that bridge and below the point at which this bridge would be built, I believe; but as to that I am not certainly informed. So that the gentleman is totally mistaken when he assumes as an argument against the bill that the building of this bridge will prevent the passage of steamboats, for they now pass under a bridge no higher than the one proposed to be built.

Mr. SAYLER. Will my friend allow me to correct him? I have lived in Cincinnati for a good while and know the situation there pretty well. As a matter of fact that suspension bridge does impede the passage of large boats; and the boats between Louisville and Cincinnati are compelled to make their wharfage below the suspension bridge. That bridge, however, with a span of over one thousand feet, is much easier got through than the bridge proposed. The proposed bridge is sixteen hundred or eighteen hundred feet below the suspension bridge, and will force boats to make their wharfage still lower down. The improvement of the Louisville and Portland Canal has resulted in putting on the river a much larger class of boats than have navigated the river before. You cannot get those boats up at any period of the year when there is high water unless the bridge has draws. You require a draw in every bridge below this point, and the only object is to save a small sum of money to a corporation.

Mr. REAGAN. It is not so much the money that is saved as that it would not serve the purposes of commerce.

Mr. SAYLER. Why not, when every other bridge is built with a draw?

Mr. REAGAN. I will tell the gentleman why. Every time the draw is opened the commerce and travel passing upon that bridge between two such cities is impeded. Another reason is that the very object of building this bridge is to relieve the people of Cincinnati and of Covington of an onerous monopoly. If you allow them by their influence to cripple and defeat the construction of this bridge in a way that it will be available, by placing a draw on it that will impede and interrupt travel, you strengthen the hands of that monopoly against the interest of those people.

But the gentleman from Ohio recurred again to the statement—and I must again call attention to it—that this bridge would arrest the passage of steamboats. I stated to the gentleman what he has not disputed, that the great body of the vessels trading on the Lower Ohio to Cincinnati now land above the wire suspension bridge. As I am informed, there are but three vessels belonging to the mail line, of very high dimensions, that do not pass under this wire suspension bridge, but land below it. Some five thousand and odd vessels that landed at that wharf last year passed under a bridge of the same height as the one proposed to be built; a line of three vessels landing below it, which preferred, as a matter of fancy, to have very tall chimneys.

But in relation to that I desire to present right here a few facts that may be serviceable to my friend from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] in the consideration of this subject. I have here a table showing by official observations of twelve years the number of days that the water has stood at a given stage as compared with the height of these bridges. I desire to call the attention of the House to the facts shown in this table. In these twelve years the average number of days in which there were 5 feet of water with 98 feet between the water and the bridge was 325. The number of days in which there were 10 feet of water with 93 feet between the water and the bridge was 252. The number of days in which there were 15 feet of water with 88 feet between the water and the bridge was 191. The number of days in which there were 20 feet of water and 83 feet between the water and the bridge was 132. The number of days in which there were 25 feet of water and 78 feet between the water and the bridge was 90. The number of days in which there were 30 feet of water and 73 feet between the water and the bridge was 58. The number of days during which there were 35 feet of water and 68 feet below the bridge was 41. The number of days in which there were 40 feet of water and 63 feet between the water and the bridge was 18. The number of days in which there were 45 feet of water and 58 feet between the water and the bridge was 9. The number of days in which there were 50 feet of water and 53 feet between the water and the bridge was 3. And the number of days on which the water was 55 feet high and there was a space of 48 feet between the water and bridge was 1 day.

Now then, sir, I know that formerly high chimney-stacks were used on that river. Now a new plan has been required in some vessels since the building of these bridges, that under which, by a mechanical arrangement, they lower their chimney-stacks in passing under these bridges.

The policy which makes this necessary was adopted by the Congress of the United States on full consideration of the subject, as due to the commerce and travel passing across that river from east to west and from west to east, and as being fairly balanced against the necessity of the preservation of the navigation along the channel of that river. And it was the consideration of this fact that induced the Chief-Justice of the United States, as I said in my opening remarks, to say that both these matters should be considered in connection with the subject—that is, the interests of the commerce along the channel of the Ohio River, and the interests of the commerce which crosses the Ohio River.

While the commerce of that river is very great no man will assume or contend that the commercial interests which lie along its channel are so great in magnitude as the commerce which crosses it by virtue of the facilities afforded by the bridges which cross this river. We have to consider these subjects together.

I admitted in my opening remarks this fact, that it must be confessed that some impediment must be offered to the navigation of the Ohio River by the construction of bridges of this character, but the interests of the country demand that whatever slight impediments may be created in this way should be made in the interests of the general commerce of the United States.

I want to state one thing further, and it is that since the building of these six bridges along the Ohio River from Cincinnati to Steubenville without draws and with spans from three hundred to four hundred feet, there has been a steady and continuous increase of the commerce of the river from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati and a steady and continuous decline in the rates of freight. Now, here is a great fact stated, which enables us to see that these bridges cannot have seriously interfered with its navigation.

I will not take time to give the figures in relation to this fact, but they clearly prove the fact that notwithstanding the construction of these six bridges without draws, and none of them higher than the one proposed to be built if this bill is passed, the commerce of the river has steadily increased and the rates of freights have steadily diminished.

If a bridge of this description were a serious obstruction to the navigation of the river, could such results have happened? I do not believe that it is in the interests of commerce to resist the passage of this law, but in the interests of a single monopoly which is determined to levy a perpetual tribute upon the people of Cincinnati and Covington. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] has said that every organized interest in the city of Cincinnati opposes this bridge. Well, he represents a portion of the city of Cincinnati, and he ought to have better information upon that point than I have.

I believe that the chamber of commerce opposes it, but I am informed that a portion of its members are stockholders in the wire suspension bridge; but if any other organized body of that city opposes this bill, I am not informed of it, and I do not believe the people of Cincinnati are opposed to it, for I do not believe they would oppose their own interest and the means of their own prosperity.

I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. KEHR.]

Mr. KEHR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that this bill is reported back not by the committee unanimously, but by a divided committee, and I was instructed by the minority to present some views against the passage of the bill.

After a conflict of a quarter of a century between the interests of the carriers by rail and those of the carriers by water, an agreement was reached in 1872 concerning the system of bridging the Ohio River. On the 17th of December in that year the Congress of the United States passed a general law for the bridging of the Ohio. It is to be assumed that the law as then adopted underwent careful examination, and that in the deliberations which finally matured it all interests were consulted; that the judgment of the skilled engineer was taken on the engineering problems involved; that the demands of the commerce of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, as well as the special wants of the carrying service, by land and water, by rail and boat, were kept in view; that conflicts in interest were judiciously reconciled, so far as it was possible to reconcile them, and we may therefore well assume that the law as passed expressed the best judgment which the legislative body of the nation had reached, or could at the time reach, on the subject. It seems too that the system then adopted meets the approbation of those who dwell in the valley of the Ohio, for no complaint against it has been heard from that source.

I have stated that the law is a general law, under which any body of men who see fit to do so may construct bridges over the Ohio, provided they observe the requirements of the law applicable to all alike, and these requirements are, in substance, that all bridges below the mouth of the Big Sandy shall have at least one span of a height of not less than one hundred feet above low water and of not less than forty feet above highest water; that this span shall give a clear opening of at least four hundred feet between the piers; that it shall be placed over the main channel of the river, and that all bridges erected below the Covington and Cincinnati suspension bridge shall, in addition to the high span, be provided with a pivot-draw, giving two clear openings of one hundred and sixty feet each. Congress, in passing the law, deemed it essential to commerce and the free navigation of the Ohio that all bridges below the supension bridge at Cincinnati, then already in existence, should be provided with a pivot-draw giving two openings of one hundred and sixty feet each. In devising this bridge system, which was to set at rest a vexed subject involving great interests, and which was to control for the future, the requirement of a pivot-draw at all points on the Ohio below the point stated was deemed indispensable. The bill now before the House proposes to relieve bridges hereafter to be erected below that point, between Covington and Cincinnati, from the requirement of the pivot-draw; and the question is, shall the law of 1872 be undone? for to allow the exception now asked is simply to break in on and destroy the system then devised.

No argument can be used in support of the present bill that does not apply with equal force to any bridge project at any point on the Ohio below Cincinnati. If it is proper to grant the exemption in this case, justice will require that it be granted in all others. Any two cities, towns, or villages facing each other on the shores of the Ohio may ask the exemption with equal justice, and, the precedent being established, that fact will fortify their claim. My appeal, therefore, is to preserve the law against the first assault and to ward off the threatened inroad by piecemeal upon the bridge system which it created.

It is asserted that one purpose in asking this legislation is to defeat what is claimed to be an existing monopoly. To that I answer that there can be no monopoly where the law gives the right to build as many bridges as people see fit to build. There is now ample authority for building this bridge. The question is simply whether requirements in the interest of navigation, deemed to be proper in regard to all other bridges below Cincinanti, shall also be applicable to this bridge. If proposed to be built in conformity to law, there is no legal difficulty in the way. The only embarrassment presented is the unwillingness of those promoting the bridge project to conform to the law in the construction of the bridge.

It is incontestably true that, with a pivot-draw boats of all sizes will be able to pass up and down the Ohio at all times during the season of navigation, and it stands confessed on the other hand that without the pivot-draw certain vessels now navigating that river will not be able to pass the bridge; but it is claimed that this class of vessels is small in number. I will not stop to inquire whether the number be large or small, for if the obstruction can be removed by the construction of the draw I claim that it should be done. The shipper and the carrier have the right to demand it, and the trifling expense of the draw must not stand in the way. The certainty of being able to pass the bridge and to deliver cargo is altogether too important to the producer as well as to the consumer, the carrier as well as to the shipper, to permit an artificial barrier which a trifling outlay will obviate to block a water-course for the improvement of which the nation annually expends large sums of money. In any controversy in which I find the larger and more general interests on one side and a special or local interest on the other, I unhesitatingly range myself on the side of the former, and such I believe to be the case here.

It is claimed that to build a bridge between Covington and Cincinnati with a pivot-draw will somewhat inconvenience free passage across the bridge. I would ask if to close the river against vessels intended to navigate it is not only a greater inconvenience, but whether it does not also involve a much greater and more far-reaching loss? The argument that to dispense with the pivot-draw will save the expenditure of from $60,000 to $100,000 in the construction of the bridge is not to my mind entitled to much weight when the question of the navigability of a river is at stake. It is of vastly more importance that the system of bridging which was devised after mature deliberation should be carefully observed, than that it should be broken in upon in order to save the expenditure of a small sum of money.

Mr. REAGAN. The argument in favor of this bill is not placed on that ground, but on a different ground. It is that as the bridge is to be used continuously for the passage of passengers and freight it would be impracticable to have that passage frequently interrupted by the opening of the draw.

Mr. KEHR. In answer to that I will call attention to the fact stated a few minutes ago, namely, that it will be necessary to resort to the draw only at certain stages of the water and during a comparatively few days of the year. If that be so, the inconvenience to bridge travel will be limited to those brief periods. And the question is immediately suggested whether the delay to bridge travel arising from the opening of the draw is not an insignificant inconvenience in comparison to the fact that vessels freighted with cargo will, without the draw, be unable to pass at all.

The leading view that has controlled my action in this matter is that after a system of bridging a stream has been devised, it ought to be adhered to religiously. The bridges that span a navigable water-course should be constructed according to a uniform system, for it is only in this wise that vessels can be constructed and navigated to conform to them. It is impossible to have different systems of bridging upon the same stream and yet preserve the interest of boats and vessels and of those interested in navigating them.

If I have any portion of my time remaining I desire to yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KEHR] hold that he is alone in opposing this bill?

Mr. KEHR. I have no objection to state how the committee was divided, if in doing so I am not violating parliamentary etiquette.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; but this is a matter of public concern.

Mr. KEHR. I desire to say that I am not alone in opposing this bill in my committee——

Mr. SAYLER. This is a matter of so much importance that I hope discussion will not be cut off at the termination of the hour of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] I hope that those of us who live in the city of Cincinnati and along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and their tributaries will be permitted to express their views upon this subject. It is a matter of much more importance than gentlemen may at first suppose. And as it is now late and my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] requests me to yield to a motion to adjourn, I will do so with the understanding that we will have time to-morrow for further discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON, for ten days on account of important business.

To Mr. CASWELL indefinitely on account of sickness in his family.

DISPOSITION OF TROOPS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the disposition of United States troops as called for by the resolution of December 18th, ultimo; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

D. DAVIS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in relation to the claim of D. Davis for improving the Hudson River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EMPLOYÉS IN STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a statement of persons employed and salaries paid to same in his Department for the year 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was then agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BROWN, of Kansas: Papers relating to the petition of Sylvanus Sandford for compensation for sugar taken by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DOBBINS: The petition of Lawrence M. Smith, late of the Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOODIN: Petition of Lieutenant A. H. Von Luettwitz, for the correction of his Army record, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILL: The petition of citizens of Georgia, for a post-route from Cumming to Dawsonville, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HOAR: The petition of Harding Woods and others, of Barre, Massachusetts, for cheap telegraphy, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John Q. Ashford and other citizens of Iowa, for action by Congress concerning the Des Moines River lands, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of Calvin Adams, that the Commissioner of Patents be authorized to extend his letters-patent on an improved door-lock, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. KIDDER: A paper relating to the establishment of post-routes from Fort Pierre via Rapid City to Deadwood; from Fort Randall to Rapid City; from Rapid City via Custer City to Deadwood; and from Rapid City to Crook City, all in Dakota Territory, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LAPHAM: The petition of William De Mocker, late a private in Company A, One hundred and fourth New York Volunteers, for a pension and for the correction of his Army record, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of A. Gibbs, that the heirs of deceased soldiers may be paid interest on the amount found to be due decedents at the time of their death, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LYNDE: The petition of Homer Glass and 107 vessel-owners of the lake ports, for the repeal of the law giving three months' pay to seamen discharged at foreign ports, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MUTCHLER: The petition of J. N. Barritt and Duncan S. Walker, that the House of Representatives investigate the subject of the removal of war material from some sections of the country to other sections; also, to inquire into the present strength, location, and occupation of the troops of the United States Army, how many are being used upon the frontier, in the Southern States, and in and around Washington; when the troops were ordered to Washington, the nature of their orders, by whom made, and the purpose for which they are or have been ordered here, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Mrs. Sarah C. Hugg, widow of James S. Hugg, late captain Company G, Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROSS, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 22 citizens of Sullivan County, Pennsylvania, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Arizona: The petition of citizens of Arizona, for the construction of a military road over the Mogrillon Mountains, Arizona, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina: The petition of W. W. Green, for the establishment of a post-route from Shelby to Marion, North Carolina, via Camp Call and Dysartsville, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of New York, for a reduction of the cost of trade-marks, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware: The petition of citizens of Millsborough, Delaware, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WOOD, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 43 citizens of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, for the purchase of the telegraph lines by the Government of the United States, to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1877.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON SILVER COIN.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have received a memorial of the Boston Board of Trade upon the subject of renewing the coinage of silver. It is in form addressed to me, but it is in fact a memorial to the Senate and House. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, January 5, 1877.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
United States Senate, Washington.

SIR: I beg to inform you that at a meeting of the Boston Board of Trade held this day the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the officers of the Boston Board of Trade be instructed to forward to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States the following petition in the name of the board and also to transmit a copy of the same to the President of the United States.

The Boston Board of Trade respectfully prays the Congress of the United States to provide by law for the appointment of citizens learned in financial science and well acquainted with practical business affairs to be commissioners on the part of the United States to meet such commissioners as may be appointed by the several European governments, in convention, to consider the expediency of remonetizing silver coin at a fixed relation of value to gold coin by all the nations; and requesting the President to invite the several governments to participate in said convention, agreeing with them upon the time, place, and other conditions for holding such convention; and until the leading commercial nations of Europe shall join in an international agreement for the remonetization of silver coin and for fixing the value thereof in relation to gold coin, the Boston Board of Trade prays that silver coin shall not be made a legal tender in the United States for any sum larger than $10, and most earnestly protests against the passage of the bill making silver coin an unlimited legal tender for all debts, public and private, which bill has already passed the House of Representatives and is now pending before the Senate of the United States, and this for the following reasons:

1. Because the monetary standard of the United States has for more than half a century been practically limited to one metal, namely, gold, and all contracts and monetary transactions have been regulated by it.

2. Because this practical adoption of gold as a monetary standard was in 1873 confirmed by statute, so that all contracts then pending, except so far as modified by the legal-tender act, were definitely reduced to the gold standard and every departure from the same in monetary transactions and payments, public or private, with the above exception, is a positive violation of contract, which by the Constitution of the United States is expressly prohibited to the several States, and would be still more inexcusable and ruinous in its consequences if committed by the General Government.

3. Because such a step would involve great injury to the credit of the United States, which has been steadily improving since the close of the civil war to the great advantage of the Treasury and benefit of our people, and even should the price of silver be so maintained as to render the change comparatively harmless to the holders of our bonds, the fact that we had been willing to commit such a practical fraud would tell against us in all time to come.

4. Because, by committing ourselves prematurely to the re-establishment of silver as a legal standard we not only hold out an inducement to Germany, France, and other nations of Europe to discharge upon us the whole volume of their surplus silver coin, but put it out of our power to take hereafter a leading position in international conferences for the purpose of establishing the bimetallic standard on a uniform and permanent basis for all the civilized nations of the world.

Asking your kind offices in this matter,

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN W. CANDLER,
President Boston Board of Trade.

A true copy. Attest:
C. G. ATTWOOD, Secretary.

Mr. BOUTWELL. In presenting this memorial to the Senate I desire to make a statement as to the character of the memorialists and the subject to which the memorial relates, not however at any length, but very briefly. If this were a memorial from the board of trade of a large commercial city composed of men who devoted themselves exclusively to business and business pursuits, I think it would receive the careful attention of the Senate; but I am justified in saying further of the Boston Board of Trade that it comprises among its members many gentlemen who have made the science of money a study and who have brought, therefore, to the consideration of this subject the results of their thoughts and studies added to a very large business experience. They are concerned naturally in the preservation of individual credit and of the public honor. I may say generally that I concur in the views presented in this memorial, but as the subject is before a commission and a bill is in the hands of a committee of the Senate, I do not purpose now to enter into a consideration of the subject. I ask that the memorial be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOGY. While I concur with the Senator from Massachusetts in the statement that this memorial comes from a most respectable source and is signed by gentlemen who are no doubt well versed in the subject of finance, yet it seems to me there are some very singular statements in the paper. I say so with very great respect to those men, because I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that they are men of undoubted intelligence. Nevertheless, in my opinion the fact is not generally known that by the law to-day silver as well as gold is a recognized coin with which you can pay duties and all the debts due to the Government by individuals. I will read the sections in the Revised Statutes to sustain what I have just stated.

SEC. 3473. All duties on imports shall be paid in gold and silver coin only, or in demand Treasury notes, issued under the authority of the acts of July 17, 1861, chapter 5; and February 12, 1862, chapter 20; and all taxes and all other debts and demands than duties on imports, accruing or becoming due to the United States, shall be paid in gold and silver coin, Treasury notes, United States notes, or notes of national banks; and upon every such payment credit shall be given for the amount of principal and interest due on any Treasury note not received in payment on the day when the same are received.

SEC. 3474. No gold or silver other than coin of standard fineness of the United States, shall be receivable in payment of dues to the United States, except as provided in section 2366, title "Public Lands," and in section 3567, title "Coinage, Weights, and Measures."

SEC. 2366. The gold coins of Great Britain and other foreign coins shall be received in all payments on account of public lands, at the value estimated annually by the Director of the Mint, and proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of section 3564, title, "The Coinage."

SEC. 3567. The pieces commonly known as the quarter, eighth, and sixteenth of the Spanish pillar-dollar, and of the Mexican dollar, shall be receivable at the Treasury of the United States, and its several offices, and at the several post-offices and land offices, at the rates of valuation following: the fourth of a dollar, or piece of two reals, at twenty cents; the eighth of a dollar, or piece of one real, at ten cents; and the sixteenth of a dollar, or half real, at five cents.

According to my understanding, silver, in spite of the law of 1873, is a recognized coin to the extent that you can pay duties with it and all other obligations of the Government. Therefore the statement made by these most respectable gentlemen of Boston, that it would be a violation of contract and a breach of those obligations now existing that are based alone upon gold, is in my estimation not entirely correct. I mention this so that the fact may go before the country. I am myself extremely solicitous to have silver made a legal tender, but I desire that all these facts should go out so that the public mind of the country may take hold of them and elaborate the question as it should be. Let the facts go out, and I believe this is one fact not generally known.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Without questioning the view of the law taken by the Senator from Missouri, I think that the memorialists in the paper just read have said nothing which is in conflict with that view. That I say without assenting to or denying the proposition as to what the law is as laid down by the Senator from Missouri. The memorialists assert, as I understand, that for about fifty years, (I suppose meaning since the passage of the act revaluing gold in 1834,) by the understanding of men engaged in business, gold has been the basis on which business has proceeded with the exception of the period during which paper money has been a legal tender. I think that is all that is intended by the memorialists; but, however that may be, that is an entirely subsidiary matter. The chief object, no doubt, of the memorialists is to present to Congress the views which they entertain touching the expediency of legislation for the issue of silver money until the effort has been made to bring other countries into harmony with this in favor of a bimetallic standard upon some agreed ratio of value between silver and gold.

Mr. BOGY. I heartily concur with that portion of the memorial myself. This question is not confined to one country; it affects the commercial world. The commercial world is a unit, and as a matter of course what is money in one portion of the commercial world should be considered as money in all other portions. That part of the memorial I heartily concur with, and I think at this session of Congress we should do something urging the appointment or providing for the appointment of a commission to meet commissioners from other portions of the world with a view of settling this question. I concur heartily with that portion of the memorial.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish simply to say that the Senate already at the last session passed a bill which covers the very point now spoken of. I think some time during the last session we sent to the House a bill which provides for an international commission authorizing the President to appoint delegates on the part of the United States to adjust and arrange the relative value between gold and silver. The Senate also passed a bill which authorizes a treaty or a commercial arrangement between Great Britain and the United States, by which the gold units of money in this country and Great Britain may be harmonized so as to be converted readily one into the other. Those bills were sent to the House during the last session and are still pending there. I have no doubt the House at its own convenience will take up the bills and act upon them, and we can no doubt agree in having commissions authorized and the commissions will be organized and appointed at once.

Mr. BOGY. I will state simply my objection to the bill spoken of by the Senator from Ohio. I think I voted for that bill at the last session, but having at the same time an objection to it. It provided for the appointment of an international commission to whom was to be submitted the question of the double standard. I am not in favor of submitting that question, as far as we are concerned, to any international convention at all. I am in favor of submitting to an international convention the question as to the relation which should exist between the metals, and no more. In other words, the value, the relation, should be uniform throughout the commercial world, but the other question whether we should or should not have a double standard, that is a standard composed of gold and silver, I was not disposed and am not now disposed to submit to an international convention. I objected to the bill to that extent; yet I voted for it because at that time I could not have my amendment adopted by the Senate; but that was my objection and is yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPENCER presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama; which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolution and memorial to the Congress of the United States asking for the passage of an act approving the act of the General Assembly of Alabama authorizing the construction of a breakwater in bay and harbor of Mobile.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That the governor of the State be, and he is hereby, requested to forward the following memorial of the General Assembly of Alabama to our Senators and Representatives in Congress at his earliest convenience, requesting immediate attention thereto.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States for the passage of an act approving the act of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a breakwater in the bay and harbor of Mobile," &c., approved March 6, 1876, and the amendments thereto.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the General Assembly of Alabama respectfully invited the attention of the honorable Congress of the United States to the great benefit and convenience likely to result to this State and the general commercial interest of the country from the construction of a breakwater in the bay of Mobile as proposed and provided for by the above-stated acts of the General Assembly of this State. Your memorialists therefore respectfully pray that the honorable Congress of the United States will pass an act as speedily as may be, giving the assent and approval of the honorable Congress of the United States to the construction of said breakwater under and in pursuance of the said act of your memorialists and the amendments thereto, copies of which said act and amendments thereto are hereto attached as a part hereof. That the act which your honorable body is hereby prayed to pass may be in effect as follows, to wit:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the approval and assent of Congress are hereby given to the construction of a breakwater in the bay and harbor of Mobile, within the State of Alabama, upon the terms and conditions and in accordance with the provisions contained in an act of the General Assembly of said State, approved March 6, 1876, incorporating the Mobile Breakwater Company, and the amendments thereto approved on the 30th day of November, 1876.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

N. N. CLEMENTS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
R. W. COBB,
President of the Senate.

Approved 16th December, 1876.

GEO. S. HOUSTON,
Governor.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Charles Lewis Scott, a citizen of California, praying for the removal of his disabilities. Mr. Scott was formerly a member of the House of Representatives from the State of California when I served there, and from that State he went into the rebellion. He went into the rebellion induced by the fact that he was a native of the Southern States, and he went back during the war to his native State, which was partly in rebellion. I think that if anybody ever deserved to have his disabilities removed it is Mr. Scott. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEST presented the petition of Thomas A. Adams, president of the Board of Underwriters of New Orleans, and Cyrus Bussey, president of the chamber of commerce, and the presidents of the various commercial organizations of that city, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Red River from Jefferson, Texas, to its mouth; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress to present the annual report of the Librarian of Congress for the year of 1876. I move that it be printed and that five hundred extra copies thereof be printed for distribution by the Librarian, which is the usual course. The latter motion may be referred to the Committee on Printing, as I believe is necessary under the law. In presenting this report I wish to ask the Senators in the first place to read it—as a matter of course they will—but particularly to read that part of it which touches the necessity, the absolute and indispensable necessity, of providing further accommodation for the great store of books that now belongs to the Library, a great many thousand volumes of which, together with charts, maps, &c., of great value and needful for reference, have to be stacked up like cord-wood, to the hinderance of access to the other books and totally inaccessible themselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed, and the motion to print five hundred extra copies will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4168) to amend section 1 of the act of May 12, 1864, for a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to make one statement in reference to that bill, and ask the Senate to proceed to its present consideration. The bill makes no change of any grant of a single acre of public land. It leaves the grant precisely as it is. It expressly saves all rights of homesteaders and all other persons on the public lands. The railroad is being constructed, and it is all-important that this bill should pass, if passed at all, at an early day. I would state the circumstances. There is a road running from McGregor west to Sioux City. There is a road running from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line. It is provided in the original law that the road running from McGregor, known as the McGregor Western, shall strike the road running from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line in the county of O'Brien. When the road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line came to be constructed, it turned out that it struck the county of O'Brien in the northwest corner, thus taking off a part of that county in the northwest corner. The road from McGregor west, in order to strike that road in O'Brien county, will have to diverge from the line on the forty-third parallel to the northwest, going in a direction different from what was contemplated originally. If the road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line had been constructed through the county of O'Brien, through its center, it would have struck it upon the line which was contemplated, but it was found necessary to construct the road through Sioux City to the Minnesota State line so as to strike that county in the northwest part of the county line. The object of this bill is to authorize the McGregor Western to strike the road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line at a point outside of O'Brien County, and still west, instead of compelling it to diverge to the northwest to strike it in the county of O'Brien, as the law originally provided. That is simply the object of the bill, to authorize the road to strike it out of the county, when as was originally contemplated it should have been in the county; but by reason of the manner in which the line was constructed from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line they could not do it without going from ten to fifteen miles north.

Mr. WINDOM. And then they must come back.

Mr. WRIGHT. And then it would have to come back south in order to get on the forty-third parallel. Those are the exact facts and circumstances connected with this bill, and I should like to have the Senate take it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have had a fixed principle for a good while that no bill touching railroad land grants or any other grant of lands of the United States should go through by unanimous consent when it is presented——

Mr. WRIGHT. This bill has just been reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or just reported. That is what I understand. I have not the least doubt that the Senator from Iowa states it as it is, but standing by the principle which I believe to be a very indispensable one, so that hereafter it shall not be said of me that I have not put in my standing objection to one Senator and have to another, I must apply the same rule to my honorable friend from Iowa and ask that the bill go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the present consideration of the bill, it will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WRIGHT. Of course I have to yield; but I give notice now to my friend from Vermont that I shall ask the consideration of this bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall have not the least objection, probably.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 214) for the relief of James Rainey, Michael B. Brady, E. G. De L'Isle, and D. F. Boulin, of Louisiana, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1051) for the relief of Henson Wiseman, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 286) for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee have had before them the bill (S. No. 344) for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia, which is identical with the bill I have just reported back. The bill just reported back was introduced by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. NORWOOD,] and the bill I have now in my hand was introduced by his colleague, [Mr. GORDON,] and having reported favorably upon the bill I have just sent to the desk, I ask that this bill lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 453) to authorize the Vancouver Water Company to lay water-pipes through the Fort Vancouver military reservation;

A bill (S. No. 739) to amend section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to counterfeiting; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 29) extending the time for the making of a report by the commission created by the act of July 24, 1876.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 234) to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4276) to authorize the appointment of a sergeant in the Signal Corps as a second lieutenant in the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 4388) for the relief of the former occupants of the present military reservation at Point San José, in the city of San Francisco; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting permission to the officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy to wear the medal badge adopted by the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War on occasions of ceremony.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 526) to amend section 1036 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 678) for the relief of Ephraim P. Abbott;

A bill (S. No. 752) authorizing the recorder of the District of Columbia to appoint an assistant with certain powers;

A bill (H. R. No. 4120) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1878; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4350) to abolish the board of police commissioners of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, and to transfer its duties to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1126) regulating street paving and repairs in Washington and Georgetown, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not wish to be understood as committing myself in favor of the bill by the fact of its introduction. I may, however, be for it when I examine it.

Mr. WITHERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1127) for the relief of J. B. McCollough, Mrs. L. S. Fountain, administratrix of James Fountain, and John Houze, surviving partner of the firm of Houze & Hendricks; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1128) to extend for two years the act establishing the board of commissioners of claims and the acts relating thereto; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1129) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Julia Scroggin;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to transmit to the Senate the report of the commissioners to adjust the claims between citizens of the United States and Mexico under the conventions of 1868, 1871, and 1876.

Mr. SHERMAN. That might involve an immense amount of labor. Does that call for all the proceedings and all the papers?

Mr. INGALLS. The report of the commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that. I should suppose that would be communicated anyway.

Mr. CONKLING. The terms of this resolution are so broad that I venture to make a suggestion to the Senator from Kansas, to which I think he will see no objection. I suggest that he change the form of the resolution so as to address it to the President and put it in the ordinary form requesting the President if, in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit the document. My reason is this: although part of it may be printed, I am inclined, to suspect that there may be other things which would be embraced under the resolution that possibly the Senator does not advert to; but at all events, out of abundant caution, he will answer his purpose, I think, if he will address his resolution to the President in the customary form and whatever ought to be sent there will be no objection to sending, and if there be anything which, for any reason, ought not to be transmitted the President under the resolution ought to be allowed to discriminate. If that is agreeable to the Senator, as the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is not present, I make that suggestion.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York. Before the Senate yesterday a report was submitted in relation to the condition of affairs between the government of Mexico and the United States, asking certain action to be taken by Congress, and until we have a report that shows what has been done by the commissioners appointed under these various conventions it will be impossible for us to act. All that the resolution contemplates is simply the amount that has been awarded to the various persons who had claims against the Mexican government. If the Clerk will amend the resolution in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from New York, I shall be entirely satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The resolution will be so modified. The Secretary will report the resolution as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his own opinion incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate the report of the commissioners to adjust the claims between citizens of the United States and Mexico in the conventions of 1868, 1871, and 1876.

Mr. INGALLS. That is correct.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. MORTON. I offer the following resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the late presidential election in the States of Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and to the casting of the electoral votes in the State of Oregon, be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. BOGY. I was not aware that the report of the evidence had been yet made to the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. No, sir; but a part of the evidence is now in the printer's hands, and if there are to be more copies than the ordinary number it is important to have it known now before the type is distributed.

Mr. BOGY. It seems to me it is unusual. There has been no report made, and we ought to know what is the character of the report.

Mr. MORTON. The testimony has already been ordered to be printed. This is to fix the number of extra copies before the type shall be distributed, to save expense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXTENSION OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that Senate bill No. 1113 be taken up for action at the present time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill (S. No. 1113) to authorize the taking of certain parcels of land for the public use, at the intersection of Pennsylvania and Maryland avennes on the west front of the Capitol grounds, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. I will merely say a word or two in explanation of the bill. It is only a proposition to take a corner of the land on Pennsylvania avenue and Maryland avenue in order to give room for the completion of the two circles in accordance with the plans of Mr Olmstead that have already been approved by Congress.

Heretofore, in years long gone by, bills have been reported from the committee of the Senate, formerly by Senator Bright, of Indiana, and subsequently by Senator Foot, of Vermont, taking the entire squares mentioned in this bill; but under the new plan of the grounds we propose to get along with much less, taking only small corners of the squares, so as to give room and verge enough for the travel around the circles that are now in process of construction. The bill further contemplates taking a small corner off from the Botanic Garden on each side so as to complete the circles on the side next to the garden.

I will say that I have a plan here of just what we propose to take. It is a small amount of land on either corner. The appraisal of the cash value of the land on the southern side is $1,086, and the cash value as appraised of the land on the northern side is $14,000.

I believe that the committee of the Senate were unanimously in favor of this bill, and, so far as we know, the committee of the House are of the same opinion. I think there can be no objection whatever to the bill, either to the measure or the manner of it. The bill is in the precise form that has heretofore been used in obtaining the condemnation and purchase of land for public use.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, there are two parties for whom I feel moved to speak in regard to this matter. One is the American people, and the other the horses of America. I have observed this city for now about sixteen years. If during that time there has been one year when either the people or the horses could comfortably reach this Capitol, it is some year that I have forgotten. I think it is rather a remarkable circumstance that during so long it has been so difficult to approach this building in any comfortable mode. I do not say this to object to this bill. I believe I understand what it means, that a circular close now bounded by a curb-stone, which is to be the residence of a monument, has been projected in front of the Capitol grounds so as to occupy the beginning of Pennsylvania avenue, and in consequence of that a narrow throat is left through which all the vehicles must squeeze if they go at all; and that throat is occupied by trams, street-railroad tracks, among the most destructive contrivances to vehicles when they are driven across obliquely that can be found in any street. The Senator from Vermont by this bill proposes to cut off from the block on the north side of Pennsylvania avenue occupied by buildings such an area as will enable him to make a roadway farther to the east, or, more exactly speaking, to widen the roadway as it will be left, by extending it over a portion of this block now occupied by building, cutting off the corresponding tongue on the south side, which is the Botanic Garden. That is the plan, I think. I do not mean to object to it; but, without objecting to it, it is a relief to me to express the hope that some time to which men now living may hope to survive, there will be a means of driving with comfort and walking with comfort to this Capitol. And I hope these proceedings are such that if the property shall be condemned in order to give a right of way to the people to traverse that part of the town the arrangement will be such that the proceedings will take place expeditiously and that the thing will be done and done promptly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS GUILBEAU.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 974.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 974) for the relief of Francis Guilbeau, of San Antonio, Texas, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $2,600, in full payment of the claim of Guilbeau against the United States for the use of his buildings at San Antonio and Galveston, Texas, in the years 1865 and 1866.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If there is a report I should like to hear it. In the absence of a report, I should be glad to hear a statement of the case.

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a report which perhaps will explain the case as briefly as I can do it myself.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, on the 5th of July, 1876:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Francis Guilbeau, with accompanying papers, submit the following report:

This claim is for rent of certain buildings in San Antonio and Galveston, Texas, from June, 1865, to August, 1866, amounting to $3,701.67.

The occupation of the premises by the United States authorities for proper Army purposes, such as quartermaster's stores, officers' quarters, and the like, is well established, and this, too, under contracts to pay either an agreed sum or their reasonable rental value.

The loyalty of claimant is shown by competent and sufficient evidence.

The claim was presented to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and rejected by them because it originated in an insurrectionary district and they were prohibited under the law from considering it, and it was presented to the southern claims commission, but not considered by them, as there was no jurisdiction.

It would serve no useful purpose to set forth the evidence in detail, since, as we view the case, the only question is as to the amount of compensation to be allowed.

Looking at all the testimony, we conclude that $2,600 is a fair and proper allowance, and therefore report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States, which is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate if it is required, as I believe it is under the rule, that this bill shall be read by paragraphs covering particular subjects, not in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That for the purpose of correcting errors and supplying omissions in the act entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873," so as to make the same truly express such laws, the following amendments are hereby made therein:

Section 197 is amended by inserting, at the end of the section, the words "except supplies of stationery and fuel in the public offices, and books, pamphlets, and papers in the Library of Congress."

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is likely to be passed in the same way in which the Revised Statutes of the United States were passed and must necessarily be so. It is impossible for Senators or anybody to know what is the subject of important legislation in such a bill, and therefore we take the action of the committee practically as final. That was the way in regard to the revision of the laws. After the very careful examination of the laws, the final revision was passed in the Senate without any very full knowledge of the details. This bill is intended to correct the errors made in that revision. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, therefore, wherever this bill attempts to change the revision, makes an important change, or a disputed change, or makes a change that has been controverted, to point it out to us, so that we may know that the matter under discussion is controverted. Without that we should be in ignorance of the action that we are voting.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will say to the Senate and to the Senator from Ohio that this bill has had this amount of preparation: The Revised Statutes were taken by the House committee and by the Senate committee and all suggestions made to either of the committees were examined by the committees separately and an opinion formed as to whether there was an error in the revision as compared with the original law or not. When that work had been performed separately the two committees, by subcommittees, met and compared their work. Wherever there was any difference in the opinion of the committees that difference was carefully investigated, and wherever there was a doubt in the mind of any member of either committee as to whether a proposition to amend the Revised Statutes was in accordance with the original statutes that doubt has controlled.

I will call the attention of the Senate, if it should be the pleasure of the Senate to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, to every proposition which I consider important in the sense of affecting the rights of any parties or the interests of the country in any sensible degree. Most of these amendments, I may say, are verbal; some of them are for the purpose of correcting typographical errors, which corrections would not have been thought of by the committee except that it was convenient to do it in connection with more important corrections. There are one or two propositions in this bill which ought to receive the consideration of the Senate. When we come to those I will call the attention of Senators to them.

I should like to say in this connection, because the revision of the laws has been the subject of some criticism, that I was not a member of the commission nor of the committees that were charged with the revision of the laws; but I have had considerable opportunity to consider the manner in which that work was done, and I think I am justified in saying, and perhaps required to say, that in my opinion the work has been well done upon the whole, and that it is a great contribution to the legislation of the country and will for a series of years prove a great convenience in the administration of the laws.

Mr. WRIGHT. May I be allowed to make an inquiry of my friend the Senator from Massachusetts? Do I understand that the amendments that are proposed here are merely to make the Revised Statutes conform to the laws as they stood before, or is there in any instance any proposed new legislation?

Mr. BOUTWELL. There is really no new legislation in any case; and whenever in the mind of any member of the subcommittee either of the House or of the Senate there was a doubt as to whether a proposition to amend was justified by the original text of the statute, that doubt has controlled in every case. We have unanimously agreed to every proposition.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I understand so far as the committee are concerned they have attempted to avoid studiously everything like new legislation?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Everything.

Section 215 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"There shall be in the said Department an inferior officer, to be appointed by the said principal officer, to be employed therein as he shall deem proper, and to be called the chief clerk in the Department of War, and who, whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy, shall, during such vacancy, have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the said Department."

Section 225 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"In settling the accounts of the commanding officer of a company for clothing and other military supplies, the affidavit of any such officer may be received to show the loss of vouchers or company books, or any matter or circumstance tending to prove that any apparent deficiency was occasioned by unavoidable accident or lost in actual service, without any fault on his part, or that the whole or any part of such clothing and supplies had been properly and legally used and appropriated; and such affidavit may be considered as evidence to establish the facts set forth, with or without other evidence, as may seem to the Secretary of War just and proper under the circumstances of the case."

Section 252 is struck out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why section 252 is stricken out?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Section 252 is taken from the act of May 19, 1828, chapter 55, section 70, and the act of July 14, 1832, and was superseded by an act of August 30, 1842, which is found in chapter 270 of the statutes of that year, and therefore it was not law when it was inserted in the revision. The subsequent statute of course repealed the prior statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the act of 1842 in this revision?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir; the act of 1842. They incorporated into the Revised Statutes the original section and incorporated also the subsequent one, and they conflicted, and the original one of course ought not to stand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator refer me to the act of 1842 which is in the statutes?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Section 2902 is the statute, I think, which the Senator will find on page 565. The duty of the appraisers is there set forth in detail, and the original, section 252, is a general authority, which was the authority of the statutes of 1825 and 1832, and the whole power is contained in section 2902 more specifically.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 259 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "agriculture."

Section 317 is amended by adding thereto the following: "and shall perform all the acts, and exercise all the powers, relating to the receipts from customs and the accounts of collectors and the other officers of the customs or connected therewith, devolved by section 269 upon the First Comptroller in regard to other receipts and other accounts."

Section 335 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "agriculture."

Mr. WRIGHT. As I understand, the section in which it is proposed to strike out the word "agriculture" confines the matter of the collection of statistics by the Bureau of Statistics to domestic manufactures, and banks, and other items, in the several States and Territories. I had an impression that within the last two or three years we had devolved upon this bureau the duty of collecting agricultural statistics. I may be mistaken. I am sure the question was before the Senate, perhaps upon an appropriation bill or in some form; whether before the adoption of the revision or not I cannot say. I make the inquiry whether in this proposed legislation there is any provision to save any subsequent legislation that may change the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There is no such provision in the text of the bill. It can be incorporated. I think, however, the Senator from Iowa will find that when the Bureau of Agriculture was established the preparation of agricultural statistics was confided to it, and it has never been taken from the bureau.

Mr. WRIGHT. I remember that the Senator from Minnesota who is not now in his seat [Mr. WINDOM] had that matter in charge at one time, and there was a proposition, as I now recollect, to incorporate something of the kind into an appropriation bill, but I am not certain. I merely call attention to it at this time that it may be looked into further hereafter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not hear the explanation of the Senator making the report why the word "agriculture" is stricken out in section 259, and also in section 335. If the Bureau of Statistics are to furnish statistics of various matters, why not of agriculture as well as of other things?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am not considering any reasons why it should not. I am only stating that agricultural statistics placed under the charge of the Bureau of Statistics, established by resolution No. 10, of June 15, 1844, were otherwise provided for in the act of May 15, 1862, which authorizes the Department of Agriculture to be formed, and were not included in the act of July 28, 1866, establishing the present Bureau of Statistics. Therefore, the present Bureau of Statistics were not authorized to obtain statistics relating to agriculture, and as a matter of fact did not do it. The committee have not considered why the business of collecting statistics should be in one bureau rather than in another, because that was not their duty; but I believe the fact is that the Bureau of Statistics has had nothing under the law to do with collecting the statistics relating to agriculture.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Bureau of Statistics not collected agriculture statistics heretofore?

Mr. BOUTWELL. They never have been collected in the Bureau of Statistics. In the Department of Agriculture they are collected.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, I know that.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 354 is amended by inserting after the word "questions," in the second line, the word "of."

Section 637 is amended by inserting after the word "circuit," in the ninth line, the word "court."

Section 702 is amended by inserting after the word "cause," in the eleventh line, the word "when."

Section 838 is amended by inserting after the word "be," in the first line, the word "the."

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that as we go along with this bill it be read so slowly that we may glance at the sections of the Revised Statutes as they are referred to. I have the statutes here before me and I can hunt up the sections referred to readily. I should like to see exactly the amendments, so as to know whether to object to them or not.

Section 875 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"When letters rogatory are addressed from any court of a foreign country to any circuit court of the United States, a commissioner of such circuit court, designated by said court to make the examination of the witnesses mentioned in said letters, shall have power to compel the witness to appear and depose in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify in courts."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I may say that that was a section of the statute of 1855, the second section of chapter 140, which seems to have been omitted bodily, the whole of it. This is merely a reproduction of the second section of that statute.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1094 is amended by striking out the word "post" in the twenty-fifth line before the words "ordnance sergeant."

Section 1097 is amended by inserting in the second line, after the word "who," the word "shall."

Section 1102 is amended by striking out after the word "majors," in the second line, the words "one surgeon, one assistant surgeon;" and in the seventh line, after the word "the," insert the words "seventh, eighth."

Mr. COCKRELL. Why is that change made in section 1102, I should like to know?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That change is made to conform to the provisions of the third section of the act of 1866, chapter 299, in volume 14 of the statutes, page 332. The third section provided for the addition of four regiments of cavalry and provided for their organization, and by accident "one surgeon and one assistant surgeon" were inserted where they should not have been and the seventh and eighth, being two of the regiments named in the section, were omitted from the statute.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1110 is amended by striking out the word "post" before the words "ordnance sergeants" in the first line.

Section 1118 is amended by striking out the words "any criminal offense," in the third line, and inserting the words "a felony."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask why it is that the words "any criminal offense" are stricken out there and "a felony," which would be a high crime alone, inserted. The statute reads:

No minor under the age of sixteen years, no insane or intoxicated person, no deserter from the military service of the United States, and no person who has been convicted of any criminal offense, shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service.

The amendment is to strike out "any criminal offense" and insert "a felony."

Mr. BOUTWELL. By a section of the statute of 1833 it was provided that no person who had been convicted of any criminal offense should be enlisted in the Army of the United States, and by the statute of 1863, March 3, chapter 75, volume 12 of the statutes, it was provided—

That no person who has been convicted of any felony shall be enrolled or permitted to serve in said forces.

That bill relating to the mustering and organizing of the forces of the United States; and it is held at the Department, and the committee were of opinion, that the recent statute modified the latter statute so that it made it specific that only those who had been convicted of felonies should be exempt.

Mr. COCKRELL. The statute of 1863 modified the previous statute, the Senator says.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir. The statute of 1833 provided that no person who had been guilty of any criminal offense, which is rather an indefinite term, should be enlisted, but the statute of 1863 provided for excluding those who had been guilty of felony, which is more specific.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did the statute of 1865 affect that question at all?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The statute of 1863, perhaps the Senator refers to. There is no statute of 1865, that I am aware of, which changes this.

Section 1126 is amended by inserting a comma after the word "post" in the first line.

Section 1131 is amended by inserting after the word "Army," in the first line, the words "provided no promotion shall be made until the number of inspectors-general is reduced to four."

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me that that will not do. It will make the law read:

There shall be five inspectors-general of the Army: Provided, No promotion shall be made until the number of inspectors-general is reduced to four.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The act of June 8, 1872, authorizing the appointment of a particular person, a Mr. Davis, provided that no promotion should be made until the number of inspectors-general was reduced to four; and the Department say further that the act of July 28, 1866, establishing the Inspector-General's Department provides for four inspectors, three assistants with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and two with the rank of major.

There seems to have been a conflict. The law of March 3, 1869, provided for new appointments or promotions in that Department, but did not abolish any of the officers. We have left it exactly where the law left it. There is an inconsistency, no doubt, but they treat it in the Department, I understand, as limiting the number of inspectors-general to four, and that there shall be no promotions to that rank until the number is reduced to four. Then when there is a vacancy there will be a promotion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Could there not be a better amendment so as to make it more explicit?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I can only say that if we get into that field we shall find great difficulty. There was an incongruity in the statutes, but nevertheless the Department interprets the statutes so as to limit the number of inspectors-general to four. As matter of fact both provisions of law stand that the number shall not exceed five, and that there shall be no promotion until the number is reduced to four, and the Department construe it as limiting the number to four.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the intention was finally to bring the number of inspectors-general down to four, and that no promotion should be made until they were reduced down to that number; and I suppose that that is the intention of the law, but it does not very clearly express it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I only say that the committee have followed the statutes. We felt bound to do that and to report the exact truth.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the original statute do the words "provided no promotion shall be made until the number of inspectors-general is reduced to four" come after the word "Army" or at the end of that section?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That was by the act of 1872. The act providing that there should be five inspectors-general was of one date, 1866, I think, and then by the act of 1872, by which authority was given to appoint Mr. Davis, it was provided that no promotion should be made until the number of inspectors-general was reduced to four, and therefore there was this incongruity. It was a way of reducing the number of inspectors-general in the Army. There is practically no difficulty. There is an incongruity in the language, but the Department construe it as authorizing the appoiatment of four and no more; and that evidently is the meaning.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me it would be more explicit if the clause beginning with "provided" came in at the end of the section. As it is now, "there shall be five inspectors-general of the Army," and there the proviso comes in, and then these other words will follow, "with the rank of colonel of cavalry." If you go on and let the whole section be as it is and then put the proviso at the end of it, it seems to me it would be in better order, unless it is in conflict with the original act.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senate desire to correct the incongruity by new legislation, we have only to strike out the word "five" in the first line, I suppose, and insert "four;" but that would be new legislation, and the committee did not feel authorized to make any such recommendation. I presume that would bring the statute just where it is by construction now; but I should not be willing to move that amendment. I think we have reported the law as it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was what I asked a moment ago, if the proviso came after the word "Army" in the statutes before they were revised as they are now or was it at the end of the section?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know that I understand the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment now proposed is to insert after the word "Army" the words "provided no promotion shall be made until the number of inspectors-general is reduced to four." Did that proviso come in the original act after the word "Army" or at the end of the section?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It was in a different section, a different statute. The statute of 1866 provided for five inspectors-general of the army. Then in 1872, when Congress was authorizing the appointment of a certain person to office, a proviso was inserted that no promotion should be made until the number of inspectors-general was reduced to four; and undoubtedly the intention was to reduce the number to four, to change the law of 1866.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then there would be no impropriety in changing this amendment and having the proviso come in at the end of that section. I think the Senator will see at once that it will make the section read better and be more explicit; and as we are simply combining the two laws there can be no objection to making that change.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that, if the amendment were introduced where he proposes it, it would limit promotions in other branches of the service; the qualification would extend to all the ranks that are named in the section. I think we had better let it stand as it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, there would be no change, because the section only refers to inspectors-general and assistant inspectors-general, and this proviso would be confined exclusively to inspectors-general and would not affect anything but them.

Mr. WRIGHT. My friend from Massachusetts will allow me to make one suggestion. As I understand it, the law is proposed to be incorporated here so as to declare the existing statutes; that is, the law contemplated the intention of this bill——

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. That law was passed long after the section proposed to be amended here, and is regarded as modifying it. Now, I suggest to him that there can be no objection, as this is a House bill——

Mr. BOUTWELL. We shall have to amend it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can see that there would be an objection to the suggestion I was about to make. If there was no occasion to amend the bill or if amending it would necessarily be fatal my suggestion is that the proviso follow the word "cavalry." I think that would be better law language and would better express the meaning of the statute.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will not object to that. The bill will have to go back to the House.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think that would make it very much clearer.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I presume that will answer the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that meets the point I suggested.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I suggest that the amendment be after the word "cavalry," in the second line. I move to amend this bill by striking out "army," in the first line, and inserting "cavalry," in the second line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggest to the chairman of the committee whether the name "inspectors-general" conveys the idea. I do not think it does. The office is the office of inspector-general. It is used there as if the office were that of general inspector and as if we had four or five general inspectors. I do not think that is the idea. Take the case of a major-general. We have four major-generals; not four majors-general. The latter expression would make "major" the principal word and "general" the qualifying word. I believe the name is inspector-general and it should be "five inspector-generals," not "five inspectors-general," because it is a general assigned to the duty of inspector. "General" is the principal word or noun; "inspector" is the qualifying word. The language used is objectionable, I think.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will say in reply to the Senator from Texas that the Revised Statutes use the compound word in the manner in which it is used in the amendment, and the Revised Statutes follow the statutes, I think, from the beginning of the Government. I do not think it wise for us to make any change.

Mr. MAXEY. I will say to the Senator that I know there is very considerable criticism as to which is the proper word among military men, and I made the suggestion of what I believe the correct word to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will be continued.

The Chief Clerk read the next clause of the bill, as follows:

Section 1132 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"All appointments in the Quartermaster's Department shall be made from the Army. During the absence of the Quartermaster-General or the chief of any military bureau of the War Department, the President is authorized to empower some officer of the department or corps whose chief is absent to take charge thereof, and to perform the duties of Quartermaster-General or chief of the department or corps, as the case may be, during such absence."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask where that amendment is found that is proposed to be inserted? What was the date of its adoption?

Mr. BOUTWELL. This is an omission from a statute of 1855, chapter 356, found on page 117 of volume 5. It was omitted accidentally from the revision; and the amendment we propose is a precise copy of the fifth section of that statute; and I may say that all these amendments, after the committee had examined them, were submitted to Judge James, who was one of the commissioners that revised the statutes, and they all received his approbation as being required.

Section 1136 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"It shall be the duty of all officers of the United States having any of the title papers (property purchased, or about to be purchased, for erection of public buildings) in their possession, to furnish them forthwith to the Attorney-General. No public money shall be expended until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had."

Mr. BOUTWELL. This I may say is a case of omission from a joint resolution of 1841 found in volume 5 of the statutes, page 468. The first, second, and third sections of that joint resolution were omitted from the body of the Revised Statutes.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1137 is amended by inserting in the third line, after the word "service," the following: "who shall be entitled to receive $40 per month and three rations per day, and forage for one horse."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill in what act that language is found.

Mr. BOUTWELL. This is from a statute of 1838, chapter 162, also in volume 5 of the statutes. Section 10 of that act provides—

That the Quartermaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized, from time to time, to employ as many forage-masters and wagon-masters as he may deem necessary for the service, not exceeding twenty in the whole, who shall be entitled to receive each $40 per month and three rations per day, and forage for one horse.

That was omitted.

Mr. MORRILL. The word "each" seems to be left out here.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am reminded of what is true that the word "each" should be inserted in this proposed amendment before "forty;" so as to read:

Who shall be entitled to receive each $40 per month.

The original statute contains the word "each." I move that amendment in line 114 of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1139 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"And he shall account to the Secretary of War at least once in three months for all property and money that may pass through his hands or the hands of his subordinate officers."

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is omitted from a statute of 1812, chapter 46, volume 2, of the statutes.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1162 is amended by striking out all after the word "many," in the first line, and inserting the following: "sergeants of ordnance, corporals of ordnance, and first and second class privates of ordnance, as the Secretary of War may direct."

Mr. COCKRELL. That strikes out the law of that section and just inserts those few words in lieu?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That amendment is required by an act of 1862, chapter 133. The attention of the committee was called to it by the War Department, and they state that the amendment should be made as it has been made by the committee. The statute of 1862 was in these words:

That the enlisted men of the Ordnance Department now designated as master-workmen shall hereafter be designated and mustered as sergeants; those now designated as armorers, carriage-makers, and blacksmiths shall be designated and mustered as corporals; those now designated as artificers shall be designated and mustered as privates of the first class; and those now designated as laborers shall be designated and mustered as privates of the second class: Provided, That the pay, rations, and clothing now authorized by law to the respective grades of enlisted ordnance men shall not be changed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1163 is amended by striking out in the third line the words "privates of first class," and inserting the words "ordnance enlisted men" in lieu thereof.

Section 1174 is amended by inserting after the word "line," in the second line, the words "under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Section 1191 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"But the Quartermaster-General shall not be liable for any money or property that may come into the hands of the subordinate officers in his department."

Mr. COCKRELL. Under what act was that?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Under an act of 1812, chapter 92, the fourth section, found in the second volume of the general statutes, page 743:

That the Quartermaster-General, the deputy quartermasters, and the assistant deputy quartermasters shall, before they or either of them enter upon the duties of their appointment respectively, enter into bond with sufficient security, to be approved of by the Secretary of War, conditioned for the faithful expenditure of all public moneys, and accounting for all public property, which may come to their hands, respectively; and the Quartermaster-General shall not be liable for any money or property that may come into the hands of the subordinate officers of his department.

That is the original statute.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1207 is amended by inserting after the word "engineers," in the first line, the words "or Ordnance Corps."

Mr. COCKRELL. Under what act is that?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is from the statute of 1853, volume 10, page 219:

That whenever any lieutenant of the Corps of Engineers, Corps of Topographical Engineers, or Ordnance Corps, shall have served fourteen years continuous service as lieutenant, he shall be promoted to the rank of captain, &c.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why do you leave out the Topographical Engineers in the amendment? The section now reads:

"SEC. 1207. When any lieutenant of the Corps of Engineers has served fourteen years continuous service as lieutenant, he shall be promoted to the rank of captain," &c.

It is proposed to add "or Ordnance Corps;" so as to read:

When any lieutenant of the Corps of Engineers or Ordnance Corps.

You seem to have left out the Topographical Engineers, a class provided for in the act of 1853.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am unable to state why the provision of the original statute in regard to the Corps of Topographical Engineers is omitted; but, inasmuch as the attention of the committee was called to this subject by the Department and nothing was said about that corps, I presume some other provision has been made or else they are included under the general head "Corps of Engineers." I cannot answer, however, as to that. I only know that no question has been made before the committee in regard to that branch of the service. I I am not familiar enough with the military statutes to give a reason for the omission, but I presume they are provided for.

Section 1220 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"It shall be lawful for the commanding officer of each regiment, whenever it may be necessary, to cause the coats, vests, and overalls or breeches which may from time to time be issued to and for his regiment to be altered and new-made, so as better to fit them to the persons respectively for whose use they shall be delivered; and, for defraying the expense of such alterations, to cause to be deducted and applied out of the pay of such persons a sum or sums not exceeding twenty-five cents for each coat, eight cents for each vest and for each pair of overalls or breeches."

Mr. WHYTE. Is it necessary to spread upon the statutes of the United States a tailor's bill? Cannot the latter clause of this section be expressed by the words "the cost of such alteration to be deducted out of the pay of the soldier?" It strikes me it would look better on the Revised Statutes than to incorporate this tailor's bill. I suggest that the last clause be stricken out and the words "the cost of the alteration to be deducted from the pay of the soldier" be inserted in lieu thereof. I move that amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know but that that section will offend the taste of future generations; but it has been on the statute-book until the Revised Statutes, and since 1799. It was the twenty-third section of the act of that year, organizing the militia forces of the country; and at any rate the committee did not feel justified on a mere matter of taste, about which indeed they were not competent to judge when the subject-matter was considered, in making any alteration.

I will say, in reply to the suggestion made in regard to the last amendment by the Senator from Missouri, that I am informed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] that the Corps of Topographical Engineers has been consolidated with the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I supposed; but I did not have time to look.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope there will be no objection to this amendment. I trust the Senator from Maryland will not persist in his motion.

Mr. WHYTE. I withdraw the amendment. It is an old patch.

Section 1221 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Said returns and vouchers, after due examination by the Quartermaster-General, shall be transmitted for settlement to the proper accounting officer of the Treasury Department."

Mr. BOUTWELL. If it is desirable to have any explanation, that is an omission of what was contained in a statute of 1826, section 75.

Mr. COCKRELL. It only indicates the course that is already pursued now?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.

Section 1224 is amended by striking out the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"No officer of the Army shall be employed on civil works or internal improvements, or be allowed to engage in the service of any incorporated company, or be employed as acting paymaster or disbursing agent of the Indian Department, if such extra employment requires that he shall be separated from his company, regiment, or corps, or if it shall otherwise interfere with the performance of the military duties proper."

Mr. COCKRELL. That, it seems to me, is simply a change of the language of the present section 1224, I suppose, to make it conform to the original.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is all. The substance is the same. It is a little faulty in the Revised Statutes in grammar.

Section 1259 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That they receive from the Government only the pay and emoluments allowed by law to retired officers."

Mr. BOUTWELL. That relates to the Soldiers' Home?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is correct.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1260 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"But while so serving, such officer shall be allowed no additional compensation."

Section 1270 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, however, That when forage in kind cannot be furnished by the proper departments, then, and in all such cases, officers entitled to forage may commute the same according to existing regulations: Provided further, That officers of the Army and of volunteers assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted shall, during the time they are employed on such duty, receive the pay, emoluments, and allowances of cavalry officers of the same grade respectively."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator reporting the bill to make an explanation of how such an important section as that came to be omitted, and in what act that is found.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is found in an act of 1862, chapter 200. The first section of it reads:

That officers of the Army entitled to forage for horses shall not be allowed to commute it, but may draw forage in kind for each horse actually kept by them when and at the place where they are on duty, not exceeding the number authorized by law: Provided, however, That when forage in kind cannot be furnished by the proper Department, then, and in all such cases, officers entitled to forage may commute the same according to existing regulations: And provided further, That officers of the Army and of volunteers assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted, shall, during the time they are employed on such duty, receive the pay, emoluments, and allowances of cavalry officers of the same grade respectively.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask if that law was not changed by enactments of Congress prior to the revision of 1873?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think not, and I am confirmed in that by the circumstance that the War Department called the attention of the committee to it as late as last winter, and that we examined the subject and referred it also to Judge James. No intimation has been made to the committee of any such alteration of the statutes. I have never supposed it had been altered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to reserve that section, so that if we should find any such legislation as I have indicated we may look into it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; that is right.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1280 is amended by striking out in the third line the word "conditions" and inserting the word "additions," and by adding at the end of the section the following: "artificer of artillery and infantry, $15; wagoner of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, $14. The principal assistant in the Ordnance Bureau shall receive a compensation, including pay and emoluments, not exceeding that of a major of ordnance."

Mr. COCKRELL. That is simply to make the present statute conform to the law.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir; that is so. There is no change of the law.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1289 is amended by striking out in the first line, after the word "is," the word "honorably," and insert after the word "service" the words "except by way of punishment for an offense."

Section 1290 is amended by striking out in the first line, after the word "is," the word "honorably," and insert after the word "service" the words "except by way of punishment for an offense."

Section 1327 is amended by striking out in the marginal reference the words "8 Aug., 1848," and inserting the words "8 Aug., 1846."

Section 1328 is amended by striking out in the marginal reference the words "8 Aug., 1848," and inserting the words "8 Aug., 1846."

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the necessity of this proposed amendment in regard to the marginal references. The marginal reference is no part of the statute. It is a mere notation by the codifiers or revisers, as I suppose. For us to modify and correct every reference they have made, it seems to me, is no part of our duty, and I question whether it is legislation in fact. This assumes that the marginal references are a part of our legislation.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am inclined to think the Senator from Iowa is right about that. We had better omit those clauses which relate to marginal references, the references to sections 1327, 1328, and 1329. I move to strike out those—from line 210 to line 218 of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1337 is amended by striking out in the second line, after the word "tactics," the words "and the instructor of practical military engineering."

Section 1342 is amended by striking out in the fourth line of Article of War 26, after the word "such," the word "corporal," and in the third line of Article of War 38, after the word "such," the word "corporal."

Section 1375 is amended by adding the words "who shall receive the highest shore pay of his grade;" and said section 1375 shall have the same force and effect as though enacted as herein amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. May I ask the Senator reporting the bill if the clause last read would not be additional legislation declaring what is the effect of it and what will be the operation of that mere declaration? If these officers have been receiving pay according to the statute as it has been interpreted since its adoption, will not this give them different pay?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes; the interrogatory that the Senator put must be answered according to the suggestion which the interrogatory contains undoubtedly. The statute of 1862, chapter 183, section 18, contains the provision which is the basis of this amendment. That provides—

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to assign clerks and laborers attached to one bureau to duty in another, and also to detail a surgeon or assistant surgeon or passed-assistant surgeon as assistant to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, who shall receive the highest shore-pay of his grade.

The phrase "who shall receive the highest shore-pay of his grade" was omitted, and under that the pay which was authorized by this statute has been refused to these officers.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the date of that statute?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Eighteen hundred and sixty-two; volume 12 of the statutes, page 587. It is true that in this particular the amendment does propose legislation; that is, it proposes to treat the officers precisely as though this error had not occurred, and it is for the Senate to say whether it ought to be done or whether they should come with a claim afterward. That is all there is about it. I do not insist upon the amendment, although it passed the House in that way.

Mr. WRIGHT. It doubtless may occur that there are other instances where perhaps there ought to be like legislation or at least like provision. I do not know that there are any others; but I should like to inquire of the Senator whether upon examination into the facts of the case he esteems that this is a case where justice demands there should be such force given to the statute which is now proposed to be amended?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no doubt about that. We did the same thing last winter in amending the statute in regard to payments on account of lands. I do not recollect the precise state of the case, but such payments it was thought should have the same effect as though there had been no error in the law. I really think this is the simple and perfectly just way for the disposition of this subject.

Section 1480 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"The grades established in the six preceding sections for the staff corps of the Navy shall be filled by appointment from the highest members in each corps, according to seniority; and new commissions shall be issued to the officers so appointed, in which the titles and grades established in said sections shall be inserted; and no existing commission shall be vacated in the said several staff corps, except by the issue of the new commissions required by the provisions of this section; and no officer shall be reduced in rank or lose seniority in his own corps by any change which may be required under the provisions of the said six preceding sections: Provided, That the issuing of a new appointment and commission to any officer of the Pay Corps under the provisions of this section shall not affect or annul any existing bond, but the same shall remain in force, and apply to such new appointment and commission."

Mr. COCKRELL. That seems to be a very grave omission of a very important part of the law. In what act is this found?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The original statute is chapter 117 of the statutes of 1871, volume 16, page 537. I have no means of knowing how it happened that the omission was made; but it undoubtedly is an omission. I could read, if it would be any satisfaction, the original statute; but we have followed it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the original act read.

Mr. BOUTWELL—

That the foregoing grades—

We have altered it so far as to say "the grades established in the six preceding sections," which correspond to "the foregoing grades."

Mr. COCKRELL. Please read those "foregoing grades," so that we can compare them with "the six preceding sections" found in the statutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Engineer Corps, Pay Corps, Marine Corps, Naval Academy, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Bureau of Provisions and Clothing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then these six sections in the Revised Statutes include chaplains and naval constructors, and this amendment is proposed to be made applicable to them when it does not seem there to have been applicable to them before?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It was applicable to a larger number than it is here, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the point I am making, that in the old statute it was not applicable to as many as it will be applicable to in the Revised Statutes when this addition is adopted.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is the opposite, I think. The classes are classified in this statute, beginning with, first, Bureau of Yards and Docks, Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, Bureau of Navigation, Bureau of Ordnance, Bureau of Construction and Repair, Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Naval Academy, Marine Corps, Pay Corps, and Engineer Corps. The number, as I understand, has been reduced to which this provision applies by some subsequent legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. That did not apply to chaplains there, did it?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; there is nothing about chaplains that I observe in this statute.

Mr. COCKRELL. Putting it in the position in which it is put here makes it apply to chaplains as well as the other corps. I do not know that it is usual—I am not advised as to that—to enforce the regulation in the appointment of chaplains to the Navy. I do not know whether it is or not, and if not we can change it by making an amendment to this proposed addition to the section. Probably that would be better and would only conform the law correctly to what it was, unless chaplains were originally embraced in the act.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am unable to say. The act is lengthy, covers a great many pages, and all I can say is that we were advised by the Department and by Judge James, and it was the result of our own examination at the time which I do not recall with accuracy, that the grades established in "the six preceding sections" made the law conform to the statute as it was in 1871, as it had been amended by some legislation preceding the revision of the laws; and that this would bring the statute into harmony with the law as it was previous to the revision.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make no point except simply in regard to the chaplains, and I do not know whether this would change the law or not.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Let the clause be reserved, and if there is any question about it we can make it right hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be reserved.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

Section 1602 is amended by striking out, in the second line, after the word "major" the word "the" and inserting the word "each."

Section 2034 is amended by inserting, in the last line, after the word "secretary" the word "of."

Section 2055 is amended by adding thereto the words "except as herein otherwise provided for."

Section 2073 is amended by inserting, in the second line, after the word "such" the word "agents," and by striking out, in the last line, the word "immigration" and inserting therefor the word "emigration."

Mr. COCKRELL. That would make it read "such subinterpreters and mechanics." Is it the intention, I ask the Senator reporting the bill, that the section should read:

The Secretary of the Interior shall, under the direction of the President, cause to be discontinued the services of such subinterpreters and mechanics, &c.?

Mr. BOUTWELL. "Subagents." It is an omission in some way. It should be "subagents."

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose the word "agents" was intended to be stricken out.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then insert before the word "agents" the word "subagents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as it is proposed to change the section.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "such" it is proposed to insert the word "agent;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior shall, under the direction of the President, cause to be discontinued the services of such agents, subagents, interpreters, and mechanics, &c.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is all right; "such agents, subagents," &c.

Mr. COCKRELL. O, yes.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

Section 2139 is amended by striking out, in lines 2 and 3, the words "except an Indian in the Indian country."

Section 2403 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "seven" and inserting the word "one."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask that the Senate disagree to the last paragraph. We passed a separate bill at the last session, after this bill passed the House, making provision for what is contemplated in this clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Lines 268, 269, and 270 will be stricken out if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. They have already been covered by another bill, I understand?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, by a special act.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

Section 2450 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserting the words "Secretary of the Interior."

Section 2451 is amended by striking out, in the first and second lines, the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserting the words "Secretary of the Interior."

Section 2504 is amended by striking out, in schedule M, after the word "sulphur," the word "flour" and inserting the word "flowers."

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see where these words to be stricken out come in.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Under the head of "sulphur." It is merely a verbal correction.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the effect of the change?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is merely a change in the spelling of the word so as to express the truth. There is no such article of commerce as "flour of sulphur."

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2505 is amended by striking out, after the words "skins, dried, salted, or pickled," the words "10 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator will find on page 492 of the Revised Statutes that these articles were in the free list, but accidentally there has been inserted after the enumeration of the articles the words "10 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. COCKRELL. Then when those words are stricken out the articles will come in free?

Mr. BOUTWELL. There will be no question about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am in favor of that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. They were in the free list by the statutes. That item is on page 492.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; I have it all right.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2508 is amended by inserting, in the fifth line, between the words "of" and "United States," the word "the."

Section 2514 is amended by inserting, in the last line, between the words "of" and "Treasury," the word "the."

Section 2517 is amended by striking out, in the seventh paragraph, the word "Ilesborough" and inserting the word "Isleborough;" by striking out, in the tenth paragraph, the word "Brunswick;" by striking out, in the thirteenth paragraph, the words "and Arundel as they were bounded on the 10th of May, 1800," and inserting therefor the words "Kennebunk and Kennebunkport;" and by striking out the words "Cape Porpoise" and by inserting therefor the word "Kennebunkport."

Section 2518 is amended by inserting, in the first line of the sixth subdivision, after the word "collector," the words "who shall reside at Bangor."

Section 2519 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the words "preceding section" and inserting therefor the words "section 2517;" also, in the fourth line, by striking out the words "Comptroller of the Treasury" and inserting the words "Commissioner of Customs."

Section 2527 is amended by striking out, in the seventh line of the eleventh subdivision, the word "Wattupper" and inserting the word "Watuppa."

Section 2530 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "appraiser" and inserting therefor the word "appraisers."

Section 2536 is amended by adding to the second subdivision the words "a surveyor at each of the ports of Cold Spring, on the north side of Long Island, and Port Jefferson, who shall reside at their respective ports."

Section 2545 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the word "appraiser" and inserting therefor the word "appraisers."

Section 2555 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line of the second subdivision, the word "Newburn" and inserting the word "Newberne," and by striking out, in the third line of the fourth subdivision, the word "Carlolina" and inserting the word "Carolina."

Section 2578 is amended by striking out, in the second line of the third subdivision, the word "Encinao" and inserting the word "Encinal."

Section 2579 is amended by striking out, in the second line of the second subdivision, after the word "Matagorda," the word "and," and inserting in the third line, after the word "Lavaca," the word "and."

Section 2582 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line of the first subdivision, the word "San Pedro" and inserting therefor the word "Wilmington."

Section 2585 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "either," and in the third line the words "or the port of Wilmington."

Section 2587 is amended by striking out, in the second line in the fourth subdivision, the letter "h" in the word "Townshend."

Section 2588 is amended by striking out, in the first line, the last letter "s" in the word "districts."

Section 2619 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, all after the word "law" and inserting the following:

"And all bonds to be hereafter given shall be of the form following, to wit: Know all men by these presents that we —— are held and firmly bound unto the United States of America in the full and just sum of —— dollars, money of the United States; to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, jointly and severally, our joint and several heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents; sealed with our seals, and dated this —— day of ——, 18—.

"The condition of the foregoing obligation is such, that whereas the President of the United States hath, pursuant to law, appointed the said —— to the office of —— in the State of ——,

"Now, therefore, if the said —— has truly and faithfully executed and discharged, and shall continue truly and faithfully to execute and discharge, all the duties of the said office, according to law, then the above obligation to be void and of none effect; otherwise it shall abide and remain in full force and virtue.

"Sealed and delivered in the presence of ——.

"And the amount of penalty shall be fixed by the President, as provided in section 3639."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the amendment to section 2619. That seems to be a very important addition and a striking out of quite a large portion.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The reason of that is, the statute of 1799 specified a form of bond which should be given in all these cases. That form has been literally complied with from that time probably until the present. The Revised Statutes, instead of repeating the form of that bond said, "according to law," or something of that nature.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, "the duties thereof, according to law, under penalty as follows." You propose to strike out all after the word "law," which would strike out some fourteen sections describing the amount of the bond, for you give the form of the bond and then put in:

And the amount of penalty shall be fixed by the President, as provided in section 3639.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The meaning of "striking out in the fourth line all after the word 'law'" is that all we strike out is the rest of that line.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it does not strike out those other provisions of that section?

Mr. BOUTWELL. O, no; it only strikes out the words in the fourth line after the word "law," and then inserts the form of the bond, because questions might arise as to the form if it should be changed.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all correct. The only question was whether the effect was to strike out these other fourteen provisions fixing the amount of the bond and leaving the whole thing in the discretion of the President.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think we had better enumerate the words. Let it read "striking out in the fourth line the words 'under penalty as follows' and inserting"——

Mr. COCKRELL. "In lieu thereof."

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, "inserting in lieu thereof."

Mr. COCKRELL. That will be better, because then it will be explicit. As it is, this might strike out those fourteen separate provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as proposed to be modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2619 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, after the word "law" the words "under penalty as follows" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "And all bonds to be hereafter given," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2659 is amended by striking out, in the last line, the word "or" and adding at the end the words "and marine-hospital dues."

Section 2660 is amended by inserting, in the eighth line, after the words "Fall River" the word "Plymouth," and, in the eleventh line, after the words "Perth Amboy" the words "Gloucester" and "Nantucket."

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose that is simply correcting an omission, inserting the words in the place where they formerly belonged, and does not increase the salary of the officers at these places.

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; they were omitted entirely.

Mr. COCKRELL. And they are replaced in the same place where they were before?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Precisely. There is no difference in the emoluments.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2775 is amended by inserting, in the eighth line, after the word "respectively" the words "on account of duties on imports, tonnage, and marine-hospital dues."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like an explanation of why the word "respectively" does not comprehend the same thing. The section says:

The collectors for the districts of Chicago, &c., shall receive a salary of $1,000 a year each, and, in addition thereto, the fees allowed by law, and a commission of 3 per cent. on all moneys collected and accounted for by them respectively.

Why are the words "on account of duties on imports, tonnage, and marine-hospital dues" inserted? Does that increase the amount of money upon which they shall receive commissions, or does it decrease it, or does it leave it just the way it is?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It diminishes the amount of fees that they may receive. As it now reads, collectors would be entitled to commissions which had not been allowed them by any law existing at the date of the revision; that is, they would be allowed commissions upon all moneys collected; but the law provided that they should be allowed commissions only upon fees received on certain accounts, which were specified, on account of duties on imports, and tonnage, and marine-hospital dues.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then their fees would be restricted to these three sources of revenue?

Mr. BOUTWELL. To three, while as the Revised Statutes now stand the section allows them to collect fees for moneys received which before they were obliged to take without fees.

Section 2691 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"No collector, surveyor, or naval officer shall ever receive more than $4,500 annually, exclusive of his compensation as collector, surveyor, or naval officer, and the fines and forfeitures allowed by law, for any services he may perform for the United States in any office or capacity, except as provided in sections 3654 and 3657."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like an explanation of that. What is the date of the statute from which it is taken?

Mr. BOUTWELL. This section, which it is proposed to add to section 2691, is a copy of section 18, chapter 107, of the act of May 7, 1822, made subject, however, to exceptions contained in the statute of March 3, 1869, chapter 133, and the act of June 12, 1858, chapter 154, section 17. It is merely placing these officers where they were under those several statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. This section 3654 allows to collectors certain fees as therein prescribed, and twenty-six hundred and——

Mr. BOUTWELL. Thirty-six hundred and fifty-seven is the other.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that correct? Are they 3654 and 3657, or ought they to be 2654 and 2657? I think that is a misprint.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is. It should read "2654 and 2657." That is an error. "Thirty" should be stricken out and "twenty" inserted in each case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then section 2657 allows certain salaries and fees to the surveyors and inspectors, and then section 2691, to which this is proposed to be added, provides that:

Whenever the emoluments of any other collector shall exceed $3,000, or the emoluments of any other naval officer shall exceed $2,500, or the emoluments of any other surveyor shall exceed $2,000 in any one year after deducting therefrom the necessary expenses incident to his office in the same year, the excess shall in every such case be paid into the Treasury for the use of the United States. But the provisions of this and the preceding section shall not extend to fines, penalties, or forfeitures, or the distribution thereof.

Now it is proposed to add:

No collector, surveyor, or naval officer shall receive more than $400 annually, exclusive of his compensation as collector, surveyor, or naval officer, and the fines and forfeitures allowed by law, for any services he may perform for the United States in any office or capacity, except as provided in sections 2654 and 2657.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It means that the various commissions, such as those we were just considering, for collecting marine-hospital dues, tonnage fees, &c., shall never amount to more than $400, exclusive of the salary, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What effect would the insertion of this provision now in the bill have upon the salaries? What are those $400 more for? Does that increase the salary allowed by sections 2654 and 2657 $400?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It does not affect the salaries at all, as I understand it. It retains the same salary, but the officer cannot take more than $400 for what would be called extra service and commissions, which applies, as the Senator will observe by reading the statute explicitly, to the small offices. The large offices took none of these fees, such offices as New York or Boston, but only some smaller offices where the salary is one, two, or three hundred dollars. However, as I understand it, I am sure this provision is merely a reproduction of the statutes of 1822, of 1858, and of 1869 in regard to this subject. I have not dealt with the effect upon the emoluments of the officers, but only attempted to ascertain what the law required us to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true, but may there not have been a conflict between laws since 1822 which would have changed this law as now copied from that act?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; I do not understand it to be so. We have considered all the statutes as I have referred to them, the statute of 1822, the statute of 1858, and the statute of 1869, with reference to these provisions, and this is the result; and it conforms to the usage of the Department previous to the passage of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. What has been their usage since?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know what has been the usage since that time. The Department write that the section proposed, now under consideration, is contained in these various statutes which I have enumerated and that it conforms to the action of the Department previous to the revision of the laws.

Mr. COCKRELL. The collection of the custom dues causes the expenditure of a very large amount of money in proportion to the amount that is collected. At some of the ports of entry the expenses of collection far exceed the entire amount collected, and if this works any change to increase it in any way I should be opposed to it. In fact I think about thirty of our ports of entry ought to be abolished.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It works no change.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that we reserve the clause from line 394 to line 400 of the bill, and we can make a little further examination of the matter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be reserved.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend by striking out "thirty" in line 399 and in line 400 and inserting "twenty" in each case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2702 is amended by striking out, in the first line, the word "Ellinsberg" and inserting the word "Ellensberg."

Section 2720 is amended by inserting, in the fifth line, after the word "States" the words "but each surveyor of this class shall be entitled to a maximum compensation of $2,000 a year out of any and all fees and emoluments by him received;" and by inserting, in the ninth line, after the word "surveyor" the words "at the ports designated in section 2719."

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish the Clerk would turn to page 535 of the Revised Statutes and read section 2720 as it will be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. The section, if amended as proposed, will read:

Whenever the emoluments of any surveyor other than those named in the preceding section shall exceed $2,000 in any one year, after deducting therefrom the necessary expenses incident to his office in the same year, the excess shall be paid into the Treasury for the use of the United States. But each surveyor of this class shall be entitled to a maximum compensation of $2,000 a year out of any and all fees and emoluments by him received. And no surveyor shall, on any pretense whatever, in the aggregate receive or retain for himself more than $4,500 a year, including all commissions, or fees, or emoluments, or any other emoluments or salaries which are now allowed and limited by law; but each surveyor at the ports designated in section 2719 shall be entitled to a maximum compensation of $4,500 a year out of any and all fees and emoluments by him received. And when any surveyor shall perform the duties of collector he shall be entitled to the same compensation as is allowed to a collector for like services, and shall be subject to the same limitations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will ask the Senator reporting the bill if this does not increase the salaries of a certain class of surveyors and bring them up to $2,000, when under the law as it was their salary would not be $2,000?

Mr. BOUTWELL. As I understand it, it leaves the salaries just where they were by the eighth section of chapter 251 of the statutes of 1870.

Mr. COCKRELL. Please read that section.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Taken in connection with the statute of 1841, chapter 35, one of the last clauses of which is:

Nor shall such surveyor in the aggregate receive, hold, or retain for himself hereafter more than $4,500 a year, including all commissions, or fees, or emoluments, or any other commissions or salaries which are now allowed and limited by law.

The eighth section of the statute of 1870 provided:

That section 5 of an act approved March 3, 1841, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year 1841—shall be construed to have authorized and to authorize the naval officers and surveyors therein mentioned to receive the maximum compensation of $5,000 and $4,500, respectively, as therein named, out of any and all fees and emoluments by them received.

Which is the one I have just read—

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see how those sections which the Senator has read cover this point here. I will ask one question for general information. Has it been the rule where the committee found new provisions in the revision which were not in former statutes, to strike them out, or where they found certain provisions of former statutes not in the Revised Statutes to insert them? Which has been the rule, or have both rules been pursued? That is, if in examining the Revised Statutes and comparing them with the old statutes, you found a new section, has it been the rule to recommend that it be stricken out or to leave it stand? Then what has been the rule where you found that provisions of former statutes had been left out? As I understand, you report that they shall be inserted and added here.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Where we found that a statute had been brought forward which had been repealed by a subsequent statute, but bearing date prior to the passage of the Revised Statutes, we have reported to strike out that statute.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose you found a new provision entirely that was not in any of the old statutes?

Mr. BOUTWELL. We would strike that out, of course. I do not know that we have any such as that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the attention of the committee been called to any new provisions?

Mr. BOUTWELL. We have not had our attention called to any new provisions which turned out to be new. We had our attention called to a provision in regard to the tariff, or under the head of the tariff, in relation to damage on iron in sheets which was thought to be new; but we found that it existed. I do not recollect any other case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have this clause reserved until we can make a further examination of it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be reserved.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2727 is struck out.

Section 2742 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the words "same class of officers" and inserting therefor the word "gaugers."

Section 2746 is amended by striking out, in the second and third lines, the words "and weighers" and inserting in the second line, after the word "appraisers," the words "deputy collectors, deputy surveyors, and."

Mr. COCKRELL. These amendments merely restore the former laws, as I understand.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes; this amendment conforms to the act of June 14, 1858, volume 11 of the statutes, page 337, which allowed temporary additions, but not a permanent increase of certain salaries. Weighers were not mentioned in that act. The act of July 28, 1866, from which the section is taken, merely contained the additional compensation to officers "as now provided by law," that is, as then provided by law, temporarily.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were deputy collectors and deputy surveyors?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. And deputy naval officers?

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2810 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, after the word "officers," the word "are" and inserting the word "is."

Section 2819 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the words "Saint Marks" and inserting therefor the words "Cedar Keys."

Section 2820 is amended by inserting, in the third line, after the word "entered," the word "at."

Section 2821 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the words "Trinity River" and inserting therefor the words "Buffalo Bayou."

Section 2822 is amended by striking out, in the sixth line, the words "and Natchez, in Mississippi," and by inserting, in the fifth line, after the word "Missouri," the word "and."

Section 2825 is amended by striking out, at the end of the section, the word "importation" and inserting therefor the word "destination."

Section 2841 is amended by inserting in the second sentence of the "oath of consignee, importer, or agent," after the words "is (or are)," the words "the owner (or owners)."

Section 2865 is amended by substituting therefor the following:

"If any person shall knowingly and willfully, with intent to defraud the revenue of the United States, smuggle, or clandestinely introduce, into the United States, any goods, wares, or merchandise subject to duty by law, and which should have been invoiced, without paying or accounting for the duty, or shall make out or pass, or attempt to pass, through the custom-house, any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice, every such person, his, her, or their aiders and abettors, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, or imprisoned for any term of time not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is no provision for punishing those who attempt to smuggle or clandestinely introduce goods. I see this last amendment is in place of section 2865 which is stricken out, and yet it contains more than section 2865, and yet it contains no provision to punish an attempt to commit the crime of smuggling.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator will bear in mind that we are not making the law, but merely finding out what it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was only calling attention to the point whether the law provides for it or not.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The truth about this section is that by some accident the first part of section 19 of chapter 270 of the statutes of 1842 was omitted from the Revised Statutes. What stands here as section 2865 is the last part of section 19 of chapter 270 of the statutes of 1842; but the first part by some accident was omitted. We have merely proposed in the amendment to take the whole of section 19 of that statute.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that has no provision about punishing an attempt.

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir, we have taken it just as it was. It reads precisely in the original as it does in the bill. That is the history of it. I do not know how the accident occurred.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2909 is struck out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why is that stricken out?

Mr. BOUTWELL. This section was taken from an act of August 30, 1842, chapter 270, section 17. That was repealed by the act of March 3, 1865, and the two sections 2902 and 2909 are both in the revision. Section 2902 represents the law at the time the statutes were revised, and this section 2909 was taken from a statute which was repealed by a subsequent statute, which is now section 2902.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2936 is amended by inserting, in the eighth line, after the word "situated," the words "to make."

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is a case of new legislation; I do not know but that it is the only one. The words proposed to be inserted seem to be absolutely necessary to make sense and give effect to the statute. They are not, however, in the original statute, and the Senate will consider whether their insertion is in the nature of new legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. That would seem to be a clerical omission.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2978 is amended by adding at the end of the section the words "except as provided in section 3025."

Mr. BOUTWELL. This is contained substantially in section 3025.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2984 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "industry" and inserting therefor the word "injury."

Section 2988 is amended by striking out all after the word "same" in the fifth line, and by inserting a period in lieu of the semicolon at the end of the section.

Section 2989 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the words "relating to warehouses" and inserting therefor the words "of this chapter."

Section 3001 is amended by adding thereto the following:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to remit, in whole or in part, on such conditions, and under such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as he may prescribe, the additional duty secured by the bond given for the transportation of merchandise from a port in one collection district to a port in another collection district prescribed by the preceding section: Provided, That it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the failure to transport and deliver the merchandise aforesaid according to the conditions of the bonds occurred without willful negligence or fraudulent intent on the part of the obligors."

Section 3002 is amended by striking out, in the ninth and eleventh lines respectively, the words "Point Isabel" and inserting therefor the word "Brownsville."

Section 3003 is amended by striking out, in the eighth line, after the words "del Norte," the word "and," and inserting the word "or."

Section 3005 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the words "Point Isabel" and inserting the word "Brownsville."

Section 3009 is amended by adding thereto the words "or coin certificates."

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the effect of the clause just read, I ask the Senator reporting the bill?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It will be seen that it authorizes the receipt of coin certificates in payment of dues, which is the existing law, but this statute imposed a limitation, did not follow the statutes which authorized the receipt of coin certificates, which the Senator will understand are certificates of coin already deposited in the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that. This section says:

All duties upon imports shall be collected in ready money, and shall be paid in coin or in United States notes, payable on demand, authorized to be issued prior to the 25th day of February, 1862, and by law receivable in payment of public dues.

Mr. BOUTWELL. "Or coin certificates." That they shall be payable either in coin, in demand notes, or in these coin certificates. The duties on imports shall be collected in ready money in this particular class of demand notes or in coin certificates. That was the law; but in the revision "coin certificates" were omitted, and therefore technically the Department would not be justified in receiving them, although they are evidence of coin already in the Treasury belonging to private persons. A coin certificate is a receipt for coin already deposited with the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the original act has that in?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The act which authorized the issue of coin certificates provided that they should be received in payment of customs dues.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it was omitted in the revision?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Omitted in the revision, so that technically they cannot receive a certificate which contains evidence that the coin is already in the possession of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is this section 3009 taken in the exact language from the former act?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think not, because this is a compilation from two statutes. First, there was the general statute, which authorized the payment of duties only in coin; and then, when the demand notes were issued that are specified here, there was authority given for the payment of duties with those demand notes; and then, when authority was given to issue coin certificates, it was provided that those should be received in payment of customs; so that this is not a repetition in language of any particular statute. It was impossible in the revision of the laws that they should have brought forward the three different statutes in terms.

Mr. SHERMAN. Are there any demand notes out yet?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Only a very few. That is not the question now. It is merely whether coin certificates shall be received.

Mr. COCKRELL. What does the Senator understand by the words "and by law receivable in payment of public dues" in section 3009? To what do they refer?

Mr. BOUTWELL. They refer to the United States notes payable on demand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then if you put in the words "coin certificates" right after, they just become the equivalent of those words.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, in one sense they were payable on demand, but they were not authorized to be issued prior to the 25th day of February, 1862, and it will not do to put in the words there. The demand notes which were receivable for customs dues were a particular class of notes, limited in amount, issued under certain restrictions, and for the purpose of giving them additional currency they were made receivable. This statute is a limitation upon the use of demand notes. There are other demand notes outstanding by the Government which cannot be used for the payment of customs dues.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that there is no controversy about what is the intention of the insertion of these words, "or coin certificates;" but does it accomplish what is designed?

All duties upon imports shall be collected in ready money and shall be paid in coin or in United States notes—

That portion of the payment is qualified by the words:

payable on demand, authorized to be issued prior to the 25th day of February, 1862, and by law receivable in payment of public dues—

And now you add "or coin certificates." So it does not make coin certificates a payment for import duties, but only for these notes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think "coin certificates" had better be put in after the word "coin."

Mr. COCKRELL. That would do; "coin or coin certificates, or United States notes."

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; let the section be amended so as to read:

Section 3009 is amended by inserting after the word "coin," in the second line, the words "or coin certificates."

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes that right.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3011 is amended by striking out all after the word "protest," in the eighth line, and by adding the words "and appeal shall have been taken as prescribed in section 2931."

Mr. COCKRELL. Under what law do those words come in? The present section says:

But no recovery shall be allowed in such action unless a protest, in writing and signed by the claimant or his agent, was made and delivered at or before the payment, setting forth distinctly and specifically the grounds of objection to the amount claimed.

Now it is proposed to strike that out and insert:

But no recovery shall be allowed in such action unless a protest and appeal shall have been taken as prescribed in section 2931.

Mr. BOUTWELL. This amendment is taken from the act of 30th June, 1864, and was omitted; and there was substituted for it the provision of the act of 1845.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an express decision by the Supreme Court of the United States on this very section of the law, that this protest in writing was necessary—I think it came up in one of the New York cases—and that unless the protest in writing was made the party had no right of action. Now, that law must have existed in some of the statutes, and the proposed change here strikes that out entirely. This amendment would leave out the words "unless a protest, in writing and signed by the claimant or his agent, was made and delivered at or before the payment, setting forth distinctly and specifically the grounds of objection to the amount claimed."

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator will turn to section 2931 he will see that provision is made agreeably to the statute of 1864, to which reference is made in the proposed amendment in regard to the appeal.

Mr COCKRELL. Still that does not affect that provision that no recovery shall be allowed in such action unless a protest shall be made by the claimant or his agent setting forth the grounds of the objection.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Section 2931 provides that no recovery shall be had unless there is notice in writing to the collector setting forth the grounds of objection distinctly and specifically. Then there must be an appeal before suit can be commenced against the collector. I think the Senator will see that the sections as amended will leave the law precisely as it was in 1864.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not had an opportunity of examining yet the law of 1864, but section 2931 in the Revised Statutes does not cover the language that is stricken out of section 3011 as proposed by this bill. It takes out that entire feature—a thing which has been decided to be essential. A decision was had upon a question arising on the construction of that act.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not agree with the Senator in regard to the construction of the statute; but I think he will find, whether he is right in that or not, that the proposed amendment makes the law conform to what it was when the statutes were revised, and I think that in section 2931 there is full power for the whole proceeding, and it is pointed out very specifically that there must be a protest and an appeal before there can be a suit.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do you find in the former acts this language that is employed in section 3011:

But no recovery shall be allowed in such action unless a protest, in writing and signed by the claimant or his agent, was made and delivered at or before the payment, setting forth distinctly and specifically the grounds of objection to the amount claimed;

Or is it found in the Revised Statutes?

Mr. BOUTWELL. This language here is found in the statute of 1845. The language that we propose to strike out in section 3011, and the statute of 1864 substituted for it, is reproduced in section 2931; and that provides for the protest, for the appeal, and for the suit.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that statute of 1864 repeal the act of 1845?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Repeals it in substance, because it provides a new way of protest and appeal and has been so treated. The old act provided that the protest should be made in writing before the payment of the duties; but the new act provided that it should be made within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties by the proper officers, and that language results from the change in the system of collecting the duties.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the act of 1864 repealed the act of 1845, this is correct.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Certainly it repealed it in substance, because it provided a new time for the protest, that it should be within ten days after liquidation, while under the act of 1845 it was before the payment of duties.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know that under the act of of 1845 there were several cases of litigation over it in regard to the fees, and that particular provision was construed by the Supreme Court and it was held to be essentially requisite that the protest should be made before any recovery could be had.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3083 is amended by striking out, in the third and fourth lines, the word "Solioctir" and inserting the word "Solicitor."

Section 3090 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the word "dedcted" and inserting the word "deducted;" and by striking out, in the twenty-fourth line, the word "ncluding" and inserting the word "including."

Section 3100 is amended by transposing the eighth and ninth lines, and by striking out the amending clause to this section in the act approved February 18, 1875, entitled "An act to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. WRIGHT. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to what I think is perhaps the improper use of language in the clause last read. It is proposed here to amend a certain section by transposing the eighth and ninth lines, and to amend it by striking out an amending clause in another statute, an entirely different statute. I suggest to him whether it would not be better to strike out, if he has the language before him, the words "and by striking out the amending clause to this section," &c., and inserting the words "so much of" and then adding to the last clause "as amend said section 3100 be and the same is hereby repealed."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think upon the whole that I will venture to suggest that we omit from this clause all after the word "lines" in line 520, so as to read:

Section 3100 is amended by transposing the eighth and ninth lines.

And allow the former attempt to correct this error to stand.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think that would be preferable.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that amendment. That will just correct the error in the Revised Statutes and let the former attempt pass without any notice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3105 is amended by striking out, in the seventh line, after the word "affixing" the word "in."

Section 3120 is amended by adding thereto the following:

"And that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make such regulations as shall enable vessels engaged in the coasting trade between ports and places upon Lake Michigan exclusively, and laden with American productions and free merchandise only, to unlade their cargoes without previously obtaining a permit to unlade."

Section 3140 is amended by adding at the end of the section the words:

"And where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof, the word 'person,' as used in this title, shall be construed to mean and include a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person."

Section 3141 is amended by striking out, in the fourteenth line, after the word "State" the word "is" and inserting the word "was."

Section 3145 is amended by striking out, in the thirty-first line, the word "entiled" and inserting the word "entitled."

Section 3168 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the word "spriits" and inserting the word "spirits."

Section 3197 is amended by striking out, in the twelfth line, the words "to be" before the word "seized."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment last read because it is new legislation. The words "to be" were in the old statute and the Revised Statutes conform to the old statute; but the Department say that it is erroneous. It appeared so to the committee, and we finally as an exceptional case agreed to report it, to bring it to the attention of the two Houses. I therefore call the attention of the Senate to it. The committee were of opinion that the words ought to be struck out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose it makes the sense plainer?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It makes it plainer, but it is new legislation. If there is no objection, I suppose we may consider it agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3226 is amended by striking out, in the sixth line, after the words "Commissioner of" the word "the."

Section 3239 is amended by striking out, in the sixth line, the word "stamp" and inserting the word "stamps."

Section 3310 is amended by striking out, in the twenty-fifth line, the word "unadvoidable" and inserting the word "unavoidable."

Section 3318 is amended by striking out, in the twenty-ninth line, the word "therin" and inserting the word "therein," and by inserting, in the thirty-fourth line, after the word "shall" the words "on conviction."

Section 3355 is amended by striking out, in the forty-first and forty-second lines, the word "conspicious" and inserting the word "conspicuous."

Section 3362 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line of the fourth paragraph, the word "sweeping" and inserting the word "sweepings."

Section 3422 is amended by striking out, in the ninth line, after the word "document" the word "or," and by inserting, in the tenth line, before the word "order" the word "or."

Section 3429 is amended by inserting, in the sixteenth and seventeenth lines respectively, after the word "die" a comma.

Section 3433 is amended by inserting after the word "materials," in line twenty-six, the words "except distilled spirits."

Section 3456 is amended by inserting, in the ninth line, before the word "dealer" the word "liquor."

Section 3473 is amended by striking out all after the word "banks," in the eighth line, and inserting in the second line, before the word "or" the words "coin certificates.

Mr. BOUTWELL. This is the same amendment we had in a former section in regard to the duties on imports.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Revised Statutes now read:

All duties on imports shall be paid in gold or silver coin only, or in demand Treasury notes.

It will be changed to read:

All duties on imports shall be paid in gold or silver coin only, coin certificates, or in demand Treasury notes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why strike out all that provision after the word "banks," which is:

And upon every such payment credit shall be given for the amount of principal and interest due on any Treasury note not received in payment on the day when the same are received?

These words are proposed to be stricken out. Why are they proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. BOUTWELL. These lines allowing credit for accrued interest on Treasury notes in payment of public dues are not applicable to the issues of 1861 and 1862 which are referred to here. This phrase was taken from a statute which related to other notes, and not to the particular notes that are mentioned in this section.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it was inserted here by error?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It was inserted by an accident.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3536 is amended by inserting, in the fourth line, after the word "weighing" the word "a."

Section 3561 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "applying" and inserting the word "applicable."

Section 3568 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "turn" and inserting the word "return."

Section 3618 is amended by inserting after the word "Army," in the fifth line, the words "materials, stores, or supplies sold to officers and soldiers of the Army."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have section 3618 read as it will stand if thus amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

All proceeds of sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind, except the proceeds of the sale or leasing of marine hospitals or of the sales of revenue-cutters, or of the sales of commissary stores to the officers and enlisted men of the Army, materials, stores, or supplies sold to officers and soldiers of the Army, or of the sale of condemned Navy clothing, or of sales of materials, stores, or supplies to any exploring or surveying expedition authorized by law, shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, on account of "proceeds of Government property," and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like an explanation of what that means.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The object is to make it conform to the act of 1872, chapter 348, which provided "that the fifth section of the act approved May 5, 1872, 'making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes,' shall not be held to apply to stores, materials, and supplies sold to officers and soldiers of the Army or to exploring or surveying expeditions authorized by law."

Mr. COCKRELL. If that is the intention, right after the word "Army" the words "or of" should be inserted before the words "materials, stores, or supplies sold to the officers and soldiers of the Army." It does not mean anything the way it now is.

All proceeds of sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind, except the proceeds of the sale or leasing of marine hospitals, or of the sales of revenue-cutters, or of the sales of commissary stores to the officers and enlisted men of the Army, materials, stores, or supplies sold to officers and soldiers of the Army.

The words "or of" must be inserted to make it mean anything at all.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is so. My notes have "or of" before "materials."

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I move to insert before the word "materials" in this clause the words "or of."

Mr. BOUTWELL. It ought to be so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3620 is amended by inserting after the word "law," in the fifth line, the words "and draw for the same only in favor of the persons to whom payment is made."

Mr. COCKRELL. Please read that section as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of every disbursing officer having any public money intrusted to him for disbursement to deposit the same with the Treasurer or some one of the assistant treasurers of the United States, and to draw for the same only as it may be required for payments to be made by him in pursuance of law, and draw for the same only in favor of the persons to whom payment is made.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is correct.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That conforms to the statute of 1857.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is correct, whether it conforms to the statute or not.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3622 is amended by striking out, in the nineteenth line, the word "Department" and inserting the word "Departments."

Section 3625 is amended by inserting after the word "Treasury," in the fifth line, the words "or the Commissioner of Customs, as the case may be."

Section 3663 is amended by striking out, in the fifth line, the word "plan" and inserting the word "plans."

Section 3672 is amended by inserting, in the third line, after the word "kind," the words "except materials, stores, or supplies sold to officers and soldiers of the Army, or to exploring or surveying expeditions authorized by law."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let section 3672 be read as it will be when amended. The section now is:

A detailed statement of the proceeds of all sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind shall be included in the appendix to the Book of Estimates.

Now read it with the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A detailed statement of the proceeds of all sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind, except materials, stores, or supplies sold to officers and soldiers of the Army, or to exploring or surveying expeditions authorized by law, shall be included in the appendix to the Book of Estimates.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why are these things to be omitted from the appendix to the Book of Estimates?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The reason of it is that under the statute to which we just now referred, where this same subject was under consideration, the proceeds are not turned into the Treasury, but they are applied by the Department in the same branch of the public service. That is where an appropriation is made for supplies for the support of the Army and they are sold to the officers and soldiers, the proceeds go right into the fund for maintaining that branch of the service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. And therefore it would not be possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to make any return in the Book of Estimates of the proceeds of those sales.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3689 is amended by striking out, in the subdivision headed "Allowances and drawbacks, (internal revenue:)" the words "the act of July 1, 1862, chapter 119," and inserting therefor the words "section 3441."

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is merely an error of reference.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3692 is amended by inserting after the word "Army," in the third line, the words "materials, stores, or supplies, sold to officers and soldiers of the Army."

Mr. COCKRELL. There should be inserted there, to correspond with the former section, the words "or from" before "materials." The section now reads:

All moneys received from the leasing or sale of marine hospitals, or the sale of revenue-cutters, or from the sale of commissary stores to the officers and enlisted men of the Army.

Then it is proposed to insert there "materials and supplies." There should be inserted before "materials" the words "or from."

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that amendment; it will be explicit to put in after the words "or from" there the words "the sale of." That would make it correspond with the other provisions.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend by inserting before the word "materials" the words "or from the sale of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the Senator who has this bill in charge whether it is intended that in the end these sections shall be re-enacted so that in some part of the statute-book the changed sections shall appear as they stand, so that it will not be necessary to look at each old section and then at the new and make up the law from both.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That would require the reprinting of the edition.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it would be worth while to reprint the edition; but that would not be necessary. Why not say "that section 430 is amended so as to read as follows," and then recite the section as it will be when amended?

Mr. ALLISON. In the law we are passing now?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, in the law we are passing now we should repeal every section that is to be amended and then re-enact it as it is amended. I do not like to interfere in legal matters, because I do not know much about them; but we seemed to agree after the Revised Statutes were printed that we would not amend a law by a mere reference to the old law and stating the part to be stricken out and the part to be put in, but that we would repeal the old section and re-enact it as we proposed to amend it. We did so for some time. I recollect the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] was very strenuous upon that point, and several bills were sent back to committees to be reported again in that way. It is exceedingly inconvenient in referring to a law to have to look back to the statute as it was originally passed and then to see how it will read as it is amended, and in fact you often have to write it out if you want to comprehend it just as it is.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That suggestion would involve a reprinting of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not. Why not in this bill repeal the sections that are to be amended and then re-enact those sections as amended? We do not necessarily have to reprint the Revised Statutes when we amend the law by doing it in that way.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think there would be as many objections to that course as to this; and I have to say of the present committee that we followed the precedent already set a year and a half or two years ago before I was on the committee. The amendments that were then made to the Revised Statutes were made in this way.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think amending the law in this way is a good deal like the practice of that celebrated tyrant who is so often referred to here. He put his laws up so high that the people could not read them.

Mr. WRIGHT. I remember very well when the amendments to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers were made, and at that point I made the suggestion the Senator from Rhode Island now makes and insisted that the only proper way to amend the Revised Statutes, or any statute, was to re-enact the section you proposed to amend so that any person taking up the statute could see just what it was, and that that method of amending statutes was to be condemned that amended them by putting in a word here or striking out a word there.

I take up this statute now that you propose to pass, and it will require any person, I do not care who it is, to get the old statute and take this and compare them before he is able to tell what the law is. I think I suggested then—and if not then I know I have frequently here—that by the constitutions of some of the States (I know it is in my own State) you cannot amend a statute without re-enacting the section or law that you propose to amend, and by saying that hereafter it shall be so and so. I made the remark as I have already said at the time the amendments to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers were adopted to the Revised Statutes. It was deemed then better to pursue the course that was adopted. I did not make the suggestion this morning when this bill was taken up because I supposed it was determined to adopt this rule. In some instances where there has been a proposition to amend a particular statute, and not several sections of the Revised Statutes, I have insisted upon the same rule, and I think it has been observed; and others have insisted on it. But inasmuch as this covers a great many sections of the statutes, the answer made to me before, that it covers so many that it would be impossible to do it and it would unnecessarily encumber our statutes to re-enact them all, I suppose will be made here. Indeed the Senator from Massachusetts has already made the suggestion that it would take up many hundred pages if you re-enacted these sections as is suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island. As a matter of principle that is the only true way to amend a statute.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not set up my opinion against that of the committee; but it seems to me as a layman who wants to know what the laws are that the proper way is to repeal the section to be amended and to re-enact it as it is amended, and although it may make two or three hundred pages addition to our session laws, I do not think that inconvenience is at all to be compared to the great convenience of having laws so that every body will understand them. Now to understand the law you must make references to two statutes, and you must write out the new statute from them if you want to get it.

Section 3714 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"And all agents or contractors for supplies or service as aforesaid shall render their accounts for settlement to the accountant of the proper Department for which such supplies or services are required, subject, nevertheless, to the inspection and revision of the officers of the Treasury in manner before prescribed."

Mr. BOUTWELL. The addition proposed makes this section of the Revised Statutes conform to the third section of the statute of 1798, chapter 85. Part of the section was brought forward and the remainder was left. I do not know how it happened.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought not the word "the" to be in there before the word "manner?"

Mr. BOUTWELL. We followed the old statute in that respect.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not make any difference.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3740 is amended by inserting, in the sixth line, after the words "member of" the words "or delegate to."

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me a moment to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4307) making appropriations to supply certain deficiences in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, to report the same with sundry amendments.

REMOVAL OF DISTRICT JAIL.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to the Senate bill; and that the Senate agree to the same.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
A. S. PADDOCK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. S. HOLMAN,
A. M. KIMBALL,
CASEY YOUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state that, one of the managers on the part of the Senate, the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. COOPER,] being absent, the report is signed by only two members, but I have no question that the Senator from Tennessee would agree to the report, as he was in favor of the former bill.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply blankets to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT POLICE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BANKS. My duties on the several committees of which I am now a member compel me to decline the appointment by the Chair assigning me to service upon a committee connected with the government of this city. I hope the House will excuse me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks to be excused from service on the committee appointed to inquire into certain matters relating to the police in this District. If there be no objection the gentleman will be excused.

There was no objection.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SOUTHARD, by unanimous consent, presented from the Committee on the Territories, a report to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 3922) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma and for the better protection of the Indian tribes therein; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, presented the views of the minority of the committee on the same subject; which were ordered to be printed with the views of the majority.

RESURVEY OF LANDS.

Mr. KIDDER, by unanimous consent, reported back, from the Committee on Public Lands, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3889) to authorize the resurvey of lands where the surveys are fraudulent, erroneous, or obliterated, and to legalize a certain survey; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Mr. DURHAM. The bill (H. R. No. 3792) fixing compensation, &c., of United States attorneys was set as a special order for to-day after the morning hour; but I apprehend that owing to the regular business it will be utterly impossible to have action on that bill to-day. I desire, therefore, that it may be assigned for consideration on some other day. I hope it will be taken up immediately after the disposition of the diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to insist that this order be subject to the priority of all appropriation bills. The West Point Academy bill is now in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] having charge of that bill, will desire to bring it forward at the earliest moment.

Mr. DURHAM. Let the order as to this bill operate from day to day, so that it may come up after the disposition of the diplomatic bill and the West Point bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the order be made subject to the priority of all appropriation bills.

Mr. DURHAM. I assent to that condition.

The SPEAKER. Under that condition the Chair hears no objection to the order proposed, and it is made.

NAVAL POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I ask consent to report back with a substitute (H. R. No. 4389) the bill (H. R. No. 2208) to authorize the formation of a mixed commission to inquire and report as to the future naval policy of the Government of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be printed and that the bill be made a special order for the 23d instant after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. KASSON. Owing to the accumulation of business I must object to the order operating from day to day until disposed of. I do not object to the naming of one day only for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Well, let the order be confined to one day—the 23d instant.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the order to print will be made, and the bill will be assigned as a special order for the 23d instant, after the morning hour, subject to appropriation bills.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of James W. Green, praying Congress to propose constitutional amendments concerning the executive office and counting the electoral vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS, ETC.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 155) to amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to courts in Arkansas and other States, be taken from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

INTEREST CHARGED BY NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina concerning the rate of interest to be charged by national banks; which was read, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed:

Resolution of instruction to the Senators and members of the House of Representatives in the United States Congress from North Carolina.

SECTION 1. Resolved by the house of representatives, (the senate concurring,) That the Senators and members of the House of Representatives in the United States Congress from this State are hereby requested to endeavor to procure such amendments to the law relating to the currency as will effectually prohibit national banks from taking more than 8 per cent. interest.

SEC. 2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

Read three times, and ratified in General Assembly this 5th day of January, 1877.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE, RALEIGH, January 6, 1877.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the original record on file in this office.

[SEAL.] JOS. A. ENGELHARD,
Secretary of State.

SURGEON FRANCIS V. GREEN AND JOSEPH J. SOWERBY.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4390) authorizing the appointment of Acting Passed Assistant Surgeon Francis V. Greene and of Acting Passed Assistant Surgeon Joseph J. Sowerby as assistant surgeons in the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LOCATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the letter of the Secretary of War in answer to House resolution calling for the number of enlisted men in the United States Army, their present location, also the number of men recruited under the act of August 15, 1876, the assignment of the same, and the amount expended of the fund appropriated by said act, and moved that the same be printed and recommitted.

Mr. HALE. What is the request?

Mr. BANNING. To have the same printed and recommitted.

Mr. HALE. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BANNING. It is merely for the information of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the unfinished business at the adjournment yesterday, which is the bill (H. R. No. 2263) for the repeal of so much of the act of December 17, 1872, as provides for a pivot-draw in any bridge to be erected across the Ohio River between the cities of Covington, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] is entitled to the floor for ten minutes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Does that bill take precedence of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. SAYLER. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain the House at any length in the discussion of this matter. It is so evident, as it appears to me, to everybody who has no direct interest in the construction of this bridge that the law of 1872 should not be departed from, as to scarcely require any discussion of the subject. The older members of the House of Representatives will bear me out in saying that they were about eight years in establishing the principle represented in the law of 1872. The suspension bridge at Cincinnati was then made the dividing point between the bridges constructed with a pivot-draw and bridges not so constructed. That bill was enacted into law after the most careful consideration on the part of the House and after most careful investigation on the part of the engineers of the Army.

Now, the only possible purpose this proposed amendment can subserve is to save a small sum of money to this bridge company. That is all there is in it. There is nothing else in it on the face of the earth, and my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] must abandon one horn or the other of his proposition. He says, in the first place, that it is not necessary to have a draw because during the entire year you can go under the bridge without a draw, and in the next place, and in the same breath, it will not do to have a draw because it will have to be open all the time, and that will interfere with the passage on the bridge. That will not do. The fact is neither one way nor the other——

Mr. REAGAN. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. SAYLER. I quote the gentleman's words.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me explain——

Mr. SAYLER. I have read the gentleman's words this morning. The fact is neither one way nor the other. The fact is this, that by opening up, as I stated yesterday, the Louisville and Portland Canal, we have established the principle of building a larger class of boats than we have heretofore had, and there is a large portion of the year when it is utterly impossible for the larger class of boats to get under the suspension bridge at all.

The gentleman from Texas speaks of the boats which land above the suspension bridge. That is very true, but they are in a great measure the boats which come down, and not the boats which go up. In other words, they are the small boats of the upper river, and not the larger boats of the lower river.

The gentleman from Texas talks about high chimneys. Now, it is not a question of high chimneys at all. It is a question of how high your steamboat is. The Ohio River at Cincinnati has a variation of about sixty-two feet. At high-water mark under that suspension bridge you have not over thirty-eight feet, and you cannot then run an ordinary steamboat under it to save your life, if you take all her chimneys off.

So, it is not a question of high chimneys. It is not a question of the fancy construction of boats. It is simply a question of the ordinary navigation of the Ohio River. And I wish to say to gentlemen here, Mr. Speaker, that the Ohio River, with its navigation unimpeded and protected under this law of 1872, is worth more to the city of Cincinnati than all her railroads put together.

Mr. WATTERSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAYLER. Certainly.

Mr. WATTERSON. How is it with the suspension bridge that crosses the river at Cincinnati?

Mr. SAYLER. It crosses a half mile farther up the river. It is a bridge with a span of over a thousand feet. It has been made the dividing line between the bridges that shall be built without a pivot-draw and those that shall be built with a pivot-draw; and practically every boat that runs from the city represented by the gentleman who now asks me the question is impeded in its progress there, and is compelled to make its landing below the suspension bridge.

Mr. WATTERSON. Then the suspension bridge interferes with the entire commerce of the Ohio River above Cincinnati?

Mr. SAYLER. Certainly not above it. I do not understand the gentleman, unless he is more explicit.

Mr. WATTERSON. I mean between Cincinnati and Pittsburgh.

Mr. SAYLER. Not at all. The gentleman's enigma is too profound for me. I do not understand his conundrum. It interferes with the large boats that run from Louisville to Cincinnati.

Mr. WATTERSON. And also Pittsburgh.

Mr. SAYLER. They do not run to Pittsburgh.

Mr. WATTERSON. But if they should want to run to Pittsburgh?

Mr. SAYLER. They cannot run to Pittsburgh. If they could, they would be obstructed. I can answer the gentleman in this way, that if the large boats could go up the river, it would obstruct them. And in addition to that, it compels the large boats to land below the wharfage at Cincinnati; and you put this a half mile lower down, and will further obstruct the business.

Now, it is a very plain business proposition. The question before the representatives of the country is simply this: For the sake of saving about $60,000 or $70,000 to a bridge company, when the bridge will cost nearly a million, will the people of this country do away with a provision that is the sole protection of the river interest? That is all there is in it, and upon that proposition I submit it to the House.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to say a few words in regard to the subject under consideration; and I do so not for the purpose of antagonizing what I suppose to be the interests of the great city of Cincinnati. But I believe what I shall say will be in the interest not only of the commerce of Cincinnati and Covington, but of the commerce of both of the great States of Ohio and Kentucky.

I do not think so far as I have investigated this question that it is a mere question of dollars and cents, as to whether or not this draw-bridge shall cost $60,000 or $70,000 more by putting a draw in it. But there is a higher and graver consideration in this matter. For if I am correctly informed by those who have charge of this matter there is delay in what is called a draw-bridge; and in the construction of some of those bridges across the Ohio River wherever it has been optional to either have a draw or not to have a draw, the engineers have invariably reported that it is better not to have one. I do not want to prejudge the distinguished Representative from the city of Cincinnati, but there is another thing involved in this matter. There is a great monopoly now in existence between the city of Cincinnati and the city of Covington; it is what is called the wire suspension bridge. If the argument of my friend from Cincinnati holds good, what he contends for ought to have been adopted before the building of either of the three bridges that are now built and being built from Covington to Cincinnati and from Newport to the same city. My friend says you cannot now get above the suspension bridge. I admit it; and yet it was stated to you by the chairman of this committee yesterday that of over five thousand boats that ply to and fro upon that river all land above that suspension bridge, save and except the three mail-boats that ply between Louisville and the city of Cincinnati. And although my friend lives in the city of Cincinnati and knows more than any of us can possibly know in regard to that matter, yet I will say to him that even those three boats running from Louisville to Cincinnati land nearer the heart of Cincinnati than if they landed at the wharves above the bridge. They are confined principally to the carrying of passengers between Louisville and Cincinnati, and where they do land now below the suspension bridge, and where they would land even if this Covington and Cincinnati bridge were built, they are nearer the hotel accommodation than if they landed where most of the freights are landed in that city.

Mr. BANNING. How will they do about wharfage?

Mr. DURHAM. I do not know about that. I am only speaking about the convenience of the traveling community that go by the boats plying between Louisville and Cincinnati.

Now the true theory about this thing, I apprehend, is this—and I am authorized by a gentleman who stood high in the two last Congresses and who is a citizen of the city of Covington, to say that 90 per cent. of the business and of the population of Cincinnati demands that this bill do pass. Not only that, but a very large proportion of the interests outside of those who may have an interest in this great corporation, the wire suspension bridge, demand that this bill shall pass.

Mr. BANNING. Allow me one word. Do I understand you to say that you are authorized to make that statement by the gentleman to whom you have referred?

Mr. DURHAM. I am authorized by him to make that assertion.

Mr. BANNING. Let me say that I am authorized to state that the chamber of commerce, which represents the city of Cincinnati, opposes this bill.

Mr. DURHAM. And the chamber of commerce I learned was molded and controlled by the gentlemen controlling the wire suspension bridge. I am authorized to make the statement I have made.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman can reply to me after I am through.

I know that whenever I strike that corporation I strike some gentlemen who live about Cincinnati, and I hope the gentleman will pardon me for declining to yield to him.

Mr. SAYLER. If the gentleman intended to make any personal reflection upon me, I will not do it.

Mr. DURHAM. Not at all; I know the gentleman has no interest in it; I exonerate him entirely.

Mr. CAULFIELD. How about BANNING? [Laughter]

Mr. SAYLER. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he exonerate my colleague also.

Mr. DURHAM. Your colleague is able to speak for himself.

Mr. BANNING. Does the gentleman have any reference to me?

Mr. DURHAM. O, no; not at all.

The SPEAKER. Now that amity is restored the Chair hopes that the debate will proceed.

Mr. DURHAM. If the gentlemen will allow me to proceed they can reply to me afterward. I apprehend that the real point of trouble in this matter is that here is a great corporation of Cincinnati and Covington, and that is the ground underlying the reason why the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Cincinnati opposes the construction of this bridge.

Now let us look at it for a moment—and I think I understand all the facts in the case—here is a corporation owning the wire suspension bridge, which cannot accommodate the traffic and travel between the two cities of Cincinnati and Covington.

It is proposed to build another bridge. For what purpose? For the purpose of facilitating the trade and commerce between those two cities and the whole country. What further do they propose? They propose to make it free of passage to those men who are directly interested in building up those two cities, to wit, the laboring classes, who are not able to buy property in Cincinnati, but who are able to buy it in Covington, and who do their business in Cincinnati. The object of the new corporation is to break down that monopoly.

Now, I have a statement here from official sources that in some instances the charges of transportation and travel upon this great wire suspension bridge have been increased over 300 per cent. and in some instances 200 per cent. All the interests involved in that wire suspension bridge of course opposed the organization of any other corporation which might reduce their profits.

I will say frankly that as a Representative of a part of the great State of Kentucky I am interested in this matter. But while as a Kentuckian I am interested in the matter, I still think I am the representative of the true interests of the State of Ohio in the course I take in reference to this bill.

I will not go over the argument made yesterday by the Representative from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to show that the most enlightened engineers who have investigated this matter are opposed to a draw bridge because it delays traffic; and in proposing this new enterprise we propose to make cheap transportation, and to have a bridge so that every boat, whether the river be at high water or at low water, may not have to lower their chimneys before they can pass through.

Mr. SAYLER. And the large boats do not go through now when they lower their chimneys.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand differently.

Mr. SAYLER. And you are very wrong in your understanding, as a great deal of what you understand is wrong.

Mr. DURHAM. Here is a report which states that the pilot-houses of these steamboats are not fifty feet above the water.

Mr. SAYLER. Many of these boats are over seventy feet above the water. All of the large boats that navigate the Lower Ohio are from forty-seven to seventy-five feet above the water without any chimney at all; that is the fact.

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has stated what are the facts of the case so far as the navigation of these rivers is concerned, and I will not go over them; gentlemen can read his remarks in the RECORD. The fact is that there is not one day in twenty when the water is so high as to prevent the running of boats under even the suspension bridge.

Besides showing that it is the interest not only of Cincinnati but of Covington to confer upon these laboring people this privilege, I might say that Cincinnati has grown so large in influence and so wide in territory that she has no other place on which to build, and her citizens must go over to Covington in order to find a place for their little habitations. They do not want all their little earnings taken away from them by this suspension bridge, and they require cheap toll.

Mr. SAYLER. I would like to ask the gentleman how much he calls——

Mr. DURHAM. I decline to yield. The gentleman may reply to me after I get through; but I do not intend to have my remarks cut up in that sort of style.

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman is right in not allowing it to be done.

Mr. DURHAM. A note has just been sent to me by a gentleman who knows, stating that all these foot passengers are charged three cents toll each way over this bridge, whereas the new bridge proposed to be built under this bill will charge nothing to those foot passengers. I undertake to say, and it will not be controverted by those gentlemen who represent that city, that there are daily from three thousand to five thousand laborers who go from Covington to Cincinnati to perform their daily work. And so far as these men are concerned those tolls are a very large item.

Now, outside of the advantage which this will confer upon the cities of Cincinnati and Covington, I might as a Kentuckian appeal to the city of Cincinnati a moment in regard to this matter. When your great city undertook to build a railroad across Kentucky and desired to obtain a charter for that purpose, so as by that means to lead up to that city the vast commerce of all the southern country, where did you go for help if it was not to this very sixth congressional district of Kentucky in which Covington is situated? And did not that congressional district send representatives to the Legislature of Kentucky to aid and assist the great city of Cincinnati in procuring the right of way for this great artery of commerce?

Not only that, but did not the whole State of Kentucky, as far as her Representatives on this floor are concerned, aid and assist in the matter? Who was more interested in what is called the Louisville Canal than was the city of Cincinnati? Louisville certainly was willing that the business on the canal should stop there, but who upon this floor were more clamorous for these chartered rights and privileges than my distinguished friends from Cincinnati who now sit upon this floor? And where did they go and make their appeal? They made it to Kentucky, and Kentucky magnanimously surrendered every particle of stock that she had in that canal. For what purpose? For the purpose of accommodating Cincinnati and other cities higher up on the Ohio River.

I say, therefore, that I may well appeal to the generosity of that great city, even if it should be a little inconvenient to them, to do something for the city of Covington and for the people of the State of Kentucky at large. I stand here as one of her Representatives, having a just pride in the growth of Cincinnati. I am glad to announce that that great artery of commerce of which I spoke a moment ago runs through the heart of Kentucky, and the city of Cincinnati will be built up by the treasure not only of Kentucky, but of the other Southern States. And I think there ought to be comity and friendship between these two cities and these two States, and there should be no restriction placed on the commerce between these States.

I might enlarge these remarks and show what the commerce of Cincinnati has been. Some gentlemen have seen proper to state here that you will obstruct the commerce upon the Ohio River by making these bridges. I might contradict that statement by reading from statistics. During the past twenty years, although these bridges have been built across the Ohio River at Bellaire and other points without any draw, and no higher than it is proposed to build this bridge, yet within that short space of time the commerce of this great city has increased from three hundred millions to more than one thousand millions in value. That shows that these bridges do not obstruct commerce to the extent which these gentlemen claim. Pass this bill and you will have cheaper tolls and ample accommodation for trade and commerce across this river.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to close the debate and propose to yield a portion of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. PIERCE.]

Mr. SAYLER. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] having consumed his hour in the beginning of this debate, is not now entitled to an hour to close it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, according to the understanding of the Chair, consumed all but ten minutes of his hour.

Mr. SAYLER. I have no objection of course to the gentleman occupying a reasonable time; but it will not do for him to undertake to claim an hour to close the debate after he has occupied an hour in opening it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has the right to open and close the debate; but he has only one hour altogether.

Mr. SAYLER. And he has already consumed his hour.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word. I do not expect to occupy more than two or three minutes more upon this subject; but I desire to correct the statement of my friend from Ohio.

Mr. SAYLER. I am willing that the gentleman shall correct me if he will allow me to correct him.

Mr. REAGAN. I occupied, in opening, but a portion of my hour and the remainder was occupied by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] and others. If the gentleman desires to occupy a portion of this last hour, I shall have no objection. I have very little more to say myself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to occupy three or five minutes.

Mr. SAYLER. I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas occupying further time; I only dispute his right to occupy two hours, one in opening and another in closing the debate.

Mr. REAGAN. I assure the gentleman that I will do what is satisfactory to him.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Texas propose to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. REAGAN. Five or ten minutes, as he may desire.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, this is a practical extension of the time, which can only be granted by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the House has given unanimous consent to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PIERCE] to speak for five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to understand this matter. As I understand, after the previous question has been ordered, there is an additional hour allowed for debate, which is under the control of the member who may have reported the measure.

The SPEAKER. Not if the member has in reporting the bill consumed his hour.

Mr. REAGAN. In this case that is not the fact. In opening the debate, I spoke not more perhaps than twenty minutes; then there followed a colloquial debate between several gentlemen, including myself. I allowed my hour to be thus consumed because I understood I would have the right to an hour in closing the debate. I do not, however, expect to consume all that time; I merely want the rule observed.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding when the gentleman from Texas was on the floor; but, as the Chair is informed, that gentleman took the floor, spoke for some time, then yielded to other members; so that his entire hour, as it appears, was in fact consumed.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Chair for information whether the hour which was occupied in general debate precludes me from the right to occupy an hour in closing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the right to occupy one hour in opening the debate and also one hour in closing.

Mr. REAGAN. As a matter of fact I did not occupy one hour.

The SPEAKER. But as the Chair is apprised, the gentleman occupied a part of his hour and then yielded the floor to others.

Mr. HOLMAN. As this bill is one of very great importance, I trust that by unanimous consent half an hour more will be allowed for debate, the time to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read from the Digest:

The right of the "member reporting the measure" to open and close debate is not affected by an order either for the previous question or that debate shall cease in committee. But he has only an hour allowed by the rules to close the debate; and if, after having occupied part of the hour in closing, he moves the previous question and it is seconded, he is then only entitled to so much of the hour as he has not already occupied.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not occupied any time in closing the debate; only in opening the discussion on the bill.

Mr. HOAR. My inquiry was why the gentleman from Texas is not entitled to an hour to close the debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not entitled under the rules to one hour in opening and one hour in closing; that he has but one hour altogether for opening and closing; otherwise he would have a very decided advantage over other members.

Mr. SAYLER. That is the rule beyond all question. If he occupies his whole hour in opening the debate, he cannot occupy further time in closing.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. He can, if there has been a reply.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The rule of the House provides that the mover or introducer of a proposition has the right to close the debate on it, and this right exists after the previous question is seconded and the main question ordered, provided there has been a general debate, in which other members have engaged and which has occupied time outside of the control of the member moving the subject-matter. But if the mover of a proposition occupies an hour and then calls for the previous question, he cannot, after the main question is ordered, have an hour to close the debate, in addition to the hour he may have already occupied in opening. If so, he would have two hours to discuss the proposition, while no other member would be allowed to speak at all. But few subjects are discussed longer than two hours, and if chairmen of committees can control so much time other members will be ignored to a greater extent than they are now, and it is seldom that many members who do not stand at the head of the leading committees can get the floor now. Do gentlemen desire to circumscribe the narrow privileges they now have and extend the time and powers of the few? The rule that directly treats upon this point is the sixty-third, and it contemplates discussion by other members, to which the mover of the proposition can reply after "every member choosing to speak shall have spoken."

Mr. HOAR. I understand the fact to be in this case that this bill is reported by a committee; that it is under the charge of the gentleman from Texas, who reported it from the Committee on Commerce; that he has occupied an hour in opening the debate, and that since that hour closed other gentlemen have replied to him. Now, my point of order is that it is the universal usage of the House, as well as the express provision of the rule, that the member reporting a bill or other measure from a committee has two hours. In ordinary cases, no member of the House can speak but once, but the mover of a proposition, no matter what it may be, can speak twice to that proposition. That right, however, is disposed of by the previous question or an order to take the vote at a particular time. But the right of a member reporting the measure from a committee to have one hour to open and another hour to close is not affected by the previous question.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman, the Chair directs his attention to Rule 60, which in part is as follows:

No member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate.

Mark you, it does not give an additional hour to close, one hour having been used by the gentleman reporting the bill in opening the debate.

Mr. HOAR. But it is specially provided that the member reporting the measure under consideration may open and close debate.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter raised in reference to the interpretation of the rules of the House which will apply to other cases as well as to the one now pending before the House, and I wish to call to the attention of the Chair that the previous decision in reference to this question was that the mover of a proposition or gentleman reporting from a committee any measure had the right to open the debate and to occupy an hour and, as an additional right, an hour in closing the debate, unless there has been no reply; then he has only the right to one hour; but, if after having occupied one hour in opening the debate there is any reply, then he is entitled to an additional hour to close debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers the letter and spirit of the rule are, that a member shall occupy but one hour. Of course the Chair recognizes the gentleman reporting a bill to demand the previous question so as to test the sense of the House on the measure without further debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the practice has been uniform that a member reporting a bill from a committee may open the debate occupying one hour. The moment the bill is read and brought up for consideration, the member of the committee reporting it has the right to speak one hour. Now, the general rule permits no member more than one hour. But the rule referred to by the Chair is an exception that the member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate. The rule is express, that he may open and close the debate, and such has been the uniform practice of the House. The language of that last line of the rule quoted seems to be an exception to the general rule or to the body of the rules.

While I have no interest in this particular question, and therefore no bias about it, I do say——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has none.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only speak for myself as a member, and do not wish to intimate that the Chair has any such bias.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that.

Mr. GARFIELD. The custom has been universal, where the member reporting the bill opens in a speech of an hour, that it does not cut him off from the right to close the debate in a speech of an hour, thus giving two hours for the member reporting a bill from a committee, who insists upon it. As a general custom or frequent custom, a member introducing a bill says, "I will not consume all my hour, but I will speak at the close." And I think the right of a committee is like the right in court of a plaintiff to have the opening and closing of the debate. The hour rule therefore does not apply to any such case as this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will further direct the attention of the gentleman from Ohio and of the House to the Manual:

The right of the member reporting the pending measure to close the debate is never denied him, even after the previous question is ordered.—Journal, 1, 31, page 1056.

[But if, after having occupied part of his hour in closing the debate, he moves the previous question, he is then only entitled to occupy the floor for the remaining portion of the hour.]

This recognizes the right to disjoint his hour. In courts the plaintiff is not given an advantage in length of time over defendant.

Mr. GARFIELD. That all applies to the closing of the debate, and has no reference at all to the opening of the debate.

The SPEAKER. Both rules seem to imply and to state that a member is entitled to but one hour for debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. The rule is express, that the member shall open and close debate, and he is entitled to one hour in closing.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of any rule, or even the inference that a member is entitled to more than one hour for debate, the Chair decides that the member is entitled to but one hour for debate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to put a question to the Speaker in view of the decision just made, because, having reported a bill from a committee myself, I take the same interest in this point that the gentleman from Texas does. The rule is imperative that the member who reports a proposition from a committee is entitled not only to the opening but to the closing of the debate. Very well. Suppose the member consumes a full hour in the opening of the discussion; what right has he then in the closing of debate? Having occupied his hour in opening the discussion, if under the rule he is entitled to close the debate, is he not entitled to an hour for that purpose? If not, does not the rule then become inoperative?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make a practical answer to the gentleman from Maryland by taking as an illustration the bill to which he alludes. The bill to which the gentleman alludes is in the morning hour. That bill comes up as unfinished business in the morning hour. It will run from day to day in the morning hour until the previous question is called on it, and if the demand for the previous question is sustained, then it goes out of the morning hour, into the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the previous question should be sustained, would the mover of the proposition be entitled to an hour in closing?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would, because he would have his hour, not having occupied any time in opening and not having yielded any of such hour to others.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair allow me to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The question is certainly a very important one——

The SPEAKER. The Chair so esteems it.

Mr. HOAR. A good many of the experienced members of the House understand the present suggestion of the Chair as being a reversal of the uniform usage. I beg to ask the Chair whether, in the exercise of his undoubted prerogative, instead of ruling upon the question himself, he would not submit it to the House as an original question? It would be exceedingly disagreeable to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and it would not be necessary to do that, if the question were submitted to be passed upon by the House in the first instance as an original question.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say a word upon this question. If the Chair will look to the history of this rule he will find that the suggestion made is not exactly in accordance with the spirit and purpose of the rule. This rule was adopted from absolute necessity. The House found that it was impossible to do its regular business, that business which is considered and reported by committees, under the old practice, where the member holding the floor last might be an opponent of the measure, or might be a friend according as it might happen. A committee which might have given many weeks to the consideration of a subject, would find that after it had been debated in the House some days all its work was wasted and lost, because, at the very last moment, some opponent to the measure reported by the committee would make a statement, either of fact or argument, which momentarily would influence the judgment of the House when the committee was in possession of the absolute knowledge which would have prevented the decision to which the House came at last. There was introduced, therefore, and the House adopted, an entirely new rule, independent altogether of all preceding rules as to the time that should be allotted to members; so that, as I say, the necessity of the case requires the chairman of the committee which reported a measure should be allowed at the close of the debate an opportunity to state whatever might be necessary in regard to the facts or the reasoning upon which the bill stood. And, of course, the only application which the rule that limits a member to one hour has to this question is that the time allowed after the main question is ordered cannot exceed one hour by the rules of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that whatever the House may do upon this question—and I am perfectly certain that whatever the Speaker may decide now—and I have no desire to raise any question in regard to his decision—if it be that the chairman of a committee has not the right to close debate after the previous question is ordered upon a measure reported by a committee—if that construction be adopted, the House will find that it is impossible to do its business, and will be obliged to make another rule that will give him that right for one hour absolutely whether he had occupied time previously or not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANKS. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to get a clear understanding of what the very well-informed gentleman from Massachusetts really thinks upon this question. Does the gentleman then wish us to understand that a member proposing a measure can speak an hour, then move the previous question, and, after the previous question is seconded and the main question ordered, have another hour to the exclusion of everybody else?

Mr. BANKS. That would depend upon the action of the House. All I mean to say is that the practice of the House under the rule has been where a member of a committee reports a measure he should have, regardless of the debate which has taken place upon it previous to the ordering of the main question—the rule and practice of the House have been and the necessity of the case requires that he should have the right to speak one hour after the seconding of the previous question at the close of the debate.

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman from Massachusetts strangely mistakes, as it seems to me, the situation. The rule provides absolutely that an hour shall be under the control of the chairman or the member of a committee reporting a particular measure. Therefore there can be no reason of the kind the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests, that that hour will be taken away from him, for it can only be taken away from him by his own consent and no portion of the hour can be used except upon his yielding.

Now I undertake to say that there is nothing in the whole history of the House, that there is nothing in the precedents of the House that departs in the least from the ruling of the Chair, that a member who is the mover of a measure is entitled to one hour. Let me say that I have no personal feeling about this bill being discussed for any length of time that may be desired, but when the member reporting the bill has discussed it for one hour, and that hour ends, he cannot control another hour under any possible rule of the House, and there is no reason why he should.

Mr. BANKS. I do not take exception to what the gentleman has stated. Where a member moves a question, he is entitled to one hour, and he cannot have more. But where the chairman or a member of a committee reports a measure from his committee, he has one hour to close debate under the rules and under the unbroken practice of the House.

Mr. SAYLER. That is true where additional time is occupied than the opening hour to which the member reporting the bill is entitled; but it is not true where a motion for the previous question is made by the mover of the measure at the expiration of the first hour.

Mr. BANKS. That makes no difference at all.

Mr. SAYLER. If he allows the bill to be opened to general debate, and the previous question being called is not sustained, then I concede perfectly the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that if the previous question is not sustained then the bill passes, by parliamentary usage, from under the control of the gentleman who reported it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to make one suggestion to my colleague. I ask him how he can get over the peremptory language of the rule to be found upon page 171, which says:

> That the right of the member reporting the measure to close debate is never denied him, even after the previous question has been ordered.

My colleague claims that it can be denied him, if he has occupied one hour in opening debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that that is the decision of a former Speaker and is manifestly qualified by the next paragraph in the Manual. It is not a rule, but a statement in the Manual.

Mr. SAYLER. If the member reporting the measure occupies his hour and general debate ensues and he then moves the previous question, I concede his right to an hour to close the debate. But he absolutely controls the first hour and can occupy it himself or yield it to others.

Mr. GARFIELD. And that right he ought to have at least.

Mr. HOAR. He must have the right to open and close the debate.

Mr. SAYLER. Unquestionably he has the right to open and close the debate during that hour, and he can open and close it and then move the previous question if he wants to.

Mr. HOAR. Then the rule is not that the member shall have a right to close the debate, but that he shall have a right to close his own mouth.

Mr. SAYLER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to allow me to make a suggestion. I am anxious to get at what is the existing right under the parliamentary law, and I only rise for the purpose of stating what is my recollection as to the practice in this matter.

Now, I do not remember of any case where a member of a committee who has reported a bill, and has seen fit to occupy his hour and has then called the previous question and the previous question has been seconded, and that the gentleman offering or presenting the bill has risen to close the debate has not been allowed to occupy another hour, or that his right to do so has ever been questioned.

I have, in my own experience, seen the time when a gentleman reporting a bill was speaking in his hour and I requested the privilege of speaking a few moments in that hour and have been told that I could take up as much time as I desired in the closing hour. I think if the Chair will refresh his recollection on this matter he must see that he has himself been in a position of that kind, and as chairman of a committee has granted that very privilege to other members.

I recall, for instance, the debate on the Geneva award bill, where the gentleman who had reported that bill occupied his hour and then called the previous question and took his closing hour, dividing the time. I have done the same thing myself in reporting bills from a committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the fact that by unanimous consent that has been allowed, but the gentleman from Maine will recognize the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] in this instance denied that right and the Chair therefore was compelled to rule upon that question under the rules as he finds them and comprehends them.

Mr. HALE. Then the Chair concedes that this is the first instance in which this right has been denied.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that, but it is the first time that the question has arisen while the present occupant of the Chair has been Speaker, and the Chair decided it under the rules as he understands them.

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair know of any similar case during his long experience as a member of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not like to answer that question without referring back to the Journal or the RECORD. The House will understand that the Chair has no feeling upon this subject. His duty is confined to the administration of the rules as they appear to the mind of the Chair. The rule is susceptible of but one construction, and that is that a member is not entitled to more than one hour's debate. The Chair, however, recognizes the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] he having under the rules occupied one hour, to move the previous question. When unquestioned more latitude may have been heretofore given.

Mr. HOAR. I am sorry to delay the decision of this question, but if the Chair will allow me one moment, I would call attention to Rule

63. That rule in the first place applies to all cases of debate, and declares that—

No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

Therefore under this rule the mover, introducer, or proposer of the matter is entitled to speak twice, once in opening and once in reply.

Mr. GARFIELD. For how long?

Mr. HOAR. Of course one hour each time, under the hour rule. By Rule 63 his right to speak twice is expressly affirmed. What becomes of the right to speak twice of the mover, introducer, or proposer of a measure when the previous question has been ordered? That is the only point left, and that point is settled upon page 171 of the Digest, where it is declared that if the introducer of a measure be the member reporting it from a committee, the previous question does not take away his right to reply. Therefore the mover of the measure can always speak twice, unless he is cut off by the order of the House to take the question at a particular time, in which case he cannot speak the second time unless he be the member reporting the measure from a committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will see that that right accorded to the mover or reporter of a measure is subject to the other rule governing the time he may occupy, which rule distinctly states that the time shall be but one hour. He may use a part of the hour in opening and the remainder of the hour in closing.

Mr. HOSKINS. I rise simply to call the attention of the Chair to the wording of Rule 60:

No member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate.

By the unvarying practice of this House since I have been a member, there have been two classes of subjects for debate: one where propositions are reported from a committee, in which case the member reporting the measure had the right for one hour to open the debate and then the right for one hour to close the debate. But the other class of cases, where a proposition is brought before the House otherwise than by reporting it from a regular standing committee of the House, does not give to the mover the right to close the debate if an hour has been occupied in opening the debate. No member can have the right to close the debate in such a case where he has exhausted his hour in the opening of the debate.

On page 88 of the Digest it is stated that "The right of the 'member reporting the measure' to open and close debate is not affected by an order either for the previous question or that debate shall cease in committee." If he has exhausted an hour in opening the debate, where the proposition is reported from a committee, under the present ruling of the Chair he would have no privilege whatever to close the debate. But to my mind, where the measure comes from a committee, the rule clearly contemplates that the member reporting the measure shall have the right to open and to close the debate. Since I have been upon this floor the unbroken precedents of the House have given to the reporter of a measure from a committee the right to use an hour to open the debate and also to use an hour to close debate. According to the present ruling of the Chair, the member, in order to be able to open and close the debate, must use a portion of the hour in opening, then call the previous question, and take the remainder of the hour for closing. That however has not been the practice of the House. Nor is it in harmony with a fair interpretation of Rule 60, which makes an exception in favor of the member who reports a proposition from a standing committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. As this is a question of very great importance and has given rise to a great diversity of opinion——

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to speak to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is addressing the Chair upon the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. As there is no objection to allowing the gentleman from Texas to hold the floor for half an hour upon this bill, I suggest that the ruling of the Chair on this question be deferred until to-morrow morning, in order that the Chair may have time to take into consideration all the facts of the case, and to-morrow may deliver such formal opinion as he may desire after such further examination.

The SPEAKER. The House can at any time instruct the Chair what interpretation he should give to a rule. As at present advised, the Chair can see but one construction which he can place upon this rule, although of course he accepts the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. If there is no objection, I hope unanimous consent will be given for the opinion of the Chair to be delivered to-morrow morning, with the right, of course, of any gentleman who desires to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and that a half hour for further debate be granted to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to speak to the point of order.

Mr. PIERCE. I understood that by unanimous consent I was to be allowed five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not desire to be cut off in this way from speaking to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no desire to cut off anybody; the gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. SAYLER. The Chair is not required to hear further discussion on the point of order unless he desires.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear it.

Mr. REAGAN. It is a question of some moment, and I feel more free to discuss it because it is a matter of indifference to me personally whether I am permitted to close the debate upon this bill or not. I would not say a word but for the fact that, as I have understood the parliamentary law and practice, the decision of the Chair to-day reverses what has been the uniform course of practice in this House heretofore.

With all deference to the Chair I desire to state the reasons why it seems to me the ruling suggested by the Chair may not be correct.

I call attention first to Rule 60, which provides that—

No member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate.

I admit that this provision does not entirely settle the question now before us. But I read also from Rule 63—

No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending; in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

These rules, although having an important bearing on the question, do not, I concede, settle finally the precise question before the House. But the exposition of these rules, as found on page 171 of the Digest, to which the Speaker referred a while ago, seems to me conclusively to settle the question that the occupation of one hour in opening the debate does not preclude the right of the mover of a measure, especially when he has reported the measure from a committee, to occupy an hour in closing the debate.

The right of the member reporting the pending measure to close the debate is never denied him, even after the previous question is ordered.—Journal, I, 31, page 1056.

[But if, after having occupied part of his hour in closing the debate, he moves the previous question, he is then only entitled to occupy the floor for the remaining portion of the hour.]

Not where he has occupied a portion of his hour in opening the debate; but in the exposition of these two rules the diminution of his time after the ordering of the previous question occurs only when he has already occupied a part of the time in closing the debate. In that case he is not permitted to go on and occupy the whole hour in closing the debate, having already occupied a portion of the hour before calling the previous question.

But if, after having occupied part of his hour in closing the debate, he moves the previous question, he is then only entitled to occupy the floor for the remaining portion of the hour.

With all proper respect to the Speaker, I submit that the difficulty which has arisen in the consideration of this question results from confounding the opening with the closing of debate. The right to open the debate belongs of course to the mover of the measure; and the right to close it, especially on the part of a member reporting a measure from a committee, seems under Rule 63, and the interpretation of it on page 171 of the Manual, to be conclusively established. The right to an hour in closing the debate does exist, though it may be partly consumed before the ordering of the previous question.

In this view it seems to me it would be contrary to all parliamentary practice with which I have been acquainted and contrary to the rules, as I have always understood them and heard them interpreted, to assume that because a member moving a measure has occupied an hour in opening the debate he is therefore precluded from the right to close the debate, even after moving the previous question.

I desire to say that as a matter of fact I occupied in opening this debate perhaps twenty minutes, after which there arose a colloquial discussion which of course I would not have permitted if I had supposed that it came out of my time under the rules of the House, though I know the chair is not responsible for that.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the Chair was not presiding at the time.

Mr. REAGAN. This morning the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] in his own right took the floor and was followed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM,] who in his own right occupied the floor. It seems to be assumed, however, that the two gentlemen who spoke to-day, as well as those who took part in the colloquial debate yesterday, occupied the floor in my hour and with my consent. The colloquial debate which sprang up yesterday was, as I understood, an ordinary running debate; and I had no idea the time occupied was regarded as a part of the hour to which I was entitled in opening the debate.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman from Texas the Chair desires to state that he has not denied the right of a gentleman reporting a bill from a committee to open and close the debate; but he does regard that right as subject to Rule 60, which gives to any member only one hour for debate. The terms of that rule are distinct, and it is for the member making a report to so divide his time, if he chooses, that he may be enabled to use part of his hour in opening the debate and part in closing. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding yesterday during the proceedings upon this bill, but he was informed that the gentleman from Texas consumed his hour, and therefore the Chair only recognized him in virtue of his right as the mover of the proposition to call the previous question.

The Chair thinks he is right in his ruling, but is quite willing either to submit the question to the House for the purpose of obtaining its interpretation of the rule, or to take further time as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to examine the rulings in cases where this question may have been in dispute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think there will be any objection to letting the decision go over till to-morrow morning.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I suggest to the Chair that in the first session of the Thirty-first Congress this precise question arose and was decided. On a report from the Committee on Elections Mr. Strong, who had presented the report, exhausted his hour in opening the debate. The discussion proceeded, being participated in by other members; and subsequently, on the 28th of June, 1850, the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, when Mr. Strong claimed the floor and was recognized. The question of order was then raised whether he had the right to an additional hour. The Speaker ruled that he had, and the House sustained the decision.

The SPEAKER. In what year was that decision?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It was made on the 28th of June, 1850, and will be found in volume 21, part 2, of the Congressional Globe, Thirty-first Congress, first session.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think there is no objection to the suggestion that this point of order go over until to-morrow morning; that the debate on this bill proceed as the gentleman from Texas desires, and that to-morrow morning if any gentleman wishes to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, he may be permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that arrangement. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, it would seem proper for me to state that the Committee on Commerce was almost equally divided upon the question of reporting this bill, five members being in favor of it and four opposed to it. The minority of the committee believed that the enactment of 1872, requiring all bridges thereafter constructed across the Ohio River below the suspension bridge at Cincinnati to have a pivot-draw, should be maintained. Such a provision is necessary in order to enable the largest steamers to navigate the river at all seasons of the year.

The commerce of the Ohio River is in its infancy and it is impossible now to say how large steamers the future development of freight and passenger traffic on that river may require. It was in evidence before the Committee on Commerce that for fifty or sixty days in the year certain steamers could not pass under these bridges without a pivot-draw; that the chimneys of these steamers would not only strike the bridge, but the pilot-house would also strike the bridge unless there was a pivot-draw as proposed under the law of Congress since 1872.

There is no necessity for the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker, in order to have this bridge constructed, because these petitioners have the fullest authority now if they construct it in compliance with the law. The only reason they allege for the passage of this bill, which suspends the operation of the law of 1872, is that by relieving them from the necessity of putting in a pivot-draw it will reduce the cost of the construction of the bridge some one hundred thousand or two hundred thousand dollars. That is the whole truth, and they ask you to suspend the law for that purpose. I cannot see the propriety of granting any such request, and I hope the bill will not be passed.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield now to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, all I wish to say in regard to this bill is that I hope gentlemen will not consider it a mere question between the two cities of Cincinnati and Covington. It is a question to what extent it is proper the navigation of the Ohio Rivershould be impeded by the construction of bridges. The subject of bridging the Ohio became one of great interest from the time the Steubenville bridge was built down to 1872. It was the subject of constant contest. The bridges authorized to be erected at Bellaire and Parkersburg, and subsequently at Louisville and Paducah, were authorized during a period of war and were not the subjects of any particular discussion. But after the passage of the last bill, the bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Paducah, the subject began to arrest the attention of the interests involved in the navigation of the Ohio River to an extraordinary extent. After a long discussion in the Committee on Commerce of the House, of which I was a member some eight years, the subject was referred to a commission of the engineers of the Army. They reported a bill to Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and reported back to the House, and after some discussion finally became the law. That is the act of 1872.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, it will be borne in mind that this act of 1872 was the result of long consideration, not only on the part of both branches of Congress, but also on the part of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, because it was a matter of vital moment that the Ohio River should not be obstructed in its navigation any further than the other interests of transportation absolutely required.

It must be remembered that the Ohio River is the poor man's highway. It is incapable of being made the subject of monopoly. It enables every citizen, with whatever capital he may invest, to avail himself of that navigation. Therefore, I repeat, what I said at the beginning, that I trust that this will not be regarded as a question between Cincinnati and Covington, but that on the contrary it should be considered how far it is wise and proper to allow the Ohio River to be obstructed by the construction of bridges.

Now I must say to my friend from Texas that if this bill passes, authorizing the building of a bridge half a mile below the suspension bridge at Cincinnati, you must apply the same principle to bridges below that, and to the bridge at Paducah, in Kentucky. That bridge was allowed to be built without a pivot, contrary to the remonstrances of the people living below it interested in the commerce of the Ohio River; and the law authorizing the construction of the bridge at Paducah was repealed.

I say, if it be deemed proper on the score of economy to allow the citizens of Cincinnati and of Covington to build a bridge without a pivot-draw, because the construction of such a bridge is a little cheaper, if it is proper to allow such a bridge to be constructed between Cincinnati and Covington, the same thing must be allowed at other points, and the navigation of the Ohio River must consequently be seriously impeded. I represent a constituency upon the Ohio River, and I know that the people living on the Ohio River feel that it would still further impair its navigation by allowing this bridge to be constructed. The navigation of that river is seriously impaired now. The Government was compelled, when the effect of this bridge became understood, to require the elevation of the railroad bridge above the suspension bridge, allowing the bridge companies to go into the Court of Claims to ascertain what damages they had sustained. A case is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States in which judgment was rendered against the Government of the United States growing out of that legislation.

I consider, therefore, that I would not properly represent the interests of my constituents upon the Ohio River, if I did not insist that the question of a little increased expense in the construction of a bridge in a given locality—and that is the only question here—should not be allowed to change the principles upon which the law of 1872 was founded.

My friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] must see and my friend from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] must see that if you change that law in the one instance, as to the pivot-draw below the suspension bridge between Covington and Cincinnati, you cannot well refuse to grant the same to other companies authorized to construct bridges across the Ohio River at points lower down the stream. And I feel confident, where the variation between high and low water mark runs up to fifty or sixty feet—sixty-two feet at Cincinnati, and to a greater extent at points below—where such is the fact, it is a matter of vital moment that the provisions of this law of 1872 shall be adhered to.

Let me say just one additional word. I desire to say that the navigation of the Ohio River is becoming of more and more moment in some respects every year; and that these natural channels, these natural highways, where there can be no such thing as monopoly, where competition is universal, ought not to be obstructed and the navigation impaired any further than is absolutely required by other public interests. In this case it is simply a question whether the cities of Covington and Cincinnati desiring to erect this new bridge shall be required to pay a little more money for that purpose or not. And I submit that the question of $50,000 or $60,000 more, in the construction of this bridge, is as nothing in the comparison with the magnitude of the interests involved, if anything is done materially to interfere with the navigation of that river.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say but a single word in support of the pending bill, because as a member of the Committee on Commerce I took no little interest in the debate that was had upon it before the committee and the hearing upon it which was exceedingly exhaustive. Both sides were permitted a large amount of time to present their claims; first, those favoring the bill, and then the opposition to it. And while there may be some fancied objections to the construction of this bridge, as a member of the committee I became fully satisfied that the advantages to be derived from its construction very much overbalanced all fancied disadvantages which might result from it.

There has always been, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, an opposition to the construction of bridges over navigable rivers. There has never yet been a bridge over the Ohio River or the Mississippi River that has not been stoutly opposed; and yet the statistics of commerce following the construction of those bridges show that in point of fact those bridges have not operated to the obstruction of commerce. It is a fact that just in proportion as these efforts have been made to build these bridges the opposition has increased; and yet, I say, history does not establish the fact that these bridges are any obstruction to the commerce of the rivers.

There was a time when no bridge was to be built across the Mississippi River. It was talked about as a great national highway, and it was declared that no bridge must be built across the river. Very many bridges, however, have been built across it, and yet it is not in evidence that those bridges have at all lessened the great value of the Mississippi River to the great West. We had a number of hearings on this question before the Committee on Commerce; and the fact has been developed that these bridges have never yet in point of fact operated as an obstruction to the commerce of the river. And I do not believe that would be the case in this instance.

One fact, Mr. Speaker, has impressed itself upon me. There is now existing at Cincinnati a monopoly. It is exacting; it is cruel; there is a great demand for an increased facility in the passage from one city to the other. The interests of commerce demand it.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNNELL. I have but a moment remaining.

Mr. SAYLER. I will be obliged to the gentleman if he will state what that monopoly is.

Mr. DUNNELL. The monopoly exists in the existing bridges.

Mr. SAYLER. There are two bridges now in existence and another in process of construction, and the ferries are running.

Mr. DUNNELL. This is opposed by a monopoly which the people of those places resist.

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman should not make a statement of that kind unless he knows it to be true.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am stating the evidence which was presented to the committee, and I am justified in making the statement that nothing was more plainly shown to the Committee on Commerce than the existence of a monopoly at that point.

Mr. REAGAN. In looking at this question as a member of the committee and in determining so far as I was concerned the duty of the committee in relation to it, I have endeavored to look at it as a judge would look at a cause which he had for trial before him and to determine it with judicial fairness and justice to all the interests concerned. I tried to explain in the remarks that I made yesterday to the House the basis upon which the conclusion of the committee was reached from a fair examination of facts, and to make a presentation of facts which no one has disputed on this floor. I recognize the truth of what was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the Ohio River is a very great highway of commerce. I recognize the further proposition that it is important that we should not impede or interrupt its navigation any further than can be possibly avoided consistently with the other interests of the country. I discussed that question very fully yesterday, and do not therefore feel called upon to re-examine it to-day. I stated the fact then which I repeat now, that from Steubenville to the suspension bridge at Cincinnati there are six bridges over the Ohio River without draws on that part of the river which is of more difficult navigation than the portion below Cincinnati. I stated that the height above the mouth of Big Sandy were ninety feet above low-water mark, and the span not less than three hundred feet. I stated that all the bridges below the Big Sandy were to be of a height of not less than one hundred feet above low-water mark and of a span of not less than four hundred feet. I stated yesterday, and I call attention to the fact, that in the construction of the bridge at Cincinnati, which was commenced as a draw-bridge, the United States Government, in the interest of the navigation of the Ohio River, required a variation in the plan of the bridge, and that it should be one hundred feet above low-water mark without a draw, and it is for that act that the Government is charged, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana, with some thousands of dollars of damages. It was done because it was stated in the report of an able and distinguished engineer of the United States, approved by the Engineer in-Chief, that they believed the draw impracticable and improper on that river, and that a bridge with two spans of one hundred and sixty feet each, with draws, would more impede the navigation of the river than a single span of four hundred feet.

All these things I stated yesterday, and I simply call attention to them to refresh the memories of those gentlemen here who honored me with their hearing yesterday.

Now, in regard to the remark made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and that made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] that if we repeal this law, so far as is proposed by this act, we re-open the whole question settled by the act of 1872, let me say a word.

The act of 1872, to which reference is made, was that the bridges below the wire suspension bridge at Cincinnati should have draws. Now it is inquired why we propose an innovation upon that law and that it be repealed, so far as this bill proposes to repeal it. That question is entitled to be answered by reasons satisfactory, and if there is not a clear and satisfactory answer to it the objection ought to prevail against the bill, and I will undertake to make that answer very briefly. As it appeared to the committee on the evidence before them in preparing this bill, between the cities of Cincinnati and Covington a bridge may be built anywhere from the suspension bridge up to the mouth of the Licking River, which is as far above that bridge as it is proposed in this bill to build a bridge below it without a draw. Now, then, the thing to which I call attention is this: What reason is there why a bridge without a draw should not be built between these two cities fifteen hundred feet below the Covington bridge just as well as fifteen hundred feet above it, and especially when the proof shows that a great amount of shipping on the river, whether it comes down the river or up the river, lands at Cincinnati above the suspension bridge? It was shown that last year five thousand vessels landed above the bridge, and but three vessels, those belonging to the mail-boat line, below it. Now, if all the vessels land above a bridge without a draw, what impediment is put in the way of commerce by requiring them to pass under a bridge of similar character fifteen hundred feet below, under a bridge without a draw which has a span of the same height?

But it may be asked, what is the necessity for a bridge there? The answer was just made by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL;] I repeat it: It is because there is now a single bridge, owned by a monopoly which also owns the only ferry-boat between the two cities. It was shown in the testimony before the committee that there is a daily average of 9,737 foot-passengers crossing the bridge, and 1,900 foot-passengers crossing by the ferry-boats, making a daily average of 11,637 foot-passengers, excluding those passengers on horseback and in vehicles, and leaving out all the conveniences to commerce, such as cattle, horses, hogs, and other stuff that passes there. I showed yesterday the importance of the business and the intimacy of the connection between the two cities.

Now the city of Covington proposes at its own expense, for the purpose of relieving the people of Cincinnati and Covington from the burdens of this monopoly, to build at its own cost a free bridge, free absolutely to all foot-passengers, and with only certain minimum tolls upon other traffic, for the purpose of paying the current expenses of the bridge. It is to be given freely to the people of these two cities. Why object to it when we show that commerce can be no more impeded by it than it is by the bridge now existing? Who objects? I desire to repeat what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] says and the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] that so far as the proof before the committee went nobody objected but the chamber of commerce; no organized body; and none of the people of Cincinnati have objected; nor do I believe that that wise, thrifty, and sagacious people would think of objecting to a measure so promotive of their own interests.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask the gentleman whether a single man from Cincinnati ever asked the committee to report this bill; whether anybody from Cincinnati ever appeared before that committee and advocated the passage of this bill? I say not a man from Cincinnati has ever appeared before the committee to advocate this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not undertake to answer the question of the gentleman in the negative; but I say that no one has appeared before the committee to oppose the bill.

Mr. SAYLER. And I say that there was a delegation of persons of Cincinnati who did oppose it, and that there never was a single man in favor of it.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not remember.

Mr. SAYLER. Unquestionably the gentleman forgets.

Mr. REAGAN. I will go back to the proposition that the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati opposed this bill, and that members of the Chamber of Commerce are stockholders in this monopoly, and one of them a director. It is to their interest to continue a monopoly which yields to them the largest dividends.

Mr. SAYLER. Does the gentleman from Texas mean to say that the members of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati are stockholders in the suspension bridge?

Mr. REAGAN. I mean to say that some of them are.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman mention one? There are a great many members of that board.

Mr. REAGAN. I will mention two, Mr. Sherlock and Mr. Shinkle, and one of them is a director.

Mr. SAYLER. I do not know anything of their personal connection with the bridge, but Mr. Shinkle is from Covington.

Mr. REAGAN. He may live there, but he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati.

Mr. SAYLER. The idea that all the leading merchants of Cincinnati are stockholders in this bridge is simply absurd.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not much more to say upon this subject, except to add that the investigation which I have made of this matter induces me to believe that it is purely a question between a monopoly that is to be benefited by defeating this bill and the people who will be benefited by the construction of this bridge. Believing this, as I think the facts warrant me in believing, I was a little surprised to hear my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] always a friend of the people, rise here this morning and advocate a monopoly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am greatly astonished at the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. I am glad the gentleman is.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Texas still persists in regarding this as a mere contest between Cincinnati and Covington, he is deliberately seeking to deceive the House as to the real question now pending. The question is not between those two cities, but whether the whole people from Pittsburgh to Cairo shall be affected in the navigation of the Ohio River and their business upon that river by the construction of bridges of this character, when bridges can be made reasonably safe and convenient by an increased expenditure of a small amount of money. The question is whether their whole interests must suffer to avoid a little expense in the erection of these structures. It is a question affecting the whole people on the Ohio River, and the whole interests of those concerned in the navigation of that stream.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he means to say, either directly or hypothetically, that I desire to deceive anybody?

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot expect the gentleman to deceive the House; I did not intend that. But I do say that the effect of this discussion, creating the impression that this is a contest between a bridge company and the cities of Cincinnati and Covington, tends to keep out of view the main question, which is the effect which bridging that river will have upon its commerce from one end to the other.

Mr. REAGAN. The trouble with the gentleman is that he did not listen to the debate. I discussed with the utmost care the very question which he presents, and had he listened to me it would have saved him the trouble of interjecting what he has now done into the debate. He would know that I comprehended the question distinctly, and stated as directly and fully as my limited time would allow the very question which he now presents. I showed distinctly that the construction of this bridge would accommodate the commerce which crosses that river, and that the principle involved is sustained by the action of Congress, by the judgment of the Supreme Court, and the concurrent desire and judgment of the people. I now call for a vote.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and the time for debate by agreement of the House has expired. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas whether the only reason assigned for departing from the requirements of the law of 1872 is not the mere question of economy?

Mr. REAGAN. That is hardly an argument in this case. The real argument is the benefit to commence and travel between the two cities. The question of cost was mentioned merely as a slight incident, but it constitutes no part of the real argument.

Mr. PIERCE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether this bridge company, under existing laws, has not the fullest authority to construct a bridge.

Mr. REAGAN. With a draw.

Mr. PIERCE. Was not the only reason given for the passage of this bill that it would reduce the cost of constructing the bridge?

Mr. REAGAN. My friend from Massachusetts does not take in the whole argument. They object to building the draw, not because they do not want to expend the money but because they do not wish to destroy the usefulness of the bridge by interrupting travel and traffic over it by the opening of a draw.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman from Texas state how travel would be interrupted?

Mr. REAGAN. By the opening of the draw.

Mr. SAYLER. But the draw is necessary for the commerce of the river; and more than the $60,000 or $70,000 which it would cost to put in the draw will be lost every day to the people in the immediate vicinity of Cincinnati.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas one question. Why is the provision of a general law forbidding the building of all bridges across the river at that point to be repealed? Why does the gentleman bring in a bill granting in this particular case the privilege of building a bridge without a draw of proper elevation?

Mr. REAGAN. If I can be allowed I will take pleasure in answering the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. Why does the gentleman propose to repeal a general law which was passed, after long consideration, for the general protection of the commerce of the river?

Mr. REAGAN. I have answered the question already; but if I may be permitted I shall be glad to do so again. It is not the desire of the committee to have a general repeal of the law with reference to bridging the Ohio River, nor was it their purpose to indicate an opinion that it should be repealed. We propose to let the law of December, 1872, stand except as to a free bridge between Cincinnati and Covington, close to the existing bridge across that river.

Mr. CONGER. But this bill does not prevent any number of bridges being built without a draw. It repeals a law which was carefully prepared and was passed after more discussion than almost any other measure that has come before this House within my recollection—a law applicable to all bridges at this particular point, where the rise of water is so great as to absolutely require them to have a draw in order that steamboats may go through at high water. The gentleman proposes to repeal in favor of one bridge a general law and to permit the building of any number of bridges across there without a draw.

Mr. REAGAN. It will be limited——

Mr. CONGER. There is no limitation in the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. It will be limited to bridges between Cincinnati and Covington.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 53, noes 95.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered,

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 133, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Carr, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Cook, Cutler, De Bolt, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Durham, Eden, Evans, Finley, Forney, Fort, Freeman, Gunter, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Watterson, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Fernando Wood, and Woodburn—82.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. SAYLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOLD AND SILVER INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at ten minutes after three o'clock, and the House resumes, as the unfinished business of the morning hour, the consideration of the joint resolution (S. No. 16) to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to attend an international conference on the subject of the relative values of gold and silver.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask that the joint resolution as amended be read for the information of the House.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that should the government of one or more countries invite a conference or convention to consider the important change which has recently occurred in the relative values of gold and silver, and the adoption of international measures for the removal of embarrassments arising therefrom, the President of the United States is authorized to appoint three qualified persons as commissioners to attend such conference or convention.

It further authorizes the President of the United States to propose such conference or convention to the governments of the leading nations of the world, if he should deem the same desirable.

Mr. FORT. I understood there was an amendment pending to this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The amendment was adopted.

Mr. FORT. I have not heard the amendment read. If I am not mistaken, there was suggested an amendment providing that these commissioners should serve without pay.

The SPEAKER. No such amendment is pending.

Mr. FORT. Has the gentleman any objection to such an amendment being offered?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not yield to have any such amendment offered. None was offered yesterday. The resolution itself does not contemplate the appointment of any person who would require pay. There is no money appropriated by the resolution.

Mr. FORT. Then there should be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. O'RRIEN. The amendment is entirely unnecessary, and I do not yield to have it offered.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question then recurred on the passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was rejected.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am entitled, I believe, to an hour to close the debate, and I have not signified my intention as yet to call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was entitled to an hour, but the bill has been rejected.

Mr. FORT. I suggest that the gentleman from Maryland has slept on his rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was entitled to an hour to speak on the joint resolution, and the joint resolution has been rejected. If there be no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland, and that the question shall again recur on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRIGHT. That question has been submitted to the House and the House has rejected the joint resolution. It is too late, therefore, for the mover to speak to a subject which has been determined. I object to going back.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I propose to occupy some time in explanation of this measure.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman has tested the sense of the House on the question and it is now too late for him to go back.

The SPEAKER. If objection be made, the question having been decided, debate is not in order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was rejected, and propose on that question to occupy an hour.

Mr. FORT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But I do not yield for any such purpose, and I respectfully request the gentleman from Illinois to wait until I get through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to an hour.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.]

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, since this bill is at most only of a permissive sort, and since the permission is certainly harmless and seems to be quite desirable, I should not have supposed any objection would be made against it had I not on yesterday heard the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] and having heard them I am quite at a loss to know how they weigh against it. The joint resolution which as I am informed passed the Senate without any opposition, and which comes before the House with the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, simply authorizes the President of the United States in case any overtures come from any country to appoint commissioners to enter into an investigation respecting the recent change in respect to the relative values of gold and silver. An amendment of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures proposes to authorize the President when it seems desirable to initiate such a measure.

Now the gentleman from Texas argues against this because we are a silver-producing country and a debtor country. If these facts be admitted, (and nobody probably will deny them,) they furnish the very argument we need for precisely this commission; for if we are a silver-producing country it is certainly a matter of great interest to us what shall be the market value of silver and if we are a debtor nation it is a matter of great interest to us how to make our products most valuable. And this commission authorizes an investigation respecting this, and if any people has an interest in such a commission it is the United States. The matter seems to me so simple, so desirable, so free from objection, that I am unwilling to discuss it.

Mr. FORT rose.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.]

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that this is but one of the many measures that have been presented to Congress to rule silver out of the currency of the country. This is a proposition to appoint a commission to ramble over the world and hob-nob with the bullionists of Europe to ascertain what silver is worth. It does seem to me that commerce, a thousand years ago, determined that question much better than a learned commission can do it now. What do the gentlemen propose? What information do they desire? They desire to teach this people the relative values of gold and silver. As long, sir, as silver is demonetized, as long as it is discarded by law, as long as it is no longer a legal tender for debts, as long as we do not recognize it as money by law, why of course its value will fluctuate as compared with any other metal that is recognized by law. Demonetize gold, provide by law that gold shall not be a legal tender, and what will be the result? It will fluctuate in the market just as silver does to-day. It will go up and down as compared with whatever is a legal standard, just as much as silver.

Now, sir, what is this commission to do? Travel abroad, the gentleman says, without pay, to ascertain what they may learn on the board at New York; what they may learn in London by telegraph in an instant. What attention will commerce pay to the going and coming of this commission? Will they establish the values? Will they control the values? Will they advise us what silver will be worth if it is a legal tender or what it will be worth if it is not a legal tender? For, sir, it occurs to me that all we desire to do, if we are willing to do that, is to provide that this silver shall be a legal tender, as it was a legal tender before the act demonetizing it was passed; and then by law its value will be fixed and it will again rise to very near par with the other precious metal.

I am not disposed to entirely disregard the value of information that may be gathered by commissions. We have had one learned commission traveling over our own continent since the sitting of the last session of this Congress. So far we have not had their report. When that is made, we may be enlightened to some extent about the relative quantities of silver this country has produced. But, as far as I know, when we have learned that, we will have acquired no knowledge that will be of any practical benefit to us. In my judgment, everything that looks to acknowledging that silver is not money, that silver is not a valuable metal with which we shall be allowed to pay our debts, is acknowledging that we must be compelled to pay in gold and not in silver; and for one I am not willing here or elsewhere to concede that. All these schemes, all these projects have in view the continued demonetization of silver.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. FORT. I would like to know by what right the gentleman from Maryland can take me off my feet and give the floor to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FORT. I thought I had the floor. I desire to raise the point of order—by what right the gentleman from Maryland can take me off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland made a motion to reconsider and had an hour. The gentleman from Maryland stated that he yielded ten minutes of his time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] which that gentleman occupied in whole or in part. Then he yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] was recognized in the hour of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FORT. I understood that the gentleman from Maryland abandoned the floor and that the Speaker recognized me.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I did not abandon the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed, and that the time he occupies be not taken out of the time of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] has the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I refuse anything of that kind. I have yielded to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the objections made to an international monetary conference will not prevail. In framing his objection yesterday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] reminded us of very old Chinese walls against outside barbarians, and in his argument he appealed to the highest statesmanship. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman's highest statesmanship on this question may be likened—I hope without the least offense—to the inconsiderateness of a man who should propose with one oar to row a boat up the rapids of the Niagara River or against a dead beating sea. We cannot cut the nerves and currents of the commerce of this continent and turn them back just as we come to the edge of the ocean. Our currency standard is inseparably connected with the commerce of the world, and any man here or elsewhere who hurries to accept a contrary opinion or to act upon a contrary opinion will find himself mistaken. At this very hour the experts of the world are studying with profound interest and care the necessity for holding an international monetary conference, while this House passed, pell-mell, eight or ten days ago, with scarcely an hour for debate, upon the whole subject, as if they understood it perfectly. And now here comes a perfectly reasonable, cautious, and statesman-like proposition from the Senate, which the great commercial powers of the world are in strict harmony with, for the appointment of a monetary commission, and it is proposed to dispose of it as we passed the silver bill the other day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for my part I do not understand how the Representatives of a commercial people like ours, whose relations to the commerce of all the civilized nations are vital and becoming every hour more intimate and important—I say I do not quite understand how it is that men of intelligence and sagacity come here and act upon such questions of vast import from blind prejudice. I appeal, Mr. Speaker, to the common sense and conscience of this House to meet this question with that manly respect it deserves. It does intimately connect with every commercial nerve and current of civilized commerce. At this moment the most eminent French experts, the most eminent commercial men of the English nation, and most eminent men of the German Empire, are intensely and deeply interested in the general subject. Unless we who compose this House of Representatives of the people of the United States are disposed and willing to trifle with one of the grandest questions which concerns the commerce of the world, this question of a new currency standard cannot be decided here without grave consideration. The conference proposed is eminently fitted to the exigency. Its purpose is clear; there is no trick about it; it simply proposes to call together the most eminent men to secure unity of action.

I have spoken, Mr. Speaker, with more earnestness and with more voice than I intended, but could not help it. I am perfectly amazed that anybody here is willing to trifle with a question so vast and far-reaching as this.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.]

Mr. BLAND. At the last session of this Congress, while this question was pending in this House, it was urged on the part of those opposing the remonetizing of the silver of this country that no action should be taken in this House until a commission had been raised to report upon that subject; and for the purpose of advising this House and the country as to the propriety of this measure, a commission was authorized by Congress, and that commission will be ready to report in a short time.

This is simply asking a little further delay and postponement. If this resolution is passed the opposition to remonetizing silver will ask us to wait until this commission has reported. Another objection to this resolution is that it seems an abdication on the part of Congress of its jurisdiction and discretion over this whole subject, and a transfer to the executive department. The resolution does not simply require this commission or authorize it, but leaves it in the discretion of the President of the United States to organize it or not, at his own free will.

This silver question has been debated for the last year, both in Congress and out of Congress, and after we have remonetized silver and taken the initiatory and shown a determination to go back and resume specie payments where we left off with the double standard, it will be time enough for this Government to ask a commission upon this subject.

Let us take a step as a nation first. Let us act upon our own responsibility on this question, and then ask other nations to comply with our reasonable demands. It is simply a question before the people of this country and other nations, whether one-half of the money of the world shall be stricken from circulation and values reduced one-half; whether a man who owes a hundred dollars and whose wages for his work amount to $100 a month, so that he can pay his debt by one month's work, shall be required to work two months to pay his debt because of the reduction of the value of labor induced from a scarcity of money, and whether that rule shall apply to all the debts of this nation. It is simply requiring a double amount of work or produce to pay the debts due in the civilized world. I hope this Government will act independently of foreign nations. We have had enough dictation from foreign powers upon this subject. Let us go back and remonetize silver. I believe it was at the instance of foreign emissaries that silver was demonetized.

The objection I have to this bill is that it involves the delay and postponement of this subject, when the people of this country are demanding action by this House and the other branch of Congress. And I will say that in my opinion that is the object of this joint resolution, to give some excuse, to afford some plea for stifling the voice of the people of this country. I stand here in opposition to any measure or any proposition that proposes to postpone the desire of the people of this country, and to continue to grind men into the dust at the dictation of monopolized capital. If the Senate desire to thus postpone action on the silver bill, let it not be said that this House has concurred with them in passing this resolution for that purpose. I hope this House will afford the Senate no opportunity of shifting upon us the responsibility of delay in this matter. This House passed the silver bill by over two-thirds majority. Let us stand by that record and demand that the Senate shall act upon it or take the sole responsibility of their non-action. We will not share any of the responsibility of their shortcoming by telling them to postpone the subject till all nations give their assent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONROE. With the consent of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] I would ask that the joint resolution be again read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have no objection if the time does not come out of my hour.

Mr. MONROE. The debate will go on more intelligently I think if the joint resolution be again read.

The joint resolution, as amended, was read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will merely say to the House that in my opinion this is not so important a joint resolution as the advocates of the silver standard would seem to indicate by their opposition to it this morning. As I take it, the proposition is in its nature merely an invitation for a conference of the scientific men of the world, so that we may arrive at some definite opinion in regard to the variation of value in the gold and silver currency of the world. It seems to me it would be the part of wisdom to invite a discussion of this character, which will throw light upon a question in regard to which it is agreed there is no one now able to speak with any direct authority. There are differences of opinion among men of the different nations of the world in regard to the propriety of making silver a standard of value.

At present in this country we have but a single standard, but an effort has been made by the bill which passed this House a few days ago to create a second standard; I might say a third standard, because the greenback is just about as much a standard of value as ever silver can be made. I have taken the opportunity which has been presented by the discussion of this joint resolution to endeavor to ascertain whether it would interfere in any respect with those who advocate the silver standard, if a conference of this kind were to take place. I have arrived at the conclusion that it would be decidedly for the advantage of all those who advocate a silver standard to have the light of the wisdom and experience of the world rather than that they should continue to stumble on year by year as they have done for the last few years in advocacy of what, at most, is but a phantom and a chimera.

I have inquired of the Director of the Mint and the superintendent of the coinage of this country in regard to his opinion upon this subject, and I have it in writing here before me. He states if there is to be a silver standard, then it becomes almost imperatively necessary, in order that the two standards may not vary and that money, whether in gold or silver, shall have equal value, that international legislation shall take place. That can only be accomplished by the concurrence of the different nations of the world.

My friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] suggested yesterday that the country should assume an independent attitude upon this subject. Sir, I will remind him that this country is just as subject to the action of the great nations of the world upon this question of gold and silver standards of value as it is in any matter of commerce. Indeed it may be safely asserted that the value of silver in this country today is only known when we know its price in the London market.

I do not think that, to say the least, there is any great impropriety in asking that this conference of the scientific men of the world should be had upon this question, so that we may have the benefit of their great experience. There is no bugaboo in this proposition that should startle every man who is an advocate of the rag-baby or of silver money. There is nothing here that will involve the resumption of specie payments either to-morrow or next year. It is merely saying that we would like a conference of this kind to assemble in order that those men who are in favor of the silver standard may be convinced of the impropriety and error of their way.

If they are unwilling to have this light, if they would rather go on as blind men stumbling in the dark until they bring upon this country dangers of which they have no knowledge, then let them vote down this joint resolution. For one, I propose that the question shall be presented fairly to the House, that there shall not be a snap judgment, as it were, taken upon it by men without a single idea either of the merits or demerits of this joint resolution. Therefore it is that I have invoked the discussion which has taken place upon the motion to reconsider.

Before I yield to others, I will ask the Clerk to read the letter from the Director of the Mint to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
January 9, 1876.

SIR: Your dispatch of current date, stating that Senate Resolution No. 16, providing for an international convention "to consider gold and silver coinage and the embarrassments growing out of their different values," has been reported by your committee, and requesting my views on the propriety of such conference, has been received.

The experience of the past clearly demonstrates that a double standard, which contemplates the concurrent use and circulation of gold and silver coins, with unrestricted coinage and unlimited legal tender, can be effectively maintained only through its adoption on a uniform basis or ratio by the principal countries of the world. If it be practicable to bring this about at all, it can be accomplished only through an international conference.

The subject is unquestionably one of sufficient importance to justify and require such a conference as soon as the same can be brought about.

Very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director of the Mint.

Hon. WILLIAM J. O'BRIEN,
Acting Chairman Committee Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In the absence of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] to whom I had proposed to yield, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I was very much surprised that the opposition to this resolution should have come from the same quarter as the advocacy of the Bland bill remonetizing silver. The advocates of that bill seem to think that this resolution is in some measure antagonistic to the proposition that silver shall be again made a legal tender. On the contrary, if silver is again to be made a legal tender in the United States, it is indispensable that there should be an agreement among the leading commercial nations of the world as to the relative value of gold and silver in order that the latter may maintain its position as legal tender. The reason is very obvious. If we alone undertake to give a definite value to 412.8 grains of silver and call it equal to a dollar in gold, when it is not worth so much, we must buy all the silver of all the rest of the world and sell all the gold which we now have or are likely to have in circulation.

Under these circumstances—because we are a silver-producing nation and because we want it to bring a good price—because we want to pay our debts with silver—it is indispensable that there should be an agreement among the commercial nations as to the ratio of convertibility between gold and silver.

Up to a very recent period there has been a double standard of value among all the nations of the globe, with the exception of England. But within five years Germany and the Scandinavian nations have discontinued the use of silver as a standard of value. As a consequence the value of silver has been disturbed, falling at one time to 47 pence per ounce and rising again to 58 pence per ounce. It is quite obvious that a metal which is undergoing these rapid fluctuations is unsuitable as a standard of value; and it is the opinion of every political economist who has studied this question that only by agreement among the commercial nations using gold and silver as money can we re-establish that stable ratio of exchangeability which for more than two hundred years has existed between gold and silver, and which is essential, if a double standard is sought to be established.

Now at the present time the leading advocates in Europe of the re-establishment of the double standard are Mr. Ernest Seyd and Mr. Henri Cernuschi. The latter gentleman, who is to-day in the city of Washington, is the most eminent and probably the most learned advocate now living of the remonetization of silver. And it is his mission here, as he has proclaimed it throughout Europe, to urge the necessity of bringing about this international conference in order, if possible, to come to some agreement as to the convertible value of gold and silver. It is in order that silver may be re-introduced, as it is possible it will have to be, into the commerce of the world as a standard of value that this conference is indispensable.

Gentlemen seem to fear that if these commissioners should be appointed they are going in some way to bind the United States to unprofitable engagements to sell out the interests of this country. Why, Mr. Speaker, the resolution on its face purports only to be what it is in reality; a proposition for a conference to ascertain whether an agreement can or should be brought about. Of course such an agreement, before it can be effectual, must be the subject of treaty between the nations concerned; and the whole matter will come before us in a definite and distinct form before it can be finally concluded. But before such treaty can even be initiated, it is absolutely indispensable that the various nations whose interests are bound up in this question (and none so much as the people of the United States, from the fact that they are to-day the great producers of silver and therefore want to have it assume a stable value) should arrive at some basis upon which the diplomatic negotiations may proceed, so as to reach an adjustment of this difficult question, which has disturbed the finances of England with reference to India and which has brought about in the East Indies a panic second only to that which we had in 1873. It is absolutely indispensable that the subject should be discussed in all its bearings and a conclusion reached in the shape of an advisory report, nothing more, which may make intelligent legislation possible in this country as well as throughout the civilized globe. In no other way can the objects aimed at by the advocates of the Bland silver bill be reached. The passage of this bill is essential to the success of their plans, if success be possible, and I am, as I said before, quite at a loss to comprehend the grounds of their opposition to a measure which looks to placing the continued use of silver as money upon a stable basis, by agreement among the leading commercial nations. Whether with such agreement the maintenance of a double standard of value is possible may well be doubted; but without such agreement it is surely impossible; and if the Bland bill should be enacted into a law, we shall simply put the United States in the same category with India and China, and step back two centuries in the march of progress.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I stated yesterday without elaboration my general objection to the passage of this resolution. The five minutes allowed me to-day will not permit me to enter at all into the general subject. I have listened to the reading of the pending proposition with some degree of interest and curiosity; and I have also listened to the distinguished gentlemen who have advocated it to hear the explanations which might be given of its purpose. The only explanation which has been offered to us is that of the chairman of the committee himself, who states the purpose of this commission to be to ascertain whether scientific men can devise a plan for reaching a standard based upon both gold and silver.

I have neither time nor opportunity to enter into a discussion of the question as to the practicability of this double standard. I will only say that in my view it would be just as practical and feasible a work for us to appoint a commission of scientific gentlemen to make corn and wheat invariably of the same value. Commerce regulates such questions. Commerce regulates the value of money. The relative value of gold and silver is controlled by the commercial interests of the world. The report of the Director of the Mint shows us in table 15 the relative value of gold and silver from 1760 to 1876. It also shows that the average relative value of gold and silver from the establishment of the money system of the United States in 1792, down to 1876, was about 1 to 15½—about the rate which we fix. Of course there have been some variations according to the exigencies of the times and the necessities of commerce; but this is the general rate. What we need to do is in the spirit of the Constitution to recognize gold and silver as the currency of the country, and let their value regulate itself.

If the object of this commission is to try to find scientific men who can make one standard of value of gold and silver, I advise the abandonment of it as utterly and hopelessly impracticable and never believed, so far as I know, by any theorist on the subject to be practicable.

I said that I did not understand this resolution. In the first place we invite the other powers of the world to propose a commission of this kind to us. That is the joint resolution which came from the Senate. Why we are advised to do so I am not informed. No member has informed us what induced us to invite the other powers to propose such a conference. The committee of this House, it seems to me with more dignity and propriety, have added to the joint resolution a provision proposing a commission by this country itself. A commission to do what? To discuss what? The joint resolution says to invite a conference or a convention to consider the important change which has recently occurred in the relative values of gold and silver, and the adoption of international measures for the removal of embarrassments arising therefrom. Which one of the changes that recently occurred is it proposed to investigate? Is it the manner by which the silver dollar of 412½ grains fell from over 100 to 98.86 from 1873 to 1874, falling to 96 cents in 1875, and still further in the first seven months of 1876 to 89 cents; or is it the change——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to allow me to finish my sentence.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. Or is it the other change by which its value sprang back to its original standard since the time of the introduction of this bill? Which of these changes is referred to?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I hardly know, sir, that anything which may be said touching the merits of this proposition will be addressed to a House in that mood which would lead them to give practical effect to suggestions on either side, and that, owing to the fact that prejudices have been brought into existence which, I think, have led to a misunderstanding both of the object and the purpose of this joint resolution.

What is it that is proposed? First, in view of the fact that foreign nations are considering this question with reference to an international conference, it authorizes this Government to meet them in such conference, if proposed by them, by three commissioners; and, second, by an amendment of the House yesterday it gives authority to this Government to invite such conference. That is the whole extent and scope of the joint resolution.

Is it worthy of consideration by this House? Is the House disposed to recognize that there is no interest in the world connected with the question of money in gold and silver except that limited between the two oceans and within the jurisdiction of the United States? Does the action of any foreign government affect the gold or silver product or the gold or silver value of the United States? I affirm, and I believe it is not denied, that the question cannot be separated from the action of other governments; that if the governments of Europe demonetize silver it throws a flood of foreign silver into this country that prostrates values beyond recovery for years.

Let me show gentlemen how it has operated, for I have made this subject a study for some eight years. The Latin union, so called, was created in Europe to save the silver-money interest of France and neighboring countries, and limiting the coinage to be produced to prevent one of those countries from flooding the other with silver, thus prostrating values. France demanded that conference and combination with other countries to save her bimetallic currency.

Now, the advocate most frequently quoted by gentlemen on this floor who passed the bill the other day, and whom I should not refer to by name had not the honorable gentleman from New York done so, Mr. Cernuschi, has advised gentlemen on this floor that the safety of the bimetallic system depends upon the co-operation of European nations with this country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen who say they are against the demonetization of silver come directly in conflict with historical precedent and the assurances of their own friend which have been recently made to numbers of us upon this floor.

Mr. BANKS. But why does the gentleman support it?

Mr. KASSON. I support it for the simple reason that it seeks to obtain that information for which we have been asking for months on this floor, namely, can you fix such a relative value between gold and silver as will prevent foreign nations from destroying the utility of our silver money by so cheapening it as to expel all gold from the country and make us the reservoir of all the refuse silver of Europe? I ask it still further, sir, for the reason that if we can establish that relative value in combination with other countries we are increasing the metallic currency of this country by adding silver to gold. The whole question hinges upon the establishment of such relations between gold and silver that we can adapt both the standards in this country. I avow myself for the resolution if that result can be obtained.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. MONROE. I am one of those who have accepted the arguments of the great writers in favor of a bimetallic standard; and in accordance with this result of my reflections upon the subject, I voted the other day for the restoration of the legal-tender silver dollar, believing, from all the information I then had before me, that with the buoyancy which the value of silver had recently exhibited in the market we could safely restore the dollar, expecting it to maintain its value, especially when we consider the additional firmness that would be given to that value by our own legislation.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel compelled because I am an advocate of the bimetallic standard to vote for that reason against this resolution. I deny the right of any gentleman to say that consistency requires of me, because I am a friend of the double standard, that therefore I must oppose this resolution. On the other hand, I fully expect that the result of the inquiries which a commission of this kind should make would be to restore silver to the favor of the civilized world as money. I expect that commission, when appointed, to be a fair one. I expect it to go out simply for the purpose of ascertaining the truth; and when the truth is attained, I expect it will be found favorable to the restoration of silver as a standard of value.

I do not understand the joint resolution which is now before the House as containing one word which is at all hostile to the restoration of silver as money. It speaks of silver in the same terms in which it speaks of gold. We have no more right to infer that the resolution is hostile to silver as a standard than to infer that it is hostile to gold. As a friend of the bimetallic standard, I shall give my vote for the resolution.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. During all the discussions which we have had on the silver question, I have held that under proper regulations and restrictions a silver currency could be maintained. It is becoming clearer to my mind every day that this can be safely done only by the concurrent action of several leading nations of the world. The pending resolution asks for such concurrent action, not to delay our legislation, but to lay before us an intelligible statement of the great leading facts as they exist in the different countries of the world in relation to this extremely important and interesting question, the relation of silver to gold. I hope this joint resolution will pass, and that we shall avail ourselves not only of this but of all other means of obtaining all the light we can upon the question.

I think I can contribute in one minute, if the House will allow me, something of value on this general question. I do not know that all of the members may have seen a very interesting and valuable letter written by our minister to France to the State Department a few weeks since, in which he states the case as it is now being argued in the legislative body of France. I ask that this letter may be printed in the RECORD for the information of members.

A MEMBER. Let it be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should be very glad to have it read, but there is not time to read it without unanimous consent. It shows the condition of the controversy at the present moment in the chief silver countries of the world.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the letter which he has indicated may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21.

Minister Washburne has sent to the State Department an interesting summary of the present status of the silver controversy in France. The following is the text of the paper:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, PARIS.

SIR: The rapid and growing depreciation of silver, which had for some time attracted the attention of the principal economists and financial men of Europe, is now becoming a matter of serious uneasiness to the governments that have the largest proportion of silver currency in the world. I mean America, France, Germany, and England, the last named for her Indian empire.

The question is of such vital importance, it threatens to assume such vast proportions, and is, in so many respects, connected with the measures at present under consideration in our country regarding the resumption of specie payments, that I have thought it would not be uninteresting to you to know how it is presented in Europe and what solutions the most competent French economists propose for a crisis whose consequences might prove disastrous for the whole commercial world.

The European states may be divided into two classes with regard to metallic currency: those which have adopted gold alone for their monetary standard, and those which use both a gold and a silver standard. The first are England, Germany, (the latter since the 1st of January only,) and Holland. It may be noticed, however, that while England recognizes no other legal standard than gold, her immense Indian empire has no other currency than silver. The second class comprises France, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, and Greece. To these we should, temporarily at least, add Germany; for though the German Empire has begun to withdraw its various silver coins, and has decided by law that on and after the 1st of January of the present year the gold mark shall be the only legal tender, it has, nevertheless, authorized, for an indeterminate lapse of time, the circulation of thalers.

Russia and Austria, which are both doomed to paper currency for a long time to come, need not be taken into consideration.

The bimetallic or double-standard system can evidently subsist but by the assumption of an unvariable ratio between the value of gold and that of silver. In France, that ratio was determined by a law of the year XI. (1803,) which is the basis of the French monetary system, and which established for the relative value of gold and silver the ratio of 1 to 15½. This means that to have in silver the equivalent of any given weight of gold we must multiply that weight by 15½.

The French ratio was successively adopted by the six above-named states, and during a long time the value thus settled underwent very slight variations. When gold was discovered in California, it was believed in Europe that this metal would suffer a certain depreciation, and various measures were resorted to in order to avoid the impending danger. Holland even went so far as to declare that gold should no more be a legal tender, but after a short perturbation the relative value of the two metals was brought back to its former state, and the ratio of 15½ to 1 remained unchanged.

It was not until 1867 that this ratio began to experience variations detrimental to silver and favorable to gold. Eighteen hundred and sixty-seven was the year of the universal exhibition at Paris. On that occasion an international monetary conference was held there, the great object of which was the investigation of the means of establishing monetary unity. The conference, in which nearly all the civilized countries, the United States among others, were represented, and to which men eminently skilled in financial matters had been called, gave a large majority in favor of the adoption of gold as the sole monetary standard. From that moment the value of silver began to decline. At first the depreciation was very slow and hardly perceptible, but by degrees it went on accelerating. In 1872 it was as yet but 2 per cent., in 1873 it had become 1 per cent. more. In the course of the latter year the French government, in hopes of preventing, or at least restraining, the further depreciation of silver, determined to restrict the coining of that metal. This measure, which was contrary to the spirit if not to the letter of the law of the year XI. (for till then any denizen had a right to send to the mint for coining as much metal as he chose,) produced an effect quite the reverse of what was expected; the value of silver continued declining, and in 1874 its depreciation with regard to gold was 4 per cent.

At that time other events took place which seem also to have essentially contributed to the depreciation of silver.

Germany, whose metallic currency had, up to 1870, been almost entirely limited to silver, finding herself after the conclusion of peace possessed of an immense capital, resolved to unify her monetary system and adopt gold as the sole standard. She therefore ordered that none of the foreign coins, of which a great number were in free circulation throughout the empire, should thereafter be a legal tender, called in the florins and other silver coins of Southern Germany and of the Hanseatic cities, decreed that on and after the 1st of January, 1876, the sole legal tender should be the gold mark, and coined gold pieces of ten and twenty marks, to the amount of 1,200,000,000. In order to complete this reformation, it would have been necessary to call in all the thalers then in circulation; but as their total amount is equal to 740,000,000 francs and as the sudden withdrawal of so great a mass of meta presents difficulties of all kinds, Germany has decided to accomplish it gradually, and has therefore retained the thalers as a legal tender, assimilating them, however, to gold pieces of three marks, and adopting for their value with regard to gold the ratio of 1 to 15½, accepted by the bimetallic States, so that every thaler, now worth three marks, weighs 15½ times as much as the three-mark gold piece.

Therefore, though adopting as a principle the monometallic system, and declaring the thaler to be a provisional currency, which is retained, but not allowed to be increased, Germany belongs de facto to the class of bimetallic states, since the thaler, or silver mark, and the gold mark are, in that country, exchangeable at par. The consequences of such a state of things were not slow to appear. As the value of silver abroad was everywhere declining, while it suffered no depreciation at home, the German bankers exported German gold to meet their payments in foreign countries, and kept the German silver for their liabilities at home, so that the government was obliged to buy and import its own gold, with which it paid for the silver called in, and then sell that same silver at a loss.

Such being the situation, all the bimetallic states had reason to fear that Germany might send to their mints the silver she withdrew from her own circulation, and which she could dispose of only at a heavy loss in London, the great mart of the precious metals of the world.

In fact, at that time, 1874, silver, which was then, and still is, a legal tender in France, Belgium, Italy, and Switzerland, could be coined to any amount in those countries. There was no law to prevent a French, a Belgian, an Italian, or a Swiss citizen from carrying to the mint all the silver he could obtain; the coining of it could in no case be denied him. It would, therefore, have been an easy matter for Germany to have her florins and thalers, which could not be advantageously disposed of in England or in the United States, converted into francs and lires, circulating at a par with gold. France hoped to avert this danger—if there was any danger in the case—by the formation of a monetary league, the object of which was to restrict the liberty of coining. This is what is known as the Latin Monetary Union. It was constituted in 1874 by a convention signed at Paris. These countries bound themselves not to produce during the year 1874 more than 120,000,000 of francs in silver coinage. Such an agreement was of reality nothing else than a step toward the adoption of gold as the sole standard, since the measure of precaution was against silver alone, while leaving the coinage of gold completely free.

The results of this measure, however, did not correspond to what its authors expected. The value of silver still declined, and at the end of 1874 it was 5 per cent. below par. In 1875 a second conference of the Latin Union fixed the limit of the coinage of silver in the four states at 150,000,000 francs for that year. Nevertheless the decline continued. It had reached 8 per cent. when the conference held its third meeting at the beginning of the present year. No other remedy was sought for than what had been attempted so far, and the amount of silver coinage was still further reduced for 1876. France was allowed to make five-franc pieces only to the amount of 54,000,000 francs instead of 75,000,000, which had been authorized in 1875; Italy, 36,000,000 francs instead of 50,000,000; Belgium, 10,800,000 francs instead of 15,000,000; Switzerland, 7,200,000 francs instead of 10,000,000. Greece, which had recently joined the Union, was authorized to coin 15,000,000 francs, of which 8,400,000 francs were allowed in the place of the old silver specie withdrawn.

This determination had scarcely been adopted when silver suffered a new decline much more rapidly this time than previously. In the space of two months it lost 3 and even 4 per cent., so that the difference between the commercial and the legal value of the metal reached 12 and 13 per cent.

Such was the state of things when the new chambers of France met. One of the first acts of the new minister of finances was to present a bill empowering the government to restrict the coinage of silver in so far as it might be deemed necessary, or, in other words, not to avail itself to the full extent of the right granted to France by the monetary convention. It must be observed, in fact, that while the convention established a maximum amount of coinage, it establishes no minimum, and that in 1874 and 1875 France coined the maximum allotted to her only because her laws did not allow her to do otherwise.

The object of the bill introduced by Mr. Léon Say is to alter this state of things; it was brought before the senate on the 21st of this month, and gave rise to a long and interesting debate, in which Mr. De Parieu, a man eminent by his special knowledge of monetary matters, attacked the principle of the double standard vigorously, while Mr. Roland, governor of the Bank of France, with marked ability, defended it. The bill will certainly pass, but the question now is whether the new law will produce the result expected from it. When France has completely stopped coining silver, will the depreciation of this metal be prevented thereby, or even partially checked? It is, at least, doubtful.

On this highly important question two essentially distinct doctrines are entertained by the financial men and economists of Europe.

On one side stand the monometallists, or champions of gold as the sole monetary standard; on the other, the bimetallists, or supporters of the old system of the double standard. Among the former are Messrs. Louis Bamberger, of Berlin; Max Wirth, of Vienna; Frère Orban, of Brussels; Feer Herzog, of Berne, and in France, Michel Chevalier, De Parieu, Victor Bonnet, Frédéric Passy, and Leroy Beaulieu. Their principal organs are, in London, the Economist; in Paris, the Journal des Débats and the Économiste.

On the other side are Messrs. Malon, minister of finances in Belgium; Laveley and Allard, of Brussels; Count Sclopis, of Turin; Léon Say, Magne, Wolowsky, André, Courcelle-Seneuil, and Henri Cernuschi, of France. The principal organs of this group are the Siècle and the République Francaise.

The theory of the monometallists may be summed up as follows: The first cause of the perturbation now prevailing in the monetary market is the superabundant production of silver. The mines of the New World, by pouring in upon us tons of this metal at the very time when the coinage of silver is restricted in almost every country, have produced such a difference between its value and that of gold that the balance is irretrievably destroyed. Every attempt, moreover, to maintain a constant ratio between the values of the two metals, both of which are subject to so many causes of variation, must always prove utterly useless. There exists but one remedy of real efficacy for the state of things created by the bimetallic system. We must completely abandon that system and adopt gold as our sole monetary standard. On that condition only we shall be able to extricate ourselves from the dangers and difficulties of two metallic standards legally exchangeable at par, though one of them is much more abundant than the other, and at the same time very bulky.

To these arguments, which the very able economist of the Journal des Débats, Mr. Leroy Beaulieu, advances with great force, and which M. de Parieu presented in the senate with all the authority of his long experience in financial matters, the bimetallists oppose the following answer:

It is not the superabundant production of silver that has caused the perturbation; it is the limitation of the coinage of silver, a measure almost equivalent to total suppression, and the withdrawal of a great part of the silver coin already existing. Silver having lost the principal use to which it has always been applied, remains partly unemployed, and its depreciation increases as the demand for it goes on decreasing. The total adoption of the monometallic system, far from improving the present state of things, would do nothing but aggravate it, and infallibly result in a fearful financial catastrophe. To extricate ourselves from these difficulties, we should, on the contrary, hasten to retrace our steps and restore silver to its natural destination, by repealing all measures restricting its coinage. So soon as the great powers, resuming the bimetallic system fully, shall decree that the coinage of gold and silver is unlimited, and that the two metals shall always be exchangeable at a rate established once for all—that of 15½ for 1, for instance, which is already generally accepted—there will be no more fluctuations in the relative value of gold and silver. As the two metals will constitute but one monetary mass, the greater or less quantity produced by the mines of either of them can then affect only the total mass. The purchasing power of this mass may increase or diminish, according to its greater or less abundance, but gold and silver, whatever may be the quantity of either, will retain their relative value, since the one will always be the representative of the other.

This theory is certainly very attractive, and it has found in Mr. Henri Cernuschi a most ardent, indefatigable, and ever-ready advocate. In the daily notes, which he published in the Siecle, as well as in a multitude of pamphlets that are immediately translated into English and German, this bold and original economist defends the double-metallic standard by arguments which I cannot undertake to reproduce in this summary, but which certainly deserve the serious attention of all who take an interest in the question.

Among the considerations invoked by the bimetallists two are certainly of special importance. The first is that every measure restricting the coinage of silver has immediately been followed by a decline of the metal. The fact is undeniable; but it may be a mere coincidence, and not a consequence. It is possible that silver would have declined even if its coinage had not been restricted. The bimetallists here merely invert the argument of the monometallists, who say that the coinage was restricted for the very reason of the decline of silver. The second consideration bears on the enormous perturbations that would infallibly follow the general application of the monometallic system. In order to accomplish it, it would, in fact, be necessary to withdraw from circulation an enormous quantity of metal. What, for example, would be the amount of it for France, Germany, and British India alone?

In France, from 1795 to 1871 inclusive, silver has been coined to the value of 5,122,000,000 francs. Of these, 236,000,000 have been withdrawn by government, and it is estimated that of the balance only 1,200,000,000 to 1,500,000,000 in five-franc pieces still exist in France, of which 495,000,000 are at present in the vaults of the bank. Suppose 400,000,000 be kept for small payments and as change, from 800,000,000 to 1,100,000,000 will be left for withdrawal.

In Germany, according to official statements published in Berlin, the total amount of the silver coined by the different German states before 1871 was £68,000,000 sterling. The silver still circulating amounts to £21,000,000; thus leaving a balance of £47,000,000. Suppose about £17,000,000 to have disappeared by exportation or melting, there would remain £30,000,000 sterling, or 750,000,000 francs, to be withdrawn.

For India we have no statistics. It is generally supposed that the circulation of that country amounts to £150,000,000, which is not at all extraordinary when we consider that the population of India is seven times that of Great Britain, and that gold coin is unknown in the country. In India alone the sum to be withdrawn would, therefore, be as much as 1,500,000,000 or 2,000,000,000 of francs, so that the total amount to be called in would be at least 3,500,000,000 of francs; that is, $700,000,000 rendered useless as a currency, and of which the government would have to dispose at an enormous discount. The bare mention of these figures is sufficient to give an idea of the crisis that would take place in the whole world as a consequence of so gigantic an operation as that recommended by the monometallists.

I shall not undertake to discuss and still less to propose a solution for the great monetary problem now impending over the world. I hope, however, that this summary of the question, perhaps too long extended, may be of some utility in helping you to a clearer understanding of the manner in which it is viewed in France.

I have, &c.,

E. B. WASHBURNE.

Mr. O'BRIEN. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. There are three minutes of the morning hour remaining and eight minutes of the gentleman's hour.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield the three minutes remaining of the present morning hour to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. LANDERS.]

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. The question now under consideration is, will the House reconsider its action in refusing to pass the joint resolution providing for a joint commission to consider the question of the relative value of gold and silver? We had a commission, Mr. Speaker, appointed at the last session of Congress to inquire into this question. If this House or the country is any wiser because of the appointment of that commission, I am not aware of it. The opposers of silver as money, being unable any longer to find men to report in favor of their policy of demonetizing silver in this country in the interest of bondholders, now seek to have a conference with the holders of our bonds in foreign countries in order that they may get a report in their favor. It is said, Mr. Speaker, that these men will act without compensation. That convinces me that I have always been right in my conjecture that there is a conspiracy between the holders of our bonds in this and other countries against silver. If gentlemen are willing to go to foreign countries to consider this question without pay they have some private interest to subserve. That is evident; nothing can be clearer.

If gentlemen will consider a moment they will remember that Germany, as well as this country, has been taught a bitter lesson in regard to the disadvantages arising from the demonetization of silver, and that public sentiment in that country is now tending, as in this, toward its remonetization. If we send a commission of our wise men (of course the President would appoint such) to Europe, whom would they consult? Would it be the business men and the laboring classes who have been well-nigh ruined by the demonetization of silver there as here, or would it be the money kings and bondholders, through whose schemes, there as here, the demonetization of silver was brought about? The President is, according to this resolution, to appoint the commissioners. Can there be any doubt as to whom he would appoint? I defy any man on this floor to point to a single act of Congress relating to financial matters passed during Grant's administration that has not been in the interest of the bondholders and against the people.

The people, Mr. Speaker, have spoken out upon this question. In my State, in Indiana, there is no party to-day that raises its voice against silver as money. No man has been elected to the next Congress from Indiana who did not boldly avow himself in favor of remonetizing silver. It is no party question. There can be found no party to oppose it in Indiana. It is a settled question there.

I am gratified that this House fully understands this question. It is useless to discuss it longer before this House. The manner in which they have always acted upon the question shows that they understand it.

If the Senate will pass the bill passed by this House a short time ago making the silver dollar a full legal tender, and authorizing its coinage by our mints, more than $50,000,000 a year will be coined and enter into circulation without any cost to the Government, stimulating to some extent our paralyzed industries. Mr. Speaker, I have witnessed the persistent efforts of the bondholders' advocates on this floor to bring about a change in the standard silver dollar. When we consider that the law of 1870 authorizing the issue of $1,500,000,000 of bonds to refund the public debt provides for their payment in coin of the standard value as it then existed, it is easy to see why this effort is made to change the standard. This, Mr. Speaker, is manifestly nothing more than a flank movement to give the Senate a pretext to refuse to carry out the will of the people as expressed by this House in its bill to remonetize silver. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that his House will not furnish the Senate with any such excuse.

The best way to bring about the relative value of gold and silver as established by the law of 1837 is to remonetize silver, for the value of these metals depends chiefly upon their use as money among civilized nations. The sooner this fact is recognized and acted upon the better it will be for the nation at large. Silver is one of our greatest products, and it is to the interest of the people of this country to have silver used as money throughout the civilized world. To encourage others to use it we should use it ourselves. In regard to the argument advanced by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN,] and so often used by others, that our money should conform to the money of other nations, there is nothing in it whatever. It is a pure fallacy. Our money, whether gold or silver, is a commodity as soon as it leaves our shores, and the same is true of the coin of any other nation as soon as it leaves its boundaries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] rises to call up the special order.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to yield to me for one moment. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have passed a joint resolution for the purpose of having immediately bound the reserve copies of the compilation in regard to counting the electoral vote, in order that members may have their bound copies now instead of at the end of the session. It will only take a moment and will cost nothing.

Mr. SINGLETON. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth the reserve and stitched copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes and requires the Public Printer to bind in cloth, at the earliest time practicable, for the use of the two Houses of Congress, the stitched and reserve copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote, except such copies as are required for distribution to public libraries.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire how these copies are to be distributed?

Mr. SPRINGER. Pro rata among the members under the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that the law? And how about the distribution to public libraries?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not disturbed at all.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CAULFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The question pending before the committee was upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] which is as follows:

That from and after the 30th day of June, 1877, embassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, and ministers resident shall be entitled to the salaries following, namely:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, $15,000 each; to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, $10,000 each; to Chili and Peru, $10,000 each.

Ministers resident accredited to Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and the Argentine Republic, $6,000 each.

Minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua, to reside at such place in either of said states as the President may select, $8,000.

Minister resident and consul-general to Hayti and Liberia, $4,000 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I have submitted almost all the views which I desire to submit on this subject. I wish only to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment is substantially the same as the provisions on this subject in the bill which passed the House at the last session of Congress, except that the bill which passed at the last session fixed the salaries of ministers of the first class, to England, France, Germany, and Russia, at $14,000, while this amendment fixes the salaries of those ministers at $15,000. In all other respects this provision is the same for all these diplomatic officers as the bill which passed at the last session.

I ought to add that if $14,000 was deemed sufficient for a minister of the first class, $10,000 for a minister of the second class, and $6,000 for a minister of the lowest class last session, nothing certainly has occurred since then to warrant a change of opinion; indeed, the condition of the country now more imperatively demands economy than it did then.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I am called upon to differ with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, nor do I differ with him now in the abstract views which he presents upon this amendment.

Members of this House will remember that at the last session of Congress I advocated the reduction of the salaries of first-class ministers at $14,000. It will be further remembered that during that session the question was very fully discussed in this House and in the Senate, and after several conferences a bill was agreed upon between the two Houses. The ground taken by the Senate was that this House should not be permitted to change an existing law by an amendment to an appropriation bill, and, as I stated in my opening remarks, we had four committees of conference on that question. The Senate declined to yield anything on that point, and at last the House yielded in part, only reserving the right to fix the sum to be appropriated in gross for the carrying on the diplomatic service.

Now, sir, I am quite sure that the Senate have not undergone any change of opinion upon that question, and gentlemen upon the other side of this House now manifest a determination to adhere to their expressed opinions on the subject.

In view of these facts, and in view of the further fact that a new Congress is to come in shortly, when this whole subject can be considered, it was deemed advisable by the Committee on Appropriations, by a unanimous vote, to report the bill as it now stands before the House.

My friend from Indiana has thought proper, notwithstanding that report was made without a dissenting vote in committee, to offer an amendment to change the salaries of these ministers. I take the ground that after the report was made to this House under instructions from that committee, the gentleman of Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] consenting thereto, it is not quite respectful to the committee to be now making war upon that report.

It was deemed best to report the bill substantially as it passed the House at the last session, that it might go through with as little opposition as possible. I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that if this debate goes on it will consume much time and involve a greater expenditure of money than would be saved to the Government, even if the amendment should prevail. There is no statesmanship in such a course, and the country will have no occasion to thank us for it.

I speak advisedly when I say that the Senate will not recede from its position, and it is evident that gentlemen upon the opposite side of this House are not inclined to do so, and I can therefore see no practical good that can possibly result from this amendment; but on the contrary nothing but humiliation, as it will involve the necessity of our again backing down from the position we have assumed. While, therefore, I believe that these salaries might be reduced and am in favor of that reduction, I do not think this an opportune moment to attempt this reduction.

We shall soon have grave matters before us, which will give rise to much debate, and there are only eight weeks of the session remaining. If we adopt the amendment, we shall probably have several committees of conference with the Senate, and the delay and consequent expense would be of greater value to the country than the amount which would be saved to the Treasury. The bill in its present form will save $50,000 in addition to last year's reduction of $225,000, and I think this should be satisfactory to my friend from Indiana.

I hope therefore that the House will pass the bill as it comes from the committee, and let us give our time to the consideration of other appropriation bills yet to be passed, that the ship's deck may be cleared for other battles soon to come off. The country expects this of us. Let us not disappoint their hopes and expectations.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of stating that this amendment is substantially, with one exception, the same as provided in the bill which in the first instance was passed by the House at the last session of Congress. The bill as it then passed had been very carefully prepared by the Committee on Appropriations, and I can now see no reason for departing from the standard of diplomatic compensation which was then fixed. We departed from it at that time not because we thought we had placed these salaries too low, but from the necessity under which we then labored by reason of the demands of the Senate to increase our appropriations for this purpose.

The change proposed by this amendment from the bill as it passed at the last session of Congress is this: the compensation of our ministers to England and to other first-class powers is fixed by the amendment at $15,000 a year, instead of $14,000 as proposed by the bill. With that exception this amendment will make this bill the same as the one which was first passed by the House at the last session of Congress.

It is said that we are now proposing to fix these salaries at random or in the dark. It might as well be said that they were fixed in that way at what they now are, because a few years ago they were even less than now; and yet we then secured the very best talent in the country to represent this Government abroad. By the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] we propose to give these officials a much larger compensation than is paid to other officials of this Government who perform much more service, and who live in places where their expenses are much greater than are the expenses of our ministers abroad.

In addition to that, if members will look at the list of expenses of these officials abroad they will find that for all these courts there is provided a contingent fund amounting to from $3,000 to $8,000 a year, which covers all the expenses to which their offices are subjected. Everything pertaining to those offices, even the newspapers served upon their tables in the morning, is paid for out of the contingent fund; so that all the salaries appropriated here go into the pockets of the ministers themselves. They are not required to pay the expenses for rent, clerk hire, or anything of the kind.

If a Cabinet officer in the city of Washington, who has as many calls upon his resources as any minister abroad, can serve the Government for $8,000 a year, I cannot see by what rule we should be required to pay our ministers abroad $17,500 a year in gold. Believing, therefore, that the compensation proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is ample, that it is much in excess of the compensation paid to other officers of the Government, I hope it will be adopted by this committee.

THE MORRISON TARIFF BILL.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have secured the floor for a purpose in the execution of which I trust that I shall be indulged. That purpose is to discuss in this connection the tariff bill, known as the Morrison bill, now standing, if I mistake not, under another order upon the Calendar of this Committee of the Whole House. I shall do so not only because under the rule and the practice I may, but also because such discussion will be pertinent to the immediate proposition before us, for the reason that the subjects of public expenditures and of public revenues are inseparable, and for the further reason that both the tariff and the diplomatic and consular service for which you are providing are each instruments affecting the trade of the United States with other countries.

I have been led to apprehend from indications that I have seen that this tariff bill will be called up for action at no distant day of the session, and fearing that no better opportunity will occur, I seize upon the present to express myself with regard to it. It infolds within its provisions so much that would be disastrous to the interests of the district which I have the honor to represent, and as I believe of the whole country—it is so perfectly indefensible as a measure of statesmanship from the stand-point of any interest that is truly American—that I feel that I should do less then I ought did I fail, even under the present circumstances of disadvantage, to raise my voice in argument and in protest against it.

What, sir, is this bill as it stands now upon your Calendar? Its title asserts that it is "a bill to revise and simplify existing laws imposing duties on imports, and to reduce taxation." A seductive title truly, but a misnomer. Sir, I assert that this proposed measure instead of reducing taxation would increase it; that it would put in operation an oppressive system of raising revenues, and that it would eliminate from the law the chief result that justifies the custom-house, to wit, the encouragement of home industry. It revises but with the sole aim of a tariff for revenue only. It is confessedly an anti-protective measure, and is a blow directed, unwittingly no doubt so far as its ostensible author is concerned, against the prosperity and general good of the whole country. Should the blow fall many of the leading industries will be crushed, all will be injured, and the fingers that have registered the advancement, the grand advancement of the last decade and a half, will be turned back by the shock to the first poor figures upon the dial. It would rerivet the almost loosened chain of our industrial vassalage to other peoples; it would help to make our country that which it was the life labor of Lord Brougham and many of his compeers to make it, a dependency upon the mills and the factories and the ships of England; it would be the confession that the wisdom and valor which achieved political independence one hundred years ago has degenerated into the stupidity and unmanliness which now refuses to grasp material independence also.

But, sir, I did not take the floor to characterize or to indulge in general expressions of the disaster that would wait upon the footsteps of this legislation. I have stated my view of the bill and I purpose now to justify what I have said of it by a discussion of its merits. In doing this I shall speak of it first as a measure of revenue and second as a measure operating upon the industrial interests of the country. I hope in this course to make conclusive reply to the mistakes of philosophy and of fact which have served for argument in the mouths of gentlemen who urge the justice and propriety of this bill.

As a measure of revenue I believe, as I have intimated, that while it as a whole decreases the rates of impost duties it will ultimately increase very largely the sum total of taxation, and that it directly violates the only just and equitable principle of levying taxes. If this be true it is enough to condemn the proposition. Let us see. I have in my hand a statement furnished to me by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, setting forth in detail the operation of this bill upon the revenues, which, with the permission of the House, I will append to my remarks in the RECORD. It shows that this bill takes off duties upon certain articles to the amount of $12,909,116.21 and adds to certain other articles duties to the amount of $1,520,699.63, making a net decrease of $11,388,416.58 per annum. This, it should be observed, is upon the basis of importations for the last fiscal year. To judge truly of the effect of the bill upon taxation we must comprehend its operation upon importations. With the closing up of some industries and the decrease in production of many others, which as I shall show would result from this legislation, the volume of foreign goods coming into our ports would be so largely swelled to meet the demands of the people that an increase of taxation would result. The increase of importations must so largely exceed the decrease of rates that the amount of taxation will be equal to a large percentage of the total expenditures of the people.

The revenues would be swelled, but it would be at the expense, as I will undertake to demonstrate before I sit down, of the vital energies of the country, and would put into operation a most unjust and unjustifiable system of taxation. Why unjust and unjustifiable I can in a word point out. Under a tariff purely for taxation, such as this bill closely approximates, duties must be so low as to give to the foreign producer the full control of American markets, for upon imports depend revenues, and they must not be interfered with by suggestions of home production contained in a high tariff. No distinction is made between articles which we do and articles which we do not produce, nor between things of luxury and things of necessity. Hence the rich who consume the luxuries are required to contribute no more to our national exchequer than do the less fortunate of the people who purchase only the necessary and useful articles of life, the proportion of purchases being considered. The tinware that is indispensable in the kitchens of the farmer and the workingman will be taxed equally with the silver that glistens on the sideboards of the palace, and tea and coffee, the sole luxury and real necessity of the humble, must pay tribute just as surely as do the costly wines which none but the affluent can afford. I mention tea and coffee, although not taxed by this bill, but as taxable under the principle which, with these exceptions, is almost completely embodied in this proposition. A tariff, therefore, purely for revenue, which your Committee of Ways and Means propose to approximate so closely as that its chief results shall be realized, is a tax—not on wealth, the only just basis of taxation—but it is a tax upon hunger, a tax upon necessity, a tax upon the constantly-recurring wants of human kind; and I declare it to be wrong. I pronounce it to be unjust, because through it the burdens of taxation would fall as heavily upon the poor as upon the rich, and I pronounce it to be unwise because it fails to discriminate in favor of the products of American skill and the fruits of American soil. These in the briefest words are the reasons which lead me to believe that this bill will operate to increase taxation and to impose that taxation, by an unjust and oppressive system, reasons which ought to be sufficient to defeat it without further scrutiny.

The most serious phase, however, of the questions presented is not whether this bill will increase or diminish taxation or whether it rests upon a just principle of raising revenues. The most important consideration is the effect it would have upon the leading industries of the country. I say leading industries without words of limitation, for although a part only are directly attacked there is no branch of labor that will not be injured by it. Of those directly affected I cannot of course undertake to specify all the changes proposed throughout an almost interminable schedule. It is not necessary, for gentlemen have the bill before them. I can much more briefly and to equal advantage speak of the chief articles affected in groups. Manufactures of iron, steel, hemp, flax, wool, and cotton, and in some instances the raw material, are to suffer a reduction averaging about one-third of the present duty, while in other instances articles which we do not and cannot produce in this country are to be taken from the free and placed upon the taxable list. What will be the result of this to the interests represented? Sir, I assert that the changes proposed would close every blast-furnace in the United States, would shut every rolling-mill and empty half the coal-mines, would render profitless the growing of wool and of flax, and would discourage into abandonment of their pursuits a large percentage of those who are now engaged in the manufacture of woolen and flax goods. Do I exaggerate in what I say? That must depend entirely upon the question whether the profit realized by the domestic producer is greater or less than the reduction of duties proposed by this bill. The difference in cost between home and foreign production is made up by the cheaper labor, the cheaper capital, measured by interest rates, and in some instances also by superior artificial facilities enjoyed in countries older and richer than ours. In natural resource the advantage is with us. Taking, however, into account every factor, it stands demonstrated as a truth, by figures and by experience, that the Englishman and the Frenchman can put their wares into our markets at prices less than the cost of manufacture here, which difference it is the aim of the existing tariff to cover. To take off, therefore, a part of existing duties, if that part be in excess of profits to the manufacturer, would annihilate the industry undefended against foreign competition. What are the facts as to the ones I have mentioned? Let us see:

The reduction proposed upon pig-metal is to be from $7 to $5 per ton, and upon merchant iron, nails, &c., in about the same proportion. It will be recollected that last spring it was known that evidence was given before the Committee of Ways and Means that in the iron regions of Pennsylvania furnaces were yielding in no case a profit exceeding $1 per ton, and oftener were running at an absolute loss, while rolling-mills were doing no better. The evidence of this was so abundant that even the free-traders here did not controvert it. The same was true of the section that I represent—the Mahoning and Tuscarawas Valleys in Ohio. Letters addressed to me in reply to inquiries that I made of leading iron men in those valleys show by day-book and ledger that at that time not a single furnace or a single rolling-mill in that region was yielding an appreciable profit, and that some were running at a loss to work up stock on hand, while many had gone out of operation. I might quote from these letters, but it is unnecessary. This, as I said, was some months ago, but matters are no better now, except perhaps that there is something more of a demand. The published quotations then and now show no sensible advance in prices. That this is true, no man informed upon the status of the iron industry will honestly question. Now, sir, I submit that, with the furnaces and iron mills of the country turning out their products in some instances at a loss, and in no case at a profit of one-half of the reduction proposed, this legislation would fill our markets with foreign iron, darkening every furnace and silencing every rolling-mill between the two oceans. It would be inevitable unless, with the advent of free trade into the policy of our laws, human nature shall suffer a change so that men will consent to waste fortunes in producing an article at a cost greater than its selling price.

Upon wools and manufactures of wool, the effect would be only a little less destructive. The value of the fleece, the demand for mutton, the peculiar value of sheep-grazing to renew the energies of the soil, well understood by intelligent farmers, have caused so large a number of people to engage in the avocation of Abel that it is a leading branch of American husbandry. Over $60,000,000 are realized yearly to our farmers from wools alone, and a very considerable sum, I do not know how much, is realized from sheep for slaughter. It is a source of wealth which must not be ruined. But this bill would ruin it. It proposes to reduce the tariff on wools, averaging the reduction in the various classes about 50 per cent., or one-half of the present duty. This would cheapen foreign wools and by consequence domestic wools also so greatly that wool-growing must cease to be a profitable business. It must as a great industry go down. The looms of the country will then be supplied with wools from the fields of Canada, the plains of Australia, and the steppes of the La Plata, where land is as cheap as it is boundless, and peon labor an inconsiderable item of cost. Will this inure to the advantage of the wool-manufacturers of the country? Not at all. The home demand will not be increased by a cheaper fabric, and, as about the same ratio of reduction is proposed on the finished goods, in which there is a larger amount of labor than in the raw material, the total of the result will be against them. The consumption of woolen and mixed goods in the United States amounts to $240,000,000 annually, nearly five-sixths of which is supplied by home manufacturers. It is an immense interest, involving immense capital, and is entirely the creature of protection. Now, if you reduce the duty on wool you not only take money out of the pocket of the farmer directly, but by driving him into other branches of his industry you place the manufacturer at the mercy of the foreign wool-grower for his raw material, while you lessen the prices of his fabrics to the extent of the reduction upon them. The foreign wool-grower can then with impunity advance the price of wools until our farmers once more engage in its production and then by dropping down to old prices again render his flocks valueless. Thus you not only destroy the wool-growing interest, but you place the manufacturer and the consumer entirely at the mercy of foreign greed. I submit that it would be disastrous to the great wool-growing and wool-manufacturing interests of the country and without advantage to consumers to legislate as proposed in this bill.

I have not time, sir, in the course that I propose to pursue to speak specifically of other interests comprehended in the groups of chief industries affected. The spinning and weaving of cotton, the culture of flax and the manufacture of flax goods, the coal, copper, and other interests, would each in various degrees be injured by the operation of causes similar to those I have mentioned in the matters of iron and wool. And here I beg to be allowed for a moment to step aside to repeat that which I have so often heard from the lips of intelligent manufacturers and others, that what they and the country most need is stability, permanency, something upon which they may rely as abiding. While the present rate of duties upon leading commodities is so low as to admit most freely of foreign competition upon something like terms of equality, they do not ask for change in their favor, and insist that their industries cannot survive if a change is made against them. The possibility of frequent changes of policy upon economic questions is a disadvantage in our system; a disadvantage which carries compensation in the means of escape from existing evils, but a disadvantge nevertheless. It is not to be expected that enterprise will take that scope or feel that vigor, confronted with the liability of radical change each four years, that it would, could the assurance exist that a present policy would abide so that men might be certain to reap from their sowing. Men will not build mills and factories with so liberal a hand, knowing that a shift in the political weather-vane may result to flood the country with cheaper wares than they can produce, as they would do if this possibility were more remote. This disadvantage—necessary disadvantage in our system, may be greatly mitigated, if men called to make the laws would educate themselves up to a higher sense of the importance to every interest of permanence in the economic policies of government.

This bill is wrong not only because it reduced duties where it should not, but also because it imposed taxation upon articles that should remain upon the free list. The most conspicuous instance of this, as I have already stated, is the proposed duty of 3 cents per pound on tin. This metal of almost universal use, of value in the mechanic arts, of indispensable worth in every humble household, has not yet been found to exist in paying quantities in this country. Our tin comes to us from over the sea. Its mining is not, and I fear never will be, an American industry. A duty upon it will therefore be a tax, and nothing more—a tax heavy handed to the poor and of gentle touch to the rich. It would be an outrage upon the people, and an assault upon justice in the principle of taxation.

In the original, for which this bill is a substitute, tea and coffee were to be taxed—the former 15 cents, and the latter 3 cents per pound. The substitute leaves tea and coffee upon the free list, but I understand that the sense of the House is to be taken on taxing them by a vote upon an amendment. Not only tin, which is only found in minable quantities in Cornwall and in India, and, perhaps in a few other places foreign to us, but tea, which can only be successfully cultivated in the valleys of Japan and of the Flowery Kingdom, and coffee, which only grows in the perpetual solstice of far-away countries, have become to be necessaries to the people. Since the fathers rebelled in part because of the tea tax the people have looked upon a tax upon tea and coffee as a kind of sumptuary legislation, intolerably odious, and they are right in doing so. These things are necessaries of life, the production of which is not and never can be a home industry, and they should therefore go to the people untaxed. How plainly in the proposition to tax tin and tea and coffee is exhibited the smearing finger-prints of the importer and of men of the fortunate classes, who want to fill the Treasury with such larcenous pickings from the tables and kitchens of the farmers, the mechanics, and the operatives of the country? But we have been told, and no doubt shall be told again, that the President has twice recommended a restoration of the duty upon tea and coffee. So much the worse for the President and his ill-advised advisers in this. Apropos of this there occurs to me a scrap of history which exposes the mistake which gentlemen make when they urge that the restoration of this duty will not increase prices. Sir, I remember, and others here will remember, that immediately after the executive recommendation to this effect three years ago a number of speculators, in anticipation of an advance in prices, bought up a large part of the tea and coffee in bond and afloat likely to come into port before the law should become operative, and that when a few weeks later the then Committee of Ways and Means determined not to follow the President's recommendation these gentlemen came trooping down here to the capital to reverse, if possible, the action of the committee, proclaiming it to be a swindle upon them that the tea and coffee tax was not imposed. They had purchased, however, and prices had to be and were advanced to save them from loss. I speak of this because it is the testimony of sagacious men to the fact that the imposition of a duty will surely be followed by an increase of price. It is the consumer in every instance who must pay for every factor that enters into the cost of a commodity, and a duty on tin or tea or coffee will as surely advance the prices of these things as would an advance in the price of labor in the country where produced or in the cost of transporting them to us. The theory that the tax will come out of the Cornishman, the Chinaman, and the Dons of the Antilles, is absurd. Gentlemen advance some theory about forcing down the cost of production, based upon the necessity of the working-man for employment and of the employer for a market. It is a mistake. The cost of production is a fixed quantity, and the price to the consumer is the only movable part in the machine of demand and supply. It is that which must yield to the pressure created by an increase in prime or intermediate cost. Good sense and every scrap of human experience sustains what I say.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having thus briefly pointed out the practical bad effect and injustice of this bill in its most prominent features, I wish to discuss for a few moments the merit of the principle, as an idea in political economy, by which your committee seem to have been guided in framing it.

I said in the beginning of my remarks that this was an anti-protective measure, a statement that will not be questioned by its friends. It is so because, as I have shown, it reduces duties upon leading articles of domestic supply to a point less than the existing difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, plus the expense of transportation. This will shut out the home producer and insure the supply of our markets from abroad. It is therefore, in its results upon the industries of the country, identical with free trade. For this I denounce it as wrong in principle and disastrous in practice to the best interests of the country.

Self-preservation is nature's first law. To take care of ourselves and have a care for the future is a natural duty applicable equally to individuals and to nations. In this natural duty the principle of protection takes root. It is the inspiration of a comprehensive prudence exalted above selfishness, for through it the largest good may be realized to the largest number. Men may talk cosmopolitism in legislation upon trade, but they would feed a few abroad at the expense of many at home. They may dilate upon the beauties of an untrammeled law of demand and supply between nations, but they would strangle that law among their own people. They may go into rhapsody upon the virtues of an unselfish policy toward other countries, but, at the sacrifice of generosity to their own, they universalize unselfishness, spreading it out so thin that it becomes a gossamer and then dissolves into vagary. There is no subject in the whole range of political science upon which there has been more refinement of reasoning to cheat common sense than this. Still the broad truth is not hidden that the natural obligation to take care of ourselves and be mindful of the interests of those who are to come after us demands that we seek to diversify and shield in their infancy all useful industries, so that one day, without legislative defenses, they may be able to compete with their brothers of the older hemisphere in the markets of the world, adding to the sum-total of human comforts and giving to us as a people the material independence, the wealth, the development, the prosperity which the lavish gifts of nature hint that the American people may enjoy. We are comparatively a young people. But a few days ago we completed our first century. We are not able to compete in the industrial arena with the peoples of the Old World. The accumulations of wealth, of populations, of artificial aids, which centuries have piled up in other lands, render the contest so unequal that without some device to equalize the advantages we must go down inevitably in the contest. That device—the only one that has been or I think can be suggested—lies in a judicious use of the constitutional power of Congress to lay imports on foreign goods coming into our ports. This is the whole philosophy of protection. I believe it to be the duty of the nation to its people.

A judicious adjustment of a tariff I think to be this: First, protection secured by a duty at least equal to the difference in cost between home and foreign products for all commodities which we do or can produce in this country; second, a tariff for revenue only upon all articles of luxury, fashion, or fancy which we do not and cannot produce; third, free trade for all things of necessity, either to life or for raw material, which our own country cannot supply. This would give protection where protection is needed, free trade where protection can yield no advantage, and an incidental revenue derived from the unenforced contributions of those who consume imported luxuries.

Not only is the idea of protection to home interests justified by the reasons and obligations upon which it rests, but to us its wisdom is taught by the testimony of our earlier and better statesmen and by the experience of all history. So important did the fathers deem it to be to the public welfare that one of the objects sought by the Federal Union was to afford it. The men whose courage and wisdom gave birth to the Republic were protectionists. It was left to the philosophasters of later years to discover the beauties of free trade. The first session of the first Federal Congress sitting in New York in 1789 imposed a duty upon imports and declared in the preamble of the law that it was necessary for the support of the Government "and the encouragement and protection of manufacture that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandises imported." George Washington was then President, and although he had no Cabinet until some months after the passage of the act he was surrounded by counselors composed of the ablest men of that period. In Congress were many of the patriots and sages of the Revolution. From this time downward, as long as the generation of wise and pure men who achieved the nation controlled its affairs and for many years thereafter, until the mischievous teachings of foreign interests began to be felt, protection was a cardinal doctrine and practice of the Government. Washington in his first and in his last annual addresses delivered respectively January 8, 1790, and December 7, 1796, most forcibly presented to Congress the wisdom of encouraging home manufacture. Thomas Jefferson, in messages delivered December 15, 1802, December 2, 1806, and November 8, 1808, urged that protection was the duty of the Federal Government and enforced his views by reasons drawn from the objects of the Constitution and the situation of the people. James Madison, "the father of the Constitution," as he has been called, did the same in his messages of December 5, 1810, November 5, 1811, February 20, 1815, and December 5, 1815. Congress responded to the last by giving to the country the high tariff of 1816, in the debate upon which Calhoun, Clay, Lowndes, and many other prominent statesmen of the period advocated it as in the interests not only of manufacturers but of all classes. The next tariff act was passed in the administration of Mr. Monroe, in 1824. It imposed still higher rates of duties and was supported by both Clay and Jackson. This was revised in 1828 still in the interest of protection. It was at this time that the tariff was first made a political question. The law of 1828 became very unpopular in the Southern States but continued in force until 1832, when Clay's compromise tariff bill, declared by him to be for protection, was passed and was approved by that protectionist, Andrew Jackson, then President. This act provided for future reductions, under the operations of which, in 1842, a new revision was required. The act of that year was both for protection and for an incidental revenue. It was not until the famous Walker tariff of 1846, in the administration of Polk, that this country had a tariff purely and exclusively for revenue. This continued until 1857, when it was modified still further in the interest of free trade, and this continued until the act of 1861 brought the principle of protection, the principle and practice of the fathers, abandoned for more than fourteen years, once more into the polity of the nation. I make this brief historical résumé to enforce my statement that protection was the idea and practice of the men of the earlier time, and that its antithesis is the creature of a more modern and I think a less wise statesmanship. I have before me and I might quote from the utterances of Franklin, of Washington, of Jefferson, of Hamilton, of Madison, of Adams, of Dallas, of Calhoun, of Clay, of Jackson, and of many others, whose opinions we have been taught with reason to respect as founded in wisdom and uttered with purity of intent, declaring that the public welfare demands protection to home industries through tariff laws, but I will not consume time to do so, as with the opinions of these men gentlemen are familiar. If the practices of the earlier years and the beliefs of the truly great men whose names adorn our history are worthy of note in this debate or of influence upon this question, then let us not forget them.

The basis of wisdom is experience, theories; the edifices of genius built of seeming truths may err, but the teachings of actual events are infallible. What are we taught by this best of school-masters upon this subject? This country has experienced both protection and substantial free trade, as I have shown, and we ought to be able to judge between them upon a better than a theoretic claim of merit. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. MORRISON] at the last session labored to prove the beneficence of the purely revenue tariff of 1846, and denominated it "a very just and practical financial measure." Made in the presence of men who have memories, and who are supposed not to be altogether ignorant of the facts of history, his statement possessed at least the merit of boldness. If the gentleman had taken the trouble to compare the fifteen years prior to 1861 with the fifteen years that have since elapsed, he would scarcely have claimed what he did.

Sir, take down your book of statistics and see under which policy we made the most rapid strides in the accumulation of wealth and when the citizen was most prosperous. As statistics are only gathered at decennial periods, we must be content with the contrast between the fifth and sixth decades. The total of wealth, as shown by the Census Reports, was increased from $16,159,616,068 in 1860 to $30,068,518,507 in 1870. In this period the wealth of the Southern States was reduced by the emancipation of slaves and other consequences of the war, $2,525,201,630. This taken into account, and the increase of wealth is shown to have been in the sixth decade, $16,533,904,069, which is $7,510,068,229 more than the increase of the previous decade—more than twice as great. The wealth per capita in 1860 was $510.74 and in 1870 it was $779.76. Had it not been for the decrease of wealth in the Southern States, there is no doubt that it would have been twice as much at the end of the sixth as at the end of the fifth decade. This increase of wealth is chiefly due to manufactures, although the interests of agriculture were greatly extended and the values of farming lands much increased everywhere except in the Southern States.

The products of the manufactories of the country in 1870 were $4,232,325,424, an increase of $3,213,218,808 over 1860, and $2,346,463,748 greater than the increase of the preceding decade. To avoid the tediousness of figures, I will say that the increase in the capital invested, the establishments operated, the hands employed, and the wages paid to them, was about in proportion to the increase of products which I have given. In mining operations the comparison between the two periods is equally marked in favor of the latter, while in railroad and other public enterprises the increase in the second period was considerable. These are the leading statistics exhibited by our most recent experience of free trade and protection. With these figures accessible to him, with the facts as to the general prosperity under each which he witnessed, and which ought to be alive in his memory, I cannot but express surprise that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] or any one else on this floor should seek to overthrow the existing law that has done so much and return to the "very just and practical financial measure" of 1846, that did so little. The lesson of these figures teaches the wisdom of protection.

But, sir, we need not stop with the experience of our own country. The wisdom of protection is taught by the history of every civilized people on the globe, if that history be read aright. Of course I do not speak now of protection as applied by tariffs only, but as applied by such devices of legislation suited to each particular condition as shall secure the same end. Look for a moment into the histories of the two nations standing nearest us upon the other hemisphere with which our past was most closely associated. Rivals in arts and in arms, France and England represent the highest cunning in political science to be found in Europe, and each illustrate, but by different processes, the truth of my assertion. We are apt to point with admiration to the greatness achieved in manufactures and in commerce by England, the country from whose loins ours came, and whose learning and institutions have been our model. A little island, less in area than the State of New York, and of limited natural resources except in iron and coal, has by a consummate statesmanship become the workshop and common carrier by ocean highways for a good portion of the civilized world, while the emprise and valor of its people have extended its dominion over one-sixth of the habitable globe. The iron and steels of Birmingham, the cutlery of Sheffield, the pottery of Staffordshire, the cottons of Manchester, and the woolens of Leeds to a large extent supply the people of almost every clime, while fleets of English ships carry a large part of the international freights over every ocean and sea. She has taken tribute through the profits of her factories and the tolls of her carrying trade from other peoples until her citizens have become so rich that they furnish much of the capital for the enterprises of the world. That the weakness or wickedness of her internal policies has left this enormous wealth so unequally divided among her people does not subtract from our admiration of the cunning of her external policies which have achieved so much.

Now, sir, what has done this for England? It was protection for herself as long as she needed it and free trade for everybody else. The policy of English legislation has been to restrain importations so long as necessary, and to encourage exportations for the building up of its manufacturing interests, and to discriminate in favor of English ships to extend the carrying trade of its subjects. Restraints upon importations were by tariffs sometimes protective and in instances prohibitory, but always discriminating. Exportations were encouraged by drawbacks or deductions allowed in the payment of any duty or excise for exportations by the persons from whom due; by bounties given directly by the government to manufacturers to build up a particular industry or in instances to enable them to undersell and drive from the market a foreign competitor; by advantageous treaties with other countries, gaining for English wares the freedom of their markets; by the establishment of colonies to control their trade and their markets in the interests of English ship-owners and manufacturers, and by penalties imposed, at times, as in the reigns of George I and of George II, upon artificers quitting the kingdom. That these were among the acts of the English government, I have the warrant of English history for saying. Adam Smith, the great free-trade writer of the last century, in his Wealth of Nations, speaks of them as the means by which the manufacturing interests of England were built up. I should not omit to speak of still another method more recently adopted to strengthen British manufacturers at the expense of others, which I may not with inaptness term the missionary method, the immediate effort being to teach the excellence of free trade to the people whose markets are wanted and cannot be obtained by force. The design of our English cousins was well expressed by the president of the British Iron-Trade Association, in his inaugural address delivered February 16, 1876. He said:

> Now that every continental nation and the United States of America have decided to foster special native industries by artificial restrictions, it behooves those concerned in the British iron-trade to keep close watch upon commercial treaties and the tariffs of foreign states, to see that the former be acted upon and the latter grappled with when not absolutely prohibitive.

Our tariff is being "grappled with" by free-trade agents in the lobbies of our Congress, by free-trade books and publications scattered among our people, by the influence of the Cobden club, with its fifty-six American members smeared with the flattery of English notice, an official list of whom I have in my desk, and by the organization of free-trade leagues, which are said now to exist in thirty-one States of the Union.

In 1840 England began to take off restraints upon importations and now has only a light tariff upon a very few articles. Her manufactories had become so firmly established that they needed no legislative aid to control the home market. An open port became for the interest of her industries, because but little was imported that was not raw material for her mills or food for her operatives, very small proportions of which England herself was able to supply.

Thus, sir, did England apply the principle of protection as completely as her statesmen could devise the means of doing it. Without this she could never have achieved the proud eminence in the arts of peace as well as of war that she now enjoys. She enforced free trade upon other countries because it helped her manufacturers to do so. What were the consequences to those other countries? We may learn something more of the folly of that which England is trying to teach us by inquiring. Ireland is perhaps the saddest example. Ireland was once—yes, at two or three periods—a prosperous country. Her linen and woolen fabrics went into every port and plenty stood on the hills of the Emerald Isle. This was so, if we can trust the historian, during the reign of William and Mary and for many years thereafter. England was so thoroughly for protection that she taxed most heavily all Irish goods that came to her across the channel. She saw Ireland's prosperity and wanted to transfer it to English soil, so she procured heavy export duties upon Irish fabrics. Ireland's prosperity vanished. In 1782 the Irish parliament, known as the independent parliament, repealed this export duty and placed heavy protective duties on imports; England consented because, with the American and French wars to prosecute, fought largely with Irish troops, it was impolitic to interfere. Prosperity came once more to Ireland, but immediately upon the union in 1800 the old policy of England was revived and Ireland has since been—

> The most distressed country
> That ever yet was seen.

I do not mean to say that English free trade was the exclusive cause of the impoverishment of the Irish people, but that it was one of the causes of it the intelligent student of Irish history will not dispute. But the results of England's policy upon this subject have other illustrations. She forced free trade upon the Turkish Empire and ruined it; upon India and impoverished it; upon Peru and other Spanish American states and they have made no progress; upon China and Japan; and although a ray or two of civilization went with it, I doubt if these countries are better off for English acquaintance. What English free trade has done for others it seeks to do for us. Do we want it? The spectacle of England accomplishing magnificence for herself by protection and ruin for others by anti-protection ought to give us warning and be conclusive as to the policy to which wisdom bids us to adhere.

The experience of France teaches the same lesson, although not throughout by the same means. The people of that country having steadily maintained protection from a very early date were enabled to endure the shifting dynasties; the changes in forms of government; the exhaustion of wars; the scourge of the commune and the shock of revolutions, and recover after each with marvelous rapidity. The most independent peasantry in Europe is found in provincial France. Among them are five and a half millions of land-owners and a less percentage of pauperism than is to be found with their English neighbors. The annual exports of France amount to about $22 per capita, and this, the result of protection, having long continued, enabled that country guided by the statesmanship of Thiers to pay to Germany in the short space of two and a half years a thousand million dollars as an indemnity after an almost equal expenditure at home—to keep its bonds at a premium and its coers force or legal-tender paper money at a par with gold, and through it all to remain the most prosperous country on the continent of Europe. These things, sir, to my mind reflect more glory on the French name than was achieved in arms by Napoleon the Great, or in philosophy by Rousseau, or in letters by Voltaire. Germany triumphed in the ten months' war for Alsace and Lorraine, but the exhibition of French resource and statesmanship which triumphed over the disaster of defeat will have the largest and brightest page in history.

Still other countries than those of which I have spoken give testimony upon this question. Prussia, since the unification of Germany, with a free domestic commerce and a degree of protection, although largely devoted to agriculture and the raising of cattle, exhibits a condition of prosperity, interrupted last year by the demonetizing of silver. Australia under protection is rising rapidly in wealth and power, and Italy, seeing the folly of English-taught free trade, will not be long in imitating her example. But, sir, I am consuming more time than I ought in arraying the experience of other countries. I have said enough to show that history, current and past, justifies the principle of taking care of ourselves through a protection of home interests and industries, and that the opposite of this principle is a folly, a weakness, and may be a crime against ourselves and against the future.

I wish now, sir, to say a word or two—and I will be very brief—of the reasons urged against protection. The chief argument for free trade, and it has been exhausted in the debate upon this bill, is that a high tariff increases prices in the interests of monopolies. It is true that a tariff is a tax on consumption, and is as I have said not justifiable unless there is in it some measure of protection which ultimately cheapens prices and destroys monopoly. How does protection do this? Without home production the consumer is at the mercy of the foreign producer, paying his prices plus the costs of transportation and the tolls of middle-men, the most complete and the most ruinous monopoly that could be suggested. Now, when a tariff is applied sufficiently high to stimulate home production, mills and factories appear on every hand, and while at first costs are increased the foreign monopoly is destroyed and competition among our own citizens brings prices down to a proper standard; the tolls of numerous middlemen and the costs of distant transportation does not enter into it, and there at the proper standard it must remain, permanently benefiting the consumer. Even while this process is going on, compensation for the temporary hardships comes at once in the better prices realized for those articles which the consumer himself has to sell. I do not, sir, rely upon theory, but I point to our own experience in the last fifteen years to prove the truth of what I say. Wares in the manufacture of which labor constitutes the chief element of cost cannot now, and I trust never can, be made in the United States for as few dollars as in England; for that would mean cheap labor, and we do not want it. I assert, however, that by reason of the tariff of 1861 we have to-day cheaper wares of iron and steel and cheaper woolen and cotton goods than we should have had without it. The people of this country pay less now for many of the articles most fully protected than they did for the same articles in the revenue tariff times before the war. Is it not so? I have here a table prepared by David Williams, publisher of the Iron Age, which shows this to be the fact. I will read from it:

Deducting 10 per cent., the gold premium at the time the table was prepared, from the prices in 1876 given in currency, and it will be seen that the reduction is very marked, and because there is now competition among our citizens in the manufacture of these articles, no advance upon these reduced prices is likely to occur. The same is true of many articles of cotton and wool, but I will not trouble the House with the figures. This, sir, is the result of protection, which gentlemen say is a tax on the consumer for the advantage of the monopolist. If these facts do not explode the chief argument for free trade, I mistake the force there is in the homely lessons of experience.

There is another idea urged by free traders as an argument, replying to a reason given for protection, of which I must speak. Admitting, as all the writers which they quote have been obliged to do, that protection is a means of giving an excess of exports over imports, they argue, by a subtilty of reasoning hard to understand, that this is a matter of no consequence and may be disadvantageous. The reported author of this bill in his speech said that "foreign balances and balances of trade against us are some of the catch-words of protection," and he then proceeded, by a most inapt illustration, in an attempt to show that the claimed advantage of a favorable balance of trade was illusory and unreal.

Sir, the school boy who answered that the long days of summer and the short ones of winter were due to the expansive and contractile powers of heat and cold will grow up to be another just such a political economist. I know that there is very reputable authority for the opinion that it is wise to send money out of the country and prevent its return, and that the real prosperity of a people is marked by what they buy and not by what they sell. All the free-trade doctrinaires hold to this idea, so that the gentleman does not stand alone in his views.

As long, sir, however, as we know that we need the gold and silver of our neighbors to meet the immense volume of interest yearly payable to foreigners upon our public and upon private indebtedness—to reduce as we can the principal of our debt and to pay our coin expenditures—to enter into our circulation, cheapening interest, and rendering specie payments possible—as long, I say, as we know that we need gold and silver for these more than we need foreign articles that "perish in the using," we cannot be convinced that a favorable balance of trade is not of the highest importance to us. The man, the head of a family who will see to it that he sells each year more than he buys, even though his children wear homespun, will grow rich and be able to pay his debts. The man who does not will become bankrupt. This is common sense, and the best statesmanship is but the most thorough common sense in the affairs of ordinary life enlarged and applied to the business of the state, for the same law operates whether upon the household or the nation.

What I said a few moments ago as to the result of the existing law on prices brought to my mind other results accomplished and to be expected from it. I can only speak of these in a synoptical manner, for I have already consumed more time than I ought. It has, sir, for fifteen years sustained the Government in war and in peace by its revenues and built up many industries by its protection. It aided to restore the lost credit of the nation which under a revenue tariff had fallen to a discount of 12 per cent. and is now at a greater percentage of premium. It furnished chiefly the means to pay off more than five hundred millions of principal of the public debt and was mainly instrumental in bringing down the gold premium from 285 to 7 per cent. It has given to us that which we never had before and should never have had at all without it, namely, a high diversification of industries. It has, as I have shown, added enormously to the wealth and to the production of the country. It has increased the rewards of husbandry by building up home markets for the fruits of the field and the flock. It has built up towns and cities and filled them with the music of the anvil and the engine. It has honey-combed the land with mines, dotted it with emporiums, decorated it with factories, and net-worked it with railroads. There is not an American acre that has not been made more valuable by it. There is not an American home that holds not some evidence of its beneficence. These, sir, are some of its fruits. Shall they be overthrown and the tide of prosperity turned back? Shall we destroy that which has done so much and is still doing more merely to advance the interest of a handful of importers in New York City and a host of manufacturers in Leeds and Birmingham and Manchester, or to gratify a few pale pundits who fulminate shadowy theories in political science and ask that the nation be guided by them? I trust not, sir. Wiser and better counsels will prevail if heed be given to the reasons and the exhibitions that stand arrayed against this measure.

There are three things which all right-thinking men desire to see accomplished. They are, first, a restoration of business upon a permanent basis, and the steadfast prosperity of the people; second, the regain and maintenance of the world's standard of values and the honest payment of the public debt; third, the material independence of the country and the utmost development of all the resources of our magnificent continent. The ambition that does not point to these is an unworthy ambition. With the continuance of a judicious protection of our industrial interests, all these things are possible; without it none will be realized. Let this bill become law and you will wipe out, as I have shown, our leading manufacturing interests, and thus you will intensify the existing depression, which even now is beginning to pass away. You will contribute to the impoverishment of the people, and thus lessen their ability to meet the public obligation. You will lessen the exports and increase the imports, thus draining the country of the precious metals and thereby rendering still more distant the fact of maintainable resumption of specie payments. You will palsy the hand that would utilize the exhaustless wealth that the Almighty has planted in our soil and beaten down with the tread of His ages into the bowels of our mountains. These results, sir, await the advent of free trade into the policy of our laws before we are prepared for it as surely as the years of the future await the coming of the Republic upon its theater of events. It behooves us to study well and be careful what we do. Let us "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." I know of no better maxim, and its observance, in this instance, as in all others, will be the summit of wisdom.

I have now, sir, upon this subject, in a manner too hurried to be satisfactory, said my say. I have tried to make plain these truths: first, that the proposed bill will increase the total of taxation and establish an unjust and oppressive system of raising revenues; second, that it would destroy many of the leading industries of the country and inflict injury upon all; third, that the protection which it would eliminate from our tariff laws is the dictate of duty and of wisdom enforcing what I urged by reasons and by the teachings of experience; fourth, that the chief objections to the existing law of duties have no basis in reason, and are disproved by results; and, fifth, that the existing law has operated with beneficent results which the proposed law would destroy. If I have impressed upon those who have honored me with their attention these truths one-half as forcibly as I myself feel them to exist, my gratification is complete; for then this bill cannot receive the sanction of the House when it shall come up for action.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS, December 5, 1876.

EDWARD YOUNG, Chief of Bureau.

Mr BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, when this measure was under consideration the other day, I stated some reasons which had induced certain members of the committee to favor this reduction. In the first place, let us remember that even our Cabinet ministers residing in this city are receiving only $8,000, though they have perhaps quite as much occasion, so far as the public service is concerned, to entertain as have our foreign ministers.

Again, sir, from 1803 to 1855, a period of more than half a century, our ministers at all these courts were not paid a salary more than $9,000 each. It is true that they were allowed an outfit of the same amount the first year and an infit of half that amount, it being contemplated in that legislation that the term of service would naturally cover at least four years, the period of any one administration. But, with a view of avoiding the abuses which grew up under that system, the salaries were increased, that of the British mission being fixed in 1855 and of the French mission in 1856 at $17,500, at which figures they remained until 1872.

Sir, I imagine that in the early period of our history, when our resources were less than they are now and our capacity for resenting injuries from foreign powers not so great as at present, there was stronger necessity for our resorting to negotiation and diplomacy than at this time.

Furthermore, our facility of communication with foreign governments at that time was not such as it is now. With the present rapid means of communication between this country and the Old World it is far easier for us to understand properly at all times our relations with other countries.

Again, sir, it is well understood that there has been a change in the policy of our Government with respect to diplomatic relations. For more than a quarter of a century a very large part of our diplomatic negotiations, wherever questions of great importance have been involved, has been transacted in this country. We all remember that when the Virginius affair was pending, instead of the trouble being adjusted through our minister to Spain, that government sent Admiral Polo to this country, and the whole affair was adjusted in this city. I imagine that in any matter of very great weight, for which the administration would be held to grave responsibility for its action, no administration would at this day permit negotiations to be conducted through its minister abroad, but would manage the affair here under its own eye.

The whole argument in favor of these extravagant salaries seems to be embraced in the fact that these ministers are to entertain. Diplomatic questions are settled at Washington; but we are told that when our friends travel abroad they expect to be entertained, and that it is absolutely necessary for our ministers to receive salaries which will enable them to entertain in a manner befitting the dignity of this nation. If entertaining, as it would appear, has become the whole duty of these ministers, then, instead of a mere reduction of their salaries, I think we might properly consider whether the offices should not be abolished altogether.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HOLMAN] has led the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] off on the course that he has taken against the committee; and I want to call the attention of our chairman particularly to the danger of insubordination. Upon this bill the committee has stuck by everything that was done last year in saving more than $200,000, and has made a still further decrease to the extent of about $30,000. This being the action of a committee which certainly during the long session of last year gained some reputation for economy, I do think that the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Georgia, both members of the committee, can well afford to let these matters stand and not seek to embark in a new conflict with the Senate, a conflict in which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] has well said we are sure to get worsted.

If anybody believes that the salaries for this service are really extravagant, it is worth while for him to look at some of the salaries paid by other nations for similar service. For instance, the gentleman from Indiana objects to the salary of our minister to France as extravagant, outrageous in amount. Yet the British government (with which of course we do not undertake to compete) pays to its minister at Paris £10,000 in gold, or $50,000, besides house rent. In Prussia, or Germany as it is now, the English minister gets £7,000 in gold, equal to $35,000. To its minister in Turkey the English government pays £8,000, or $40,000. Even the British minister to the United States (and this is not reckoned as a position of the highest class) gets £5,000, or $25,000, and $1,000 for house rent.

The gentleman from Georgia has called attention to the fact that our cabinet ministers here get but $8,000, and he argues that therefore the salaries of our foreign missions should be cut down. Why, sir, the rule holds good throughout the world that ministers abroad receive more pay than cabinet ministers at home. Under the British government, while the salaries of foreign ministers are such as I have named, the head of the state department gets but £5,000 in gold. The salaries of all the foreign ministers go beyond the salaries of the home secretaries because everything abroad is more expensive than at home; many things have to be transported, and some measure of style has to be kept up in accordance with the society of the place; so that a foreign minister never knows the end of the drain upon him.

There really seems to me no call for departing from the adjustment of last year and seeking to make upon these salaries a reduction which will amount in the aggregate to perhaps only $30,000 or $40,000. The game is not worth the powder; and I hope my friend from Indiana, chairman of the committee, will, before the vote is taken, withdraw his amendment so as to save himself a defeat upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment in order that the gentleman from Georgia may renew it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, my colleague on the committee from Maine complains that I have been led off by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in favor of this reduction. Well, sir, it is a good thing for somebody to be led off. There has not been much leading off on this line until last winter. I think it is a good line to move on, and so far as I am concerned I propose to follow whoever leads in that direction.

The gentleman has seen fit to compare the salaries of the ministers of this country with those of England and other countries. We do not aspire to imitate those extravagant governments in their army, navy, diplomatic, or other service. In the next place, so far as the diplomatic service is concerned, we are in a very different attitude from any country of the Old World. To-day Russia, Germany, England, and France are agitated about the eastern question. The business interests of all those countries are alarmed, while we here are a people and Government disentangled from any question of that sort—not affected by it, completely freed from such investigation, freed from the need of diplomacy, acting on the principle of the Government from its first inception, that we would be neutral in all these troubles, and justified by our geographical situation in that position. Therefore any attempt to magnify our diplomatic service, located as we are by comparison with the service of those governments, thrown geographically together, intensely interested in any changes in the affairs of those governments, is absolutely unreasonable. Therefore I trust this House will see fit so to treat it.

We have been endeavoring to economize, and there has been some reduction, but it has not been in this service what it should have been. In 1870 our whole diplomatic service cost $933,047, and with our vast reductions to which the gentleman on the other side referred in the appropriation bill passed at the last session of Congress, we exceeded that amount and appropriated $1,137,000.

Mr. SINGLETON. Now that gentlemen have spread their opinions upon the RECORD for the information of their constituents, I think there is no necessity for further discussion, the subject having been so fully discussed at the last session, and therefore I move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAULFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, which was the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 842) authoring the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on the Judiciary Square to ground near to the Washington arsenal, for the use of the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 1113) to authorize the taking of certain parcels of land for the public use at the intersection of Pennsylvania and Maryland avenues and the Capitol grounds; and

The bill (S. No. 974) for the relief of Francis Guilbeau, of San Antonio, Texas.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 453) to authorize the Vancouver Water Company to lay water-pipes through the Fort Vancouver military reservation;

An act (S. No. 739) to amend section 5475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to counterfeiting coin; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 29) extending the time for the making of a report by the Army commission created by the act of July 21, 1876.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HEREFORD, for eight days.

DISTRICT POLICE BOARD.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. DAVY as a member of the committee to investigate certain matters relating to the police board of the District of Columbia, in place of Mr. BANKS, excused.

And then, on motion of Mr. BANNING, (at four o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. HALE: The petition of S. B. Kelley, guardian of the heirs of Thomas McGuire, deceased, that they be granted a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina: Joint resolution of the General Assembly of North Carolina, favoring the fixing of a uniform rate of interest throughout the Union, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. TERRY: The petition of John Kelley, of Harrisonburgh, Virginia, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army, his claim having been rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS: The petition of Philetus Birch, a soldier in the Mexican war, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of New York: The petition of W. W. Wood, E. M. Seymour, and other citizens of New York, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of G. T. Treadway, G. E. Thomas, and other citizens of New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

WILLIAM SHARON, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RATES OF PENSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 234) to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg; which, on motion of Mr. INGALLS, was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 4276) to authorize the appointment of a sergeant in the Signal Corps as a second lieutenant in the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 4388) for the relief of the former occupants of the present military reservation at Point San José, in the city of San Francisco; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting permission to the officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy to wear the medal badge adopted by the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War on occasions of ceremony.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of Edward H. Rollins, chosen by the Legislature of New Hampshire a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1877; which were read, as follows:

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that Edward H. Rollins, esquire, has been duly elected a Senator of the State of New Hampshire in the Congress of the United States, for the term of six years from the 4th day of March next.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of said State to be hereunto affixed. Witness Person C. Cheney, governor of said State, the 14th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1876 and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and first.

P. C. CHENEY.

By the governor:

[SEAL.] B. F. PRESCOTT, Secretary of State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to suggest that it may be open to some question under the acts of Congress regulating the election of Senators whether that certificate is as full as it ought to be. Of course in a case where there was no doubt about the regularity of the proceeding, nobody would make any objection; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that is a very, very narrow certificate indeed. It does not even say that it is done in pursuance of law, or duly done, or whether the Legislature met on a second Tuesday of the session, the day provided by law; but it is simply the old antique certificate of fifty years ago, before there was any act of Congress on that point. Of course I only make these observations in order that attention may be called to the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition praying that party feeling and the strife for party advantage may be discarded in ascertaining the election of President and Vice-President, and that the accustomed and constitutional modes be observed by the two Houses in ascertaining the truth of the result. This petition is signed by the Gorham Manufacturing Company, the Whiting Manufacturing Company, and a large number of other manufacturers and business men of the State of New York. I ask its reference to the select committee to whom it appropriately belongs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Select Committee to devise a mode for counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of Caroline Knapp and William C. Sturgis, administrator, praying that an additional 2 per cent. in currency be allowed to those who have received awards from the Alabama claims commission, and declaring that they see no reason why 6 per cent. should not be paid in currency upon those awards. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received and been requested to present the memorial of B. D. Metcalf and a large number of other commercial men, merchants, and persons interested in navigation, who represent that they are citizens of the State of Maine; that during the late civil war they retained their ships under the flag of their own country, thereby suffering great loss in consequence of the extra war premiums, and suffered also from rebel cruisers. They ask that the House bill relating to the distribution of the balance of the Geneva fund may receive the favorable consideration of this body. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a post and military road from Fort Lincoln to Deadwood City in the Black Hills, Dakota Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Saint Paul, Minnesota, in favor of the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 4189) authorizing the coinage of the standard silver dollar and restoring the legal-tender character; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPENCER. I present the petition of J. M. Wooten, postmaster, and certain merchants of Blountsville, Alabama, stating that they believe that the telegraph belongs properly to the Post-Office Department and that it should be incorporated therewith and worked for the benefit alike of the Government and the people, and that the Government alone can secure to us the freedom of the press and the sanctity of private correspondence. They therefore pray for the transfer of the telegraph business to the Post-Office Department, and for cheaper telegraphic facilities. I move its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Rev. Charles M. Blake, praying to be restored to his former position of chaplain in the United States Army, with full pay and allowances from date of last payment; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON—RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Enos Runyon, having appeared before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and answered the questions propounded to him, and thereby purged himself of contempt, is hereby discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3281) granting a pension to Hannah A. Wood, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the views of the minority of the joint select committee appointed at the last session of Congress to frame a form of government for the District of Columbia; which were ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of S. B. Holt, praying compensation for services rendered as ganger of the sixth division of the fifth collection district of the State of Virginia for one hundred and fifty-five days, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the personal representatives of Richard Hall, praying compensation for losses sustained during the last war with Great Britain, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads, reported a recommendation that the Senate insist upon its amendments.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Messrs. HAMLIN, PADDOCK, and MAXEY were appointed.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4307) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 5, after the word "appropriated," to strike out the words "to be paid into the contingent fund of the House to enable the Clerk of the House;" so as to make the clause read: "that the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the sums as provided under the following resolutions of the House," &c.

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask the Senator who has charge of this bill whether the House has or has not followed the customary channel of payment of such sums. It is a matter of very little importance whether the money shall pass directly, under the resolutions, into the hands of the parties named, or whether it shall pass into the contingent fund and be paid by the Clerk to them. The latter is a matter of convenience and also perhaps a matter of custom. If it has been the custom of the House to pay claims of this character through the agency of its Clerk and it prefers that mode of doing it from its contingent fund, I think it would probably be just as well to let it choose its own method of paying the parties.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the bill as it came from the House did follow the ordinary form; but that form would not apply to some portions of the bill which came to us. For instance, the bill came to us with a provision to authorize the payment of $11,000 for a deficiency in the expenses of the Attorney-General's Office, to be disbursed by him, and it seemed hardly proper that that should be paid into the contingent fund of the House. So we made it general, thinking it would cover the whole ground, and we consulted our Secretary and he thought the amendment would put the bill in accordance with the forms, and that under it he could pay the items reported for the Senate contingencies.

Mr. BAYARD. I took it for granted the committee had some good reason for changing that phraseology.

Mr. WINDOM. That was the reason, that it would not apply to other provisions of the bill. If it is found by the House of Representatives that they cannot pay out the money under this language, it can readily be amended by them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 8 to insert as a heading "House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 54 to strike out "fourteenth" and insert "fifteenth;" so as to make the clause read:

Under resolution of August 15, 1876, to provide for the expense of the ventilation of the Hall of the House, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $3,500

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 89 to insert:

SENATE.

For compensation and mileage of Senators for the current fiscal year, $10,311.72.

For nine messengers, from January 1 to March 4, 1877, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, $2,268.

For clerks to committees and pages for the current fiscal year, $5,000.

For miscellaneous items for the fiscal year 1876, $214.85.

To pay the stenographers for the select committee of the Senate appointed to investigate the election in the State of Mississippi the amounts certified to be due by the chairman of said committee, $1,541.30.

To defray the actual and necessary expenses of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and other expenses necessarily incurred in making the investigations directed by Senate resolution of December 5, 1876, in the several States named therein, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; said appropriation to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate; and the disbursing officer of the Senate shall advance such parts of the sum above appropriated to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate as the chairman of said committee shall in writing direct, for the purposes aforesaid; and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, as soon as practicable, make a detailed report of the expenditures thereof, with proper vouchers, which, when so made, shall be received by said disbursing officer, and returned with his accounts to the proper officer of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 124 to insert as a heading "Miscellaneous."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 126 to strike out after the word "to" the words "remedy error and supply" and insert "provide for a deficiency in the contingent expenses of the Department of Justice arising from;" so as to make the clause read:

To provide for a deficiency in the contingent expenses of the Department of Justice arising from omissions in enrolling act of last session "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and other purposes," $11,000, to be disbursed under the Attorney-General.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota what is the nature of this appropriation, whether there were omissions to enroll certain items of expenditure for which appropriations were made agreed to by the committees but left out of the enrollment.

Mr. WINDOM. That is the fact. The appropriation bill as it passed both Houses contained an appropriation of $11,000 for the contingent expenses of that Department, and by a mistake in the enrollment it was omitted.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not in the nature of an extra appropriation?

Mr. WINDOM. No, sir; but it is a deficiency arising on account of that omission.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. On the second page, thirty-fourth line, the name of Mr. Merrick is wrong. It should be "William M. Merrick" instead of "W. N. Merrick." I suggest to the chairman that the correction be made.

Mr. WINDOM. If that is not correct, there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made if there be no objection.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 132 the following:

For transportation of notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, being a deficiency for the current fiscal year, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move, in line 135, to strike out the characters "&c." I do not like the look of them in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. It is suggested that "and" should be inserted between "coal" and "labels," in line 135. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, before we pass this bill I wish to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations how it is, in this age of reform and retrenchment, that so soon after the ides of August, (when a patriotic and retrenching Congress, composed of a Senate and House of Representatives and so on, had made provision for all the wants of the people for a whole fiscal year and every necessity of the Government, and went to the country upon it with congratulations and peans and songs of great joy as to the great amount of reduction in public expenditures that had been made,) a bill of this character comes in so soon?

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, this is not a very large bill. I wish I could congratulate the Senator from Vermont that it is the only deficiency bill we shall have. It is a forerunner, I think, of larger ones. It only contains as it came from the House $54,879.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For expenses of the two Houses chiefly?

Mr. WINDOM. Expenses of the House of Representatives alone, with the exception of the provision for the omission of $11,000 in the Attorney-General's Department. All of the items mentioned in the bill as it came from the House, with the exception of the one named for the Attorney-General's Department and the deficiency for the Botanical Garden, I believe were, under resolution passed by the House last August. They perhaps should have been appropriated for before the close of the last session in August, but it was omitted; it was not done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are for expenses of last year?

Mr. WINDOM. Mainly for expenses of the last session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it seems we were laboring in some way under rather a grand mistake when we supposed we had diminished the expenses of the Government to that great degree which has been mentioned and talked about so much.

Mr. WITHERS. I would ask the Senator from Vermont if it is anything unusual to have deficiency bills passed at every session?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; it is not anything very unusual; but it is very unusual for people to make a great pretense of retrenchment and not provide for their expenses until after an election, and then come in with their little bills. That is very unusual, in my opinion.

Mr. WITHERS. I beg to dissent from the Senator entirely, but without taking up the gauntlet which he throws down as to unusual pretensions to economy, it strikes me that it would be impossible, with the most sincere desire to promote economy and practice economy in the expenditures of the Government, that any Committee on Appropriations could gauge the scale and standard of expenditures which were necessary to the proper performance of the civil service of this Government, and I think the records of the Senate and the House will show that deficiency bills have been passed at every session of every Congress.

The bill was passed.

ADMIRAL CHARLES WILKES.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes, and I wish to state that this is a bill to allow a credit to be made of I think between $200 and $300 to Admiral Wilkes who in his illness is much distressed by a discrepancy which exists in his accounts at the Treasury Department. The bill comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs, they having made report upon a memorial sent here by Admiral Wilkes. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] is familiar with the facts. I will not detain the Senate but I think it will take but a moment and therefore I ask the Senate to allow it to be acted on.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit Admiral Charles Wilkes, now on the retired list of the Navy, with the sum of $350, being the amount paid by Paymaster Hosford to Paymaster Tolfree on account of mess bill, and which was repaid to Paymaster Hosford, but not taken up in his account.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CENTENNIAL CONGRATULATIONS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) in reference to the congratulations from the republic of Pretoria, South Africa, and also the joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) relating to the congratulations from the Argentine Republic, have had the same under consideration and directed me to report them back. Both resolutions are in regard to the Centennial, and as they will occupy but a moment, I ask that the Senate take them up immediately.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) in reference to the congratulations from the republic of Pretoria, South Africa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of State to communicate to the republic of Pretoria the high appreciation by the Congress of the United States of the complimentary terms in which that republic has referred to the first centennial of our national Independence in their resolutions to Congress in May last.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The only explanation that can be given is that the little republic of Pretoria, somewhere in South Africa, was kind enough to congratulate the Government of the United States on the occasion of the Centennial. The House of Representatives have passed this resolution in compliment to that little republic.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the republic?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I never heard of it until recently.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that republic situated?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Somewhere in South Africa. It is a little republic composed of people from Holland.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) relating to congratulations from the Argentine Republic. It directs the Secretary of State to acknowledge a dispatch of congratulation from the Argentine Republic, and the high appreciation of the Congress of the United States of the compliment thus conveyed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1130) for the relief of the executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

J. MILTON BEST.

Mr. MITCHELL. As a member of the Committee on Claims and at the instance of members of that committee, I conceive it to be my duty to give notice that at an early day I shall endeavor to get the Senate to consider the bill that has been reported from that committee favorably and is now on the Calendar, which has taken up considerable time and attention of the Senate; I refer to the claim of J. Milton Best. That claim, I will state in passing, did receive the favorable consideration and approval of President Lincoln over eleven years ago; it has passed the Committee on Claims of this body five several times, meeting the favorable approval of your committee; it has passed both branches of Congress, and it has been reported again, the sixth time I believe, from the committee and is on the Calendar. In justice to the claimant, in justice to this body, it seems to me we ought to take up the bill at an early day and give it consideration. Therefore I give notice that at an early day I shall endeavor to get the bill before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not call up the bill in reference to J. Milton Best until the Senate is full. The Senator remembers that that bill was once the subject of a veto. It involves a principle which is very important, and is perhaps what lawyers might call a border case, a case which does not fall very far or distinctly on either side of a certain line which has been observed or which an attempt has been made to observe in the legislation of the country thus far. Many Senators are absent who I think ought to be here, markedly the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] who has been deputed by the Senate to go to a distant city to conduct an investigation. Whenever the bill does come up, I imagine it will be the subject of considerable debate, and I think when the bill is put to a vote it ought to be voted on by as many Senators as can conveniently be found.

Mr. MITCHELL. The remarks of the Senator from New York are pertinent and proper. I know that this matter has been a subject of dispute, and it should not be acted upon unless by a full Senate; nor had I any intention of calling it up until the committee's return. I simply desired to give notice that at as early a day as possible I should call the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before I make the motion that I rise to make, I wish to supplement what has been said by the Senator from Oregon in reference to the case of J. Milton Best. I think it a matter of sheer justice to this claimant that the Senate should take up the bill and dispose of it one way or the other. It has been before Congress about ten or twelve years and the claimant has become poor and grown gray in waiting for the action of Congress. I think it is a reproach to our legislation that we do not dispose of these claims when they are very frequently reported from the committee, and get them out of the way. Whatever may be the action of the Senate on this bill, it being called up as it ought when the Senate is full, I think it due to this claimant and to all claimants of this kind that it should be disposed of. I therefore trust my friend from Oregon will press the bill whenever the Senate shall be so reasonably full that we can have attention to the principles involved. There are other bills that come within the line of this; and to the committee it is all-important that the Senate should decide the question one way or the other, that we may know what to do. Therefore I trust, without expressing any opinion on the bill at this time, that we may have action.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean by that action, while notoriously a large number of Senators are gone and properly gone?

Mr. WRIGHT. I have said already "whenever the Senate shall be reasonably full."

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon. I agree with him entirely.

R. J. HENDERSON.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2835.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri, $7,253.90, in full compensation for all balances due Henderson growing out of a contract made in 1835 with Captain William Mills, postquartermaster at Nashville, Tennessee, at the time, to cut and deliver three thousand cords of wood at the Cumberland River for the use of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for the printing of five hundred additional copies of the annual report of the Librarian of Congress, have instructed me to report it back, without amendment, and recommend its passage.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 500 extra copies of the annual report of the Librarian of Congress for the year 1876 be printed, with covers, for distribution by the Librarian.

BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD LANDS.

Mr. KERNAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 7.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 7) to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, to the city of Brooklyn, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have heard something about that bill recently from some officers of the Navy Department, and from an examination of it I think it highly desirable for it to be again considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and as it will make very little delay if it be necessary to consider it again, I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the Senator allow me one moment before he makes the motion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. KERNAN. Of course if there is good reason for the bill going back, I shall make no objection; but it was reported by the committee at the last session, when they examined it of course with care, and if it is to be acted upon and passed, it is somewhat important that it should be passed soon, as in case it is amended it will have to go back to the House.

The Senator is aware that there has been some prior controversy, and there has been some objection made by some parties to this exchange, but I am informed by the framers of the bill that the Secretary of the Navy and the Department do not object to the bill with the amendment put in by the committee, that the commission the President shall select shall report both on the expediency of the exchange and the terms on which the exchange can be made. Unless the Senator thinks it is important that the committee should again consider it, I hope he will allow it to be considered now. I tried to get it up at the last session, but I was not among the fortunate ones, not that I have any zeal about it, but the people of Brooklyn, the mayor and common council and the board of supervisors, have resolved in favor of this measure. It is considered of importance; that it will be advantageous to them and not any injury to the Government. The whole matter will be in the power of Congress after there is a report from the commissioners appointed under the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sure the Senator from New York does not desire to unduly press this bill; but he must bear in mind that this property of the United States is worth a great deal of money, and that if it be parted with by the United States, it will be worth a great deal of money to somebody who shall acquire title to it. It is on the shore of that magnificent harbor of New York and lies almost between the two greatest cities of the Union; and I think, from information that has come to my possession, that before we pass any bill upon the subject, there being no claim to it by anybody and the title of the United States being entirely admitted, it is highly desirable that the Committee on Naval Affairs should, in the light of additional circumstances, again consider the bill. It may be that it will turn out to be perfectly correct; it may be that it will turn out that it is not advisable even to start the entering-wedge of getting rid of this property of great value, in this way or any other way. I do not know. I certainly should not make the motion if I did not feel very sincerely that it was very desirable that the committee should again consider the measure, as it involves so much.

Mr. KERNAN. I admit that there should be scrutiny. This bill is simply to arm this commission with power to consider the expediency of selling the property to the city of Brooklyn, not to an individual, for a market. I see in the papers before the House that the city asked to have this opportunity of purchasing the tract, and the papers from the House show that it was originally donated by the city to the Government. Of course I will not persist if it is contrary to the judgment of my friend in pressing the bill now. I examined it as it is my duty, and the committee considered it and reported favorably, and there was an amendment proposed to the bill, so that the city authorities should be allowed to take what is a detriment to the public now, as it is unoccupied and somewhat swamp land; and that they may fill it up after purchasing, or if it is rented that other lands may be procured more advantageous. Whatever Congress may think best shall be done will be done for this purpose. But the Senator from Vermont does me no more than justice when he says that I do not want to press the bill unduly; and I would not want it passed if it should be in the judgment of Senators against the interest of the Government.

Mr. CRAGIN. Since this bill was reported at the last session, information has been laid before the Committee on Naval Affairs, or letters have been written, sent us from different naval officers, and also some communications from the Bureau of Yards and Docks, which have led me to doubt the policy of passing this bill in its present shape. Therefore, I have not been willing to call it up. I am not prepared to say that it would not be proper to pass a bill organizing a commission to investigate and report upon this subject. I have no personal wish that it should be recommitted, but if it is recommitted I will say that the committee will give it thorough investigation and report without much delay.

Mr. KERNAN. With that suggestion, of course, I concur. I conferred with the chairman of the committee and he will do me the justice to say that he did not suggest to me that he desired the bill to be recommitted. I shall now yield to the motion that it be recommitted, trusting that the committee will consider it as soon as possible and report one way or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL TROOPS IN PETERSBURGH.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state to the Senate that if I can get the floor on Tuesday next, I propose to call up the message of the President of the United States with accompanying documents, in regard to the military occupation of the city of Petersburgh; and I shall then wish to make some remarks upon that subject.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Questions were reserved yesterday upon three or four propositions at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.] I understand that he is satisfied in regard to some of them, and it would be perhaps a relief to the Clerk to dispose of those paragraphs first, if they can be disposed of at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved paragraphs will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first reserved clause is:

Section 1270 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, however, That when forage in kind cannot be furnished by the proper departments, then, and in all such cases, officers entitled to forage may commute the same according to existing regulations: Provided further, That officers of the Army and of volunteers assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted shall, during the time they are employed on such duty, receive the pay, emoluments, and allowances of cavalry officers of the same grade respectively."

Mr. COCKRELL. I would ask that that be passed over and the other reserved paragraphs read. We have not had time to examine that matter, but it will be considered before the consideration of the bill is concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved paragraph will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 1480 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"The grades established in the six preceding sections for the staff corps of the Navy shall be filled by appointment from the highest members in each corps, according to seniority; and new commissions shall be issued to the officers so appointed, in which the titles and grades established in said sections shall be inserted; and no existing commission shall be vacated in the said several staff corps, except by the issue of the new commissions required by the provisions of this section; and no officer shall be reduced in rank or lose seniority in his own corps by any change which may be required under the provisions of the said six preceding sections: Provided, That the issuing of a new appointment and commission to any officer of the Pay Corps under the provisions of this section shall not affect or annul any existing bond, but the same shall remain in force, and apply to such new appointment and commission."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved paragraph will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 2691 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"No collector, surveyor, or naval officer shall ever receive more than $400 annually, exclusive of his compensation as collector, surveyor, or naval officer, and the fines and forfeitures allowed by law, for any services he may perform for the United States in any office or capacity, except as provided in sections 2554 and 2657."

Mr. THURMAN. The Clerk read 2654. It is 3354 in the print.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That was altered yesterday. It is an error in the print. It is right as read at the desk.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not rise to say anything upon this particular amendment, about which I know nothing, but I want to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee who reported this bill. As I understood him the other day, he said that the bill makes no changes in the law; that the object of the bill is simply to make the Revised Statutes conform to what was the law on the 1st of December, 1873. Am I right in that?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator from Ohio is right in the main. Speaking generally of the bill there are no changes of the law; but the attention of the Senate was yesterday called to two questions where the Revised Statutes followed the original statute and brought forward what was manifestly an error; that is to say, where the language does not express the intention exactly: one in regard to the seizure of distilleries, where the phrase "to be" preceded "seized," when it manifestly should have been otherwise. The attention of the Senate was called to those two cases, but speaking generally there is no change in the law known to the committee.

Mr. THURMAN. If this bill passes, of course it changes the Revised Statutes wherein the Revised Statutes differ from the law as it was before December, 1873. Of course the Revised Statutes being the last statutes enacted and approved in June, 1874, they operate to repeal the previous law wherever there is a difference. There can be no question about that. If then this bill changes the Revised Statutes so as to make the law what it was before the passage of the Revised Statutes, it is just so much amending the Revised Statutes, which now are the statutes in force. As to the mode of doing this, I have looked over this bill and I find a great many amendments, and let us see of what character they are:

Section 259 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "agriculture."

* * * * * * * * *

Section 335 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "agriculture."

Section 354 is amended by inserting after the word "questions," in the second line, the word "of."

Section 637 is amended by inserting after the word "circuit," in the ninth line, the word "court."

Section 702 is amended by inserting after the word "cause," in the eleventh line, the word "when."

Section 838 is amended by inserting after the word "be," in the first line, the word "the."

And a great many more. I read these for the purpose merely of illustration. Let me read one or two others:

Section 1097 is amended by inserting, in the second line, after the word "who" the word "shall."

* * * * * * * * *

Section 1118 is amended by striking out the words "any criminal offense," in the third line, and inserting the words "a felony."

And here is another:

Section 1123 is amended by inserting a comma after the word "post," in the first line.

Then there are other amendments which consist in changing "and" to "or," or "or" to "and," and the like, very minute indeed. What I wish to know is in what condition we shall have the laws for reference and use when all these amendments, some of them merely verbal, others of them that affect the sense, shall be simply in the session laws, and the volume that is in use all through the country, in the courts, in lawyers' offices, in Legislatures, in Congress, the Revised Statutes, stands uncorrected.

What I wish to submit to the committee is whether the time has not necessarily come for a new edition, owing to the amendments heretofore made to the Revised Statutes, and owing to those which this bill proposes, and which may be good for aught I know, but no mortal man can tell unless he takes up the Revised Statutes and goes over them seriatim, just, no doubt, as the members of the committee have done, whether the alterations are wise or unwise. I cannot tell what legislation you are making by this bill, and could not unless I had more time than I certainly have to devote to it. But what I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts is whether the time has not now come, owing to the amendments heretofore made, amounting, I think, to between two and three hundred, perhaps over three hundred, and those which are proposed by this bill, which will add a hundred or more to those already made, to direct that there shall be a reprint of the Revised Statutes, with all the amendments up to this time in a correct form as the law will stand after this bill shall be passed. I know that involves some expense, but the expense is nothing compared to the necessity of having the law in proper form so that it can be understood.

I know from long experience how it will be with this revision. We pass all these amendments. A careful, prudent lawyer will take his copy of the Revised Statutes and the session laws and with his pen or pencil in hand he will make the corrections in the margin of his Revised Statutes; but even then he will have great difficulty in stating at every proper place when the amendment took place. He will do that; but for one man who will do it there will be a thousand who will not do any such thing. Therefore every court, every member of a Legislature, everybody who uses the statutes, is in danger every day of being misled by the previous publication of the laws.

I therefore submit that if the amendments are to be made, especially in the very singular way these are made, (and I do not know that they could have been otherwise, by simply saying that you shall insert a word after another word in some place in the Revised Statutes or that you shall strike out a word in some place in the Revised Statutes,) it is indispensable that there shall be a republication of those statutes as thus corrected up to this time; and I submit whether or not an amendment to this bill would not be proper that would require such a republication.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I agree with very much that has been said by the Senator from Ohio. He will bear in mind, however, that while he has called the attention of the Senate to many proposed amendments which considered separately would be quite unimportant in changing the construction of the statutes, yet when the attention of the committee was drawn to discrepancies between the Revised Statutes and the text of the original statutes the committee did not feel at liberty to decline to notice those differences and report them to the Senate. For the most part, however, where the amendments reported in this bill do change the Revised Statutes, in the particulars wherein the change is made they bring the Revised Statutes in conformity with the original statutes.

There were two ways open for the amendment of the Revised Statutes. One was to reproduce the text of each section as it stands in the Revised Statutes, incorporating into it the amendment. That would add very much to the volume of the text of the new statute, and practically in use would not relieve those who have occasion to consult the statutes, whether they are citizens, attorneys, or judges, from the necessity of considering the session acts as well as the volume of Revised Statutes. The committee were controlled in regard to this bill as to its form by the circumstance that two years ago another committee reported a bill amending the Revised Statutes in the manner in which this bill is now presented to the Senate. The committee did not feel at liberty, if they had had a different opinion, which I am not prepared to say they had, to change the mode of presenting the amendments.

As to the more important matter to which the Senator from Ohio has called the attention of the Senate, whether the time has not come when there should be a new edition of the Revised Statutes, I should say that the time is near when first by resolution and agreement there should be no further revision of the statutes for the purpose of making them conform to the text of the laws from which the Revised Statutes are drawn, but that we should accept them as the basis of all future legislation, and any proposed amendment should depend upon its merits and not upon the fact that the law was otherwise before these statutes were adopted. I think that is the first thing to be done.

Then, secondly, we should have a new edition of the Revised Statutes, and for three reasons that occur to me: First, for the reason stated by the Senator from Ohio, that in one body of statutes the country may find its law; secondly, that we may have a new and better index to the statutes, because whatever may be said in the way of criticisms, (and, as I said yesterday, I think too much has been said in the way of criticism of this work,) should in my judgment be directed to the index. It is very imperfect. Then when another edition is prepared it would at least be respectable. Then prefixed to it should be the Constitution of the United States, if not the Articles of Confederation and the Declaration of Independence. I think it is an anomalous thing in the history of this country that the body of its law is presented without the Constitution, which is the basis of its law. Those reasons would lead me to the view, and I do not object to an amendment, if the Senator from Ohio will propose one, that this be considered the last act for the amendment of the Revised Statutes for the purpose of making them harmonize with the text of the original laws, and that we then order a new edition the expense of which may not be great.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Ohio will offer such an amendment as he has suggested.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will allow me one moment, I wish to say that I am glad to know the chairman of the committee agrees substantially in the opinion I expressed, that there ought to be a new edition of the statutes published, and I am glad to hear the suggestion that this should be considered as the last of the corrections. There is still another reason that would operate to some extent to induce the republication, that is, to insert the laws that have been passed since which are not merely corrections or amendments of the statutes. What the Senator says about a copy of the Constitution being prefixed is certainly correct. My attention was called to that the other day by a letter which I received from a very eminent judge in my own State. He said it was a perfect shame that the Constitution was not prefixed to or contained in this revision, and that he did not know why it had been omitted unless it had become obsolete! That may be the reason; I cannot tell; but it ought to be there so that those who think it is not entirely obsolete may sometimes more conveniently have reference to it than if they have to go and hunt it up elsewhere.

This is a matter of printing, and I do not know whether I could frame an amendment so well as the chairman of the Committee on Printing; he understands the subject of printing so much better than I do. I would be very glad to unite my labors with his to fix up something that would be right. I am afraid to attempt it myself, however; I might make some blunder about it. Possibly it ought to be in a separate bill and more carefully matured than by putting it in as an amendment to this bill; but all I wish to express is the hope that before this session ends some provision will be made by bill, and I think it will come more properly from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. ANTHONY. It will be remembered that this great book was printed in three days, and I suppose it was one of the greatest feats if not the greatest in typography that we have any record of. Necessarily there must have been a great many errors, although I think the errors did not arise from the Printing Office. We have been obliged from time to time to enact laws to make the statutes, as they have been revised, conform to what they were intended to be, and what they were before they were revised. I understand the chairman of the committee to say that this bill completes this work, and that, after it has passed, all the errors in the revision, so far as they have been ascertained—and they have probably nearly all been reached now—will have been corrected. It will be perfectly safe then to accept the Revised Statutes with this last correction as the basis of future legislation. That being the case, it is certainly very desirable that we should have this basis of future legislation all before us, in every act, upon each particular subject, and that we shall not have to look to the session laws to find out what the laws were before they were revised.

Whether it would be advisable to make another revision and to incorporate into the statutes the acts that have been passed since, I will not undertake to say. I should suppose that would be a pretty laborious work, and would be, of course, liable to a good deal of delay and to some error; but it seems to me that the laws, as they will now be revised when this bill is passed, ought to be corrected, and the present revision, going back to correct the statutes at the date of their publication, should be republished, so that the laws up to that time will be understood.

Mr. INGALLS. Have not the stereotype plates been preserved from which the original revision was printed?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; but I suppose they would be useless for this purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. I should suppose they might be made serviceable with very little additional expense.

Mr. ANTHONY. It may be. That would reduce the expense very much.

Mr. HAMLIN. I listened with very great pleasure to the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio this morning. I concur, I may say perhaps entirely, with what he has said; but it would seem to me that something more should be done than the adoption of the amendments now pending before we shall venture to reprint our statutes. In running my eye over this bill hastily, I find no suggestion of amendments emanating from the Post-Office Department. I have not myself carefully examined the principal statutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are some amendments relating to the Post-Office, all that the attention of the committee was called to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator tells me that there are some and that all that the committee's attention had been called to had been indorsed by that committee. I had not myself carefully examined all the original statutes in the original text and compared them with the text in the Revised Statutes, but there is one chapter in that book which, if it is as erroneous in other States as the State which I partially represent here, it will be a marvel of errata such as never were known to creep into any book on earth. I refer to that chapter which contains the post-routes. Now, without a post-route first being established by law, the Postmaster-General has no power to place mail service upon it. We create the route. The law vests the authority in him to place and to regulate service upon the route after we have created it. I will not say with absolute certainty, but I think there are fifty errors in that chapter in the post-routes in Maine, names of places, names of localities, and some of them do not even profess to retain the idem sonans of what should be there. If we are going to reprint this volume, (and I think it ought to be reprinted and am clearly and entirely of opinion with the Senator from Ohio,) we want, I affirm, before we make such an order, to do a little more with the Revised Statutes than this bill does. I confess I was in doubt myself by what power or by what ingenuity the Post-Office Department could relet the mails over some of the routes in Maine, and I do not know now, for there are no such places above the earth or beneath the skies ever known to man, woman, or child as are stated in the statutes regulating routes in Maine. I have had my attention by some other gentlemen called to the same condition of things in other States. I only mention this to say that while I concur in the idea of having our statutes all before us there should be something more done than the mere adoption of this bill before that is done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved clause will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, the next reserved clause is:

Section 2720 is amended by inserting, in the fifth line, after the word "States" the words "but each surveyor of this class shall be entitled to a maximum compensation of $2,000 a year out of any and all fees and emoluments by him received;" and by inserting, in the ninth line, after the word "surveyor" the words "at the ports designated in section 2719."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WITHERS in the chair.) The bill will now be resumed at the point where it was left off yesterday. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3740 is amended by inserting, in the sixth line, after the words "member of" the words "or Delegate to."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ought to state to the Senate the facts in connection with this amendment. The preceding section, which is a limitation upon the right of members of Congress to participate in contracts with officers of the Government, says "no member of or Delegate in Congress." The commissioners introduced the phrase "or Delegate." The original statute was an injunction upon members of Congress, without specifying whether they represented States or were Delegates from Territories. The harmony of the different sections, all relating to the same subject, requires that these words "or Delegate to" should be inserted, but I have to say that the introduction of them by the commission was not authorized by the original text.

Mr. THURMAN. Do you propose to strike them out?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir. We propose to make two sections which relate to the same subject also embrace Delegates, inasmuch as the first section on the subject of contracts barring members of Congress from participating in them says "no member of or Delegate in Congress" shall so and so.

Mr. THURMAN. I think what the Senator says is perfectly correct, that Delegates were not originally included; but I think they always ought to have been.

Mr. BOUTWELL. And the commission evidently so thought, but neglected in two sections to incorporate the words.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 3741 is amended by inserting, in the third line, after the words "member of" the words "or Delegate to."

Section 3742 is amended by inserting, in the fourth line, after the words "member of" the words "or Delegate to."

Section 3743 is amended by inserting after the word "States," in the fourth line, the words "the Second Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States or the Commissioner of Customs, respectively, according to the nature thereof."

Section 3772 is amended by striking out, in the first line, the word "furnising" and inserting the word "furnishing."

Section 3802 is amended by striking out, in the first line, the word "appropriation" and inserting the word "appropriation."

Section 3823 is amended by striking out all after the word "in," in the first line, to the word "one," in the third line, and inserting therefor the words "each State and Territory of the United States."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the chairman of the committee why that change is made in section 3823. It reads:

The Clerk of the House of Representatives shall select in Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas, one or more newspapers, not exceeding the number allowed by law.

Now it is proposed to strike out all that and insert in lieu of those particular States the words "each State and Territory of the United States."

Mr. BOUTWELL. By a statute to be found in volume 14, page 407, a statute of March 2, 1867, the authority was limited to the States that are enumerated in this section now under consideration of the Revised Statutes. By a subsequent act, passed March 13, 1867, which was, as will be observed, at a subsequent session of Congress, although in the same month, those words were stricken out and the authority was extended to all the States and Territories of the Union, using the language which is employed in this clause of the bill by way of amendment.

Section 3915 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"The Postmaster-General shall cause to be prepared a special stamp or stamped envelope, to be used only for official mail matter, for each of the Executive Departments; and said stamps and stamped envelopes shall be supplied by the proper officer of said Departments to all persons under its direction requiring the same for official use; and all appropriations for postage made prior to March 3, 1873, shall no longer be available for said purpose; and all stamps and stamped envelopes shall be sold or furnished to said several Departments or clerks only at the price for which stamps and stamped envelopes of like value are sold at the several post-offices."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire an explanation of that. In section 3915, to which this is proposed to be added, the language used is:

The Postmaster-General shall provide suitable letter and newspaper envelopes, with such water-marks or other guards against counterfeits as he may deem expedient, and with postage stamps with such device and of such suitable denominations as he may direct, impressed thereon; and such envelopes shall be known as "stamped envelopes," and shall be sold, as nearly as may be, at the cost of procuring them with the addition of the value of the postage stamps impressed thereon; but no stamped envelope furnished by the Government shall contain any lithographing or engraving, nor any printing except a printed request to return the letter to the writer. Letters and papers inclosed in such stamped envelopes shall, if the postage-stamp is of a denomination sufficient to cover the postage properly chargeable thereon, pass in the mail as prepaid matter.

This amendment proposes that—

The Postmaster-General shall cause to be prepared a special stamp or stamped envelope, to be used only for official mail matter for each of the Executive Departments; and said stamps and stamped envelopes shall be supplied by the proper officer of said Departments to all persons under its direction requiring the same for official use.

Then the amendment provides:

And all appropriations for postage made prior to March 3, 1873, shall no longer be available for said purpose; and all stamps and stamped envelopes shall be sold or furnished to said several Departments or clerks only at the price for which stamps and stamped envelopes of like value are sold at the several post-offices.

It would seem under the first clause of this amendment that the special stamps and the special stamped envelopes shall be furnished to all the employés of the Post-Office Department, and then the last clause of the amendment would seem to imply that the other Departments should buy them from the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The provision of the existing law is taken from a statute of 1872; that was previous to the abolition of the franking privilege; and it gave to the Postmaster-General power to furnish stamps to the public through the post-office on sale. When the franking privilege was abolished in 1873, there was an amendment in the form of a proviso to an appropriation bill which will be found in volume 17 of the statutes, page 542, containing the phrase which is in the amendment now before the Senate; and that amendment, it will be observed, relates to envelopes and stamps for the use of the several Departments and properly to be sold or furnished. That phrase was used in order to cover any arrangement that might be made as to the mode. There was a difference of opinion at one time whether they should be sold to the Departments and money actually paid and taken out of the contingent fund on a specific appropriation for that purpose, or whether they should be furnished upon account. This is merely bringing into the Revised Statutes an express provision of the law of 1873. There is no change even of a word, I believe, as it was read at the desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. Making it discretionary with the Department either to furnish the envelopes already stamped, or to sell them to the parties to be paid out of the contingent fund?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not understand that. I only understand that this law contemplated that under some other statute the Postmaster-General might be directed to furnish them, or he might be directed to sell them, and it would cover either case. I do not understand that this gives him discretion; but, however, I confine myself not to the effect of the statute so much as to the fact whether the amendment is required by the language of the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment as taken from a former statute would only allow them to be sold.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not mean to say that. I mean to say it authorizes the Postmaster-General to provide these stamped envelopes and to furnish them to the Departments either for sale or upon account, just as the law may authorize him to do. He is acting under some statute, of course.

Mr. INGALLS. This amendment appears to me to perpetuate what I have always regarded as a very transparent fiction on the part of the Post-Office Department. If this proviso is contained in any statute that has been adopted since the passage of the revision of the laws, I think it is high time it was abandoned, and I should regret exceedingly to see it incorporated into any further revision that the committee may see fit to submit to us.

If I understand the amendment correctly, it provides that one Department of the Government shall prepare a certain number of stamps and envelopes to which shall be attached a purely fictitious valuation, and that they shall be sold to another Department of the Government for a sum that has been thus fictitiously attached to them for the purpose of diminishing as far as possible an apparent deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department. Now we are annually appropriating a deficiency of several millions of dollars for the purpose of carrying on the transportation of the mail. It is certainly immaterial to the Government whether this amount is increased or diminished by the transportation of its own matter. What I conceive to be the true theory is that in regard to all envelopes and stamps that are used by the Post-Office Department the Government should be called upon simply to pay the actual cost of their manufacture and no more.

What is the use of continuing this absurd fiction of attaching a value to stamps and to envelopes in which the matter of the Government itself is to be transported? Why not increase the deficiency and submit to the country what is the actual expense of this transportation, instead of attempting by this very transparent device to deceive the people as to the discrepancy that exists between the amount actually received and the amount expended for the transportation of the mail?

I trust that this amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not seem to understand the purpose of this.

Mr. INGALLS. I think I do.

Mr. DAWES. The purpose of it is very apparent. It was in the beginning. It was to satisfy the people in this way how much was saved by abolishing the franking privilege.

Mr. INGALLS. That was what I understood.

Mr. DAWES. I am surprised the Senator should not have seen it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Perhaps all that is said about the wisdom of abolishing the franking privilege may be true; but I respectfully submit that it does not concern us upon this bill. This is merely bringing into the Revised Statutes a provision of law that was adopted in March, 1873, in order to meet the condition of things that would take place when the act abolishing the franking privilege should take effect, which was by the bill to take effect the 1st day of July, 1873. It has not been restored; and the Departments have business; they must carry it on, and their postage account must be made by furnishing the stamps and stamped envelopes either without pay or with pay. But I do not see that it concerns us to-day. Some day when the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have the floor, and will either assail or defend the franking privilege, then I think it will become the Senate to discuss the question.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the object of incorporating this amendment, which the Senator himself admits to be nugatory and empty and idle, in another revision of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know how the Post-Office Department has gone on since the statutes were revised; but I cannot find in them any authority for furnishing these envelopes to the Departments, though I suppose it has been done; but I do not mean to express an opinion about that. There may be some authority, but the committee are advised that there is in fact no authority for doing what is done and that the reproduction of this provision is necessary to enable the Departments to go on with their business, to go on by specific authority of the law.

Mr. INGALLS. How have the Departments gone on before?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know.

Mr. INGALLS. I regard this as being wholly deceptive and illusory. I do not think it ought to be adopted. It is part of that absurd humbug which has prevailed in this country for a considerable period of time in regard to making the Post-Office Department, as it is called, self-sustaining, and I am surprised that the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws is willing to lend himself to this preposterous humbug, and I hope he will not insist on this amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, I hardly ever defend myself against such a charge; but I submit to the Senate that I am in no way defending the policy of the Post-Office Department, whether it be wise or whether it answer to the classical phrase which the Senator from Kansas employed, in reference to the abolition of the franking privilege and the policy that grew out of it. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws have nothing whatever to do with the policy of the franking privilege or the abolition of the franking privilege. What we are charged with is to bring to the attention of the Senate any defects or errors that may have occurred in the revision of the statutes, and as far as I am informed this was an error, and upon that fact I ask the judgment of the Senate, and I hope the Senator from Kansas will not object to this. Until we have an opportunity in some way to revise the system of using the mails by the Departments of the Government, there certainly ought to be legal authority for doing what is absolutely necessary to be done; that is, to furnish from the Post-Office Department to the other Departments the means of using the mails. That is all this does.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this merely an incorporation of the language of a statute passed subsequently to the revision?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, before the revision. It is left out of the revision.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this in hæc verba?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Just the same. I will read the original statute, if the Senator desires.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall be willing to take the Senator's statement.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well. I hope there will be no question upon this.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 4203 is amended by striking out in the first line, after the word "to," the word "the."

Section 4219 is amended by substituting therefor the following:

"Upon vessels which shall be entered in the United States from any foreign port or place there shall be paid duties as follows:

"On vessels built within the United States but belonging wholly or in part to subjects of foreign powers, at the rate of thirty cents per ton; on other vessels not of the United States, at the rate of fifty cents per ton.

"Upon every vessel not of the United States, which shall be entered in one district from another district, having on board goods, wares, or merchandise taken in one district to be delivered in another district, duties shall be paid at the rate of fifty cents per ton. Nothing in this section shall be deemed in any wise to impair any rights or privileges which have been or may be acquired by any foreign nation under the laws and treaties of the United States relative to the duty of tonnage on vessels.

"On all foreign vessels which shall be entered in the United States from any foreign port or place, to and with which vessels of the United States are not ordinarily permitted to enter and trade, there shall be paid a duty at the rate of $2 per ton; and none of the duties on tonnage above mentioned shall be levied on the vessels of any foreign nation if the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the discriminating or countervailing duties of such foreign nations, so far as they operate to the disadvantage of the United States, have been abolished.

"In addition to the tonnage duty above imposed, there shall be paid a tax, at the rate of thirty cents per ton, on vessels which shall be entered at any custom-house within the United States from any foreign port or place; and any rights or privileges acquired by any foreign nation under the laws and treaties of the United States relative to the duty of tonnage on vessels shall not be impaired; and any vessel any officer of which shall not be a citizen of the United States shall pay a tax of fifty cents per ton."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear an explanation of that. I see it is very different from the tonnage duties in chapter 3 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Different from what, sir?

Mr. COCKRELL. This substitution seems to be entirely different from the present statutes. How did that difference arise that the Revised Statutes should have omitted so much or should be so incorrect?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That I am unable to say. The subject to which this relates, the tonnage duties upon vessels, is a complicated subject from the circumstance that there have been since the beginning of the Government at least five different statutes passed in regard to it; and if the Senate vote for this amendment it must be pretty largely upon faith, because it would hardly be possible in the presence of the Senate to go through with the different statutes and show wherein section 4219 is defective or erroneous as compared with the proposed amendment.

In the first place the matter has been very carefully revised at the Treasury Department, and I have to say that the provisions relating to tonnage duties embraced in the amendment proposed by the committee conform exactly to the practice of the Department under existing laws at the time that the revision of the laws was made; but the commissioners omitted in some particulars, introduced provisions from statutes that had been repealed, and changed the tonnage duties to some extent in violation of existing treaties, I believe.

In addition to the revision by the Treasury Department, the committee have been carefully over the whole subject and examined all the statutes. I can refer the Senator to the statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I do not ask that. Does this substitute now bring the law to what the custom and practice of the Department was at the time of the revision?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Exactly, and I believe to the law. I have no doubt the practice of the Department conformed to the law, and this amendment conforms to the practice of the Department, to the present opinion of the Department, and conforms to the best judgment which the committee were able to make upon an examination of the statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The next amendment, to section 4264, I suppose is just the same?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.

Section 4264 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"The provisions, requisitions, penalties, and liens enumerated in the several sections of this chapter relating to the space in vessels appropriated to the use of passengers are hereby extended and made applicable to all spaces appropriated to the use of steerage passengers in vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and navigation from, to, and between the ports and in manner as herein named, and to such vessels and to the masters thereof; and the space appropriated to the use of steerage passengers in vessels as above propelled and navigated is hereby made subject to the supervision and inspection of the collector of the customs in any port in the United States at which any such vessel shall arrive, or from which she shall be about to depart; and the same shall be examined and reported in the same manner and by the same officers directed in the preceding section to examine and report."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should correct the answer I just now made without sufficient thought to the Senator from Missouri. This amendment is the introduction of the tenth section of chapter 213 of the statutes of 1855, found in volume 10 of the statutes page 718, which was omitted bodily from the revision, and is in the exact words of the original text.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 4284 is amended by striking out, in the seventh line, the word "owner" and inserting the word "owners."

Section 4290 is amended by striking out, in the second subdivision, the last word "thirty" and inserting therefor the words "ninety-seven."

Section 4315 is amended by inserting in the second line, before the word "vessel," the words "steamboat or."

Section 4318 is amended by striking out, in the sixth line, the word "register" and inserting the word "registry."

Section 4319 is amended by inserting in the third line, after the word "following," the word "form;" and by striking out, in the thirty-first line, the word "act" and inserting the word "title."

Section 4320 is amended by striking out, in the last line, the words "the duty of six cents per ton being first paid."

Section 4347 is amended by striking out, in the first line, the word "imported" and inserting therefor the word "transported."

Section 4381 is amended by inserting in the second line of the sixth subdivision, after the word "cents," a comma, and in the third line, after the words "less than fifty tons," a semicolon; and by adding at the end of the section the following: "Where a surveyor certifies a manifest, or grants a permit, or receives a certified manifest and grants a permit, the fees arising therefrom shall be received by him solely for his use; and all other fees arising by virtue of this section shall be received and accounted for by the collector, or, at his option, by the naval officer, where there is one, and where there is a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be equally divided monthly between the said officers; and where there is no naval officer, two-thirds to the collector and the other third to the surveyor; and where there is only a collector, he shall receive the whole amount thereof; and where there is more than one surveyor in any district, each of them shall receive his proportional part of such fees as shall arise at the port for which he is appointed; and in all cases where the tonnage of any ship or vessel shall be ascertained by any person appointed for that purpose, such person shall be paid a reasonable compensation therefor out of the fees aforesaid, before any distribution thereof as aforesaid."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if there is an omission in section 4381 of the Revised Statutes of as much as that?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir. It is brought forward from the statutes of 1793, chapter 8, part of section 34, omitted entirely from the revision.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was it not repealed by any statute between that time and the revision?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 4390 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the words "forty-four hundred and fifty-three" and inserting the words "forty-three hundred and eighty-seven."

Section 4409 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the word "and" and inserting the word "or."

Section 4415 is amended by striking out, in the twentieth line, the word "liable" and inserting the word "able;" by striking out, in the twenty-sixth line, the word "inspectors" and inserting the word "inspector;" and by inserting in the twenty-fifth line, after the word "hulls," the words "or an inspector of boilers."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the attention of the chairman. I think there is evidently a mistake or omission. If the last part of this clause as it will be here amended is read, I think the chairman will see that there must be some change made in it. It is on the bottom of page 860, the last three lines. The statute now reads:

The inspectors of hulls and the inspector of boilers thus designated, when approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, from the date of designation, constitute a board of local inspectors.

Now it is proposed to strike out the letter "s" in the first word there, "inspectors," and insert after the word "hulls" the words "or an inspector of boilers." When the amendments are made it will read then:

The inspector of hulls or an inspector of boilers and the inspector of boilers.

I do not think that was the intention, certainly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It now reads:

The inspectors of hulls and the inspector of boilers thus designated.

And the proposition is to have it read:

The inspector of hulls and the inspector of boilers.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the way you have the amendment it will not be that. That is the reason I am calling attention to it. It will be when you have the amendment inserted:

The inspector of hulls or an inspector of boilers and the inspector of boilers.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator errs in the place.

Mr. COCKRELL. You do not strike out any words there, if you will notice.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator will observe, the first amendment is by striking out in the twenty-sixth line the word "inspectors." The twenty-sixth line is the third line from the bottom:

The inspectors of hulls and the inspector of boilers.

It should be "The inspector of hulls and the inspector of boilers." That amendment will make that read as it should. Then, by inserting in the twenty-fifth line, which is the preceding line, after the the word "hulls" the words "or an inspector of boilers," it will read:

No appointment of an inspector of hulls or an inspector of boilers shall be made without the concurrence of the supervising inspector.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes it intelligible.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is right.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 4420 is amended by striking out, in the first line, after the word "preceding" the word "section" and inserting therefor the word "sections."

Section 4421 is amended by inserting, in the fifth line, after the word "made" a comma.

Section 4440 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "inspector" and inserting the word "inspectors."

Section 4441 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "inspector" and inserting the word "inspectors."

Section 4467 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the word "opened" and inserting the word "open."

Section 4472 is amended by striking out, in the fifteenth line, the word "practical" and inserting the word "practicable."

Section 4490 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "carry" and inserting the word "carrying."

Section 4513 is amended by striking out of the first line the words "preceding section" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "section 4511."

Section 4522 is amended by inserting, in the last line, after the word "proceed" the word "on."

Section 4575 is amended by striking out, in the second line of the second subdivision, the words "shipping commissioner or officer acting as such in" and inserting the words "collector of the customs of."

Section 4605 is amended by striking out, in the fifth line, the word "seamen" and inserting the word "seaman."

Section 4622 is struck out.

Section 4658 is amended by striking out, in the seventh line, the word "fo" and inserting the word "of."

Section 4768 is amended by striking out, in the second line, after the word "of" the word "pensions" and inserting the word "pension."

Section 4770 is struck out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I find that section 4770 reads:

In place of original checks issued for pensions, when lost, stolen, or destroyed, disbursing officers and agents of the United States are authorized, after the expiration of six months from the date of such checks, to issue duplicate checks, and the Treasurer, Assistant Treasurers, and designated depositaries of the United States are directed to pay such checks drawn in pursuance of law by such officers or agents, upon notice and proof of the loss of the original checks, under such regulations in regard to their issue and payment, and upon the execution of such bonds, with sureties, to indemnify the United States, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. But this section shall not apply to any check exceeding in amount the sum of $500.

This proposes to strike that out. I think that was adopted in April, 1871, and I find no other provision made for issuing duplicate checks under the present law. If there is, I have not found it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. In 1872 an act was passed which will be found in volume 17, page 29 of the statutes, which made the same provision, but said "this section shall not apply to any check exceeding in amount the sum of $1,000," which increased the amount $500. That act of 1872 is brought forward in the Revised Statutes as sections 3546 and 3647.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not under the heading in regard to pensions.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The phraseology may not be precisely the same, but the object is the same, and it increases the amount; and I may say that the statute of 1872 is general, while the statute of 1871 was limited to pensions. It was considered that the statute of 1872 worked a repeal of the statute of 1871; at any rate it is of no value, because section 3646 is the larger statute and is in operation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator suppose then that the provisions of section 3646 cover these checks or drafts on the pension fund?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir; they cover everything, not only the pension fund but all other disbursing business of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Section 3646 is almost the same as this except that it is a general provision.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes; the operation of the statute of 1871 is limited to checks not exceeding $500, and the general statute of 1872 extends the operation of the law to checks not exceeding a thousand dollars.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Section 4787 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"The provisions of this section shall apply to all officers, non-commissioned officers, enlisted and hired men of the land and naval forces of the United States, who, in the line of their duty as such, shall have lost limbs or sustained bodily injuries depriving them of the use of any of their limbs, to be determined by the Surgeon-General of the Army; and the term of five years herein specified shall be held to commence in each case with the filing of the application for the benefits of this section."

Section 4790 is amended by inserting in the second line, after the word "rebellion," the words "or is entitled to the benefits of section 4787."

Section 4791 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"The transportation allowed for having artificial limbs fitted shall be furnish by the Quartermaster-General of the Army, the cost of which shall be refunded from the appropriations for invalid pensions."

Section 5020 is amended by inserting in the first line, after the word "from," the word "time."

Section 5174 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the words "but pieces" and inserting the word "bed-pieces."

Section 5211 is amended by striking out, in the seventh line, the word "associations" and inserting the word "association."

Section 5225 is amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "six" and inserting the word "five."

Section 5269 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following: "to be recovered by an action or actions at law in any district court of the United States."

Section 5291 is amended by striking out, in the third line, the word "enlist" and inserting the word "enlists."

Section 5292 is amended by inserting in the sixth line, after the word "vessels," the words "and for regulating the same;" and by inserting in the twenty-third line, before the word "he," the word "as."

Section 5293 is amended by striking out the first subdivision, and transposing the fourth subdivision so as to read as the first subdivision.

Section 5309 is amended by inserting in the third line, after the word "same," the word "may."

Section 5413 is amended by inserting in the seventh line, after the word "may," the word "be."

Section 5455 is amended by inserting, after the word "seaman" in the twelfth, fourteenth, and fifteenth lines, and after the word "sailor" in the seventeenth line, the words "or other person," and by adding to the section the words "to be enforced in any court of the United States having jurisdiction."

Section 5470 is amended by inserting, in the sixteenth line, after the word "thereon," a semicolon.

Section 5479 is amended by striking out, in the eleventh line, the word "to" immediately preceding the word "procure" and inserting the word "or."

Section 5579 is amended by striking out, in the fourth line, the words "the Patent Office" and inserting the word "Patents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the text of the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have several amendments to propose which relate to the second volume of the Statutes, those concerning the District of Columbia. They are found in Senate bill No. 758.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that will be regarded as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will state that these amendments which I now propose have been agreed to by the committee. The House has passed a bill for amending the second volume of the statutes which agrees I believe exactly with the bill reported by the Senate, which I now offer as amendments to the pending bill. I do that because the bill which has come from the House has not been considered by the committee of the Senate and therefore I am not authorized to report the House bill; but I purpose to take the Senate bill, which has been agreed to by the committee, and offer its several provisions as amendments. I ask the Clerk to read the bill, omitting lines 31 and 32, which should be stricken out.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the following amendments be, and the same are hereby, made to the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, namely:

Section 192 is amended by inserting after the word "the," in the second line, the word "Union."

Section 195 is amended by inserting after the word "ten," in the seventh line, the words "Revised Statutes of the United States."

Section 309 is amended by striking out in the third line, where it occurs the second time, the word "three" and inserting the word "six."

Section 312 is amended by striking out, in the fifth line, the word "three" and inserting the word "six."

Section 322 is amended by inserting after the words "United States," in the second line, the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Section 445 is amended by striking out, at the end of the section, the word "two" and inserting the word "three."

Section 467 is amended by inserting after the word "President," in the second line, the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Section 476 is amended by inserting after the word "section," in the first line, the words "four hundred and thirty nine."

Section 717 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes" the words "of the United States."

Section 754 is amended by adding, at the end of the section, the words "Whenever at a general term, held by four justices, the court shall be equally divided, such division shall be noted on the minutes; and within four days either party may file with the clerk a motion to have the cause re-argued before five justices; and such re-argument shall be as soon as conveniently may be."

Section 764 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the last line, the words "of the United States."

Section 765 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the third line, the words "of the United States."

Section 780 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the fifth line, the words "of the United States."

Section 811 is amended by inserting after the words "indebted to," in the second line, the words "the defendant in."

Section 841 is amended by inserting after the word "section," in the third line, the letter "s," so as to read "sections;" and inserting after the words "one hundred and four," in the third line, the words "one hundred and seven and one hundred and eight;" and adding at the end of the section the words "and of bribery at elections."

Section 843 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the eighth line, the words "of the United States."

Section 847 is amended by striking out, in the last line, the words "in the following section" and inserting the words "otherwise by law."

Section 853 is amended by inserting after the words "the circuit," in the second line, the words "and district;" and by striking out in the second line, commencing with the word "District," the remainder of the section and inserting the words "of the United States, by the act of February 26, 1853."

Section 897 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the last line, the words "of the United States."

Section 1193 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the fourth line, the words "of the United States."

Section 1283 is amended by striking out the word "eight," in the fourth line, and inserting the word "nine."

Section 1288 is amended by inserting after the words "Revised Statutes," in the second line, the words "of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now offer an amendment not as coming from the committee. My attention has been recently called to an omission by a judge of the supreme court of this District in section 763 and I move to amend by striking out said section and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the Secretary to be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator refer to section 763 of the general statutes?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No, sir; section 763 of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 42 of section 2 it is proposed to insert the following:

Section 763 is amended by striking out said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following as section 763:

"Said court shall have cognizance of all crimes and offenses committed within said District, and of all cases in law and equity between parties, both or either of whom shall be resident or be found within said District, and also of actions or suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity in which the United States shall be plaintiffs or complainants, and of all seizures on land or water, and of penalties and forfeitures made, arising, or accruing, under the laws of the United States; and any one of the justices may hold a criminal court for the trial of all crimes and offenses arising within said District."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will state that my attention was called to this omission by a judge of the supreme court of the District. I have examined the matter, and I find that what is proposed as new is contained in the statute of 1799, found in the first volume of the statutes, and was not brought forward in connection with the revision. It will be observed that the present section 763, which is a section of two lines only, is the conclusion of the new section which is proposed as section 763. I have no doubt that it is an omission. I will state to the Senate that this bill will go to the House and before it is acted upon in the House I will confer with the chairman of the House committee, and we will make further examination of it, but I have no doubt that the conclusion to which the judge of the court has come, which is verified by the examination I have made, will be found to be correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have only one other amendment to submit, and I suppose the error exists. The Senate has already passed upon the subject-matter. It relates to the pay of messengers bringing the votes of the various electoral colleges. I move to amend by adding in its proper place the following:

Section 144 is amended by adding at the end thereof the words "going and returning."

I have no feeling about it myself. I bring the matter to the attention of the Senate because manifestly these words are omitted in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CONKLING. That is the same question that was debated the other day.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is the same question. There were some objections made the other day to the proposition because it was new legislation upon an appropriation bill. If the law is to be restored, this is the proper time and the proper place for its restoration. I submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted for this reason: The Revised Statutes are unquestionably the law now. It is true in revising them there may have been a mistake. The revisers did not consider it so, nor did Congress consider it so at the time. But the conclusive answer is that twenty-five cents a mile is enough pay for an elector carrying the vote of a State from any of the States in the Union. Since the original law was passed the whole mode of traveling has changed. Now it is an expeditious and easy mode. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will not be passed. The Senate debated this matter and by a very decisive vote held that pay one way was sufficient compensation for electoral messengers coming from any State in the Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] desires to offer an amendment which he thinks should be made to the Revised Statutes. It is one to which the attention of the committee has not been called. He has not the amendment prepared, and in his behalf I ask that the bill be laid aside informally to be taken up and disposed of whenever he is prepared to submit his amendment, which will probably be to-morrow morning. There has been one paragraph reserved, I recollect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection be made the bill will be regarded as laid aside informally until to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that being done at this time because I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not press the request against any amendments that may be proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the last session I reported a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs and had it called up for passage. It is Senate bill No. 684, accompanied by report of committee No. 218. The chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws then objected to the passage of the bill because of the pendency of the present measure. Now if the present bill is to correct omissions in the law, I desire that this omission shall also be incorporated into the bill. It is founded upon a letter of the Secretary of War, which I shall read.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator will excuse me, I did not observe the nature of the amendment, nor the section to which the Senator proposes to apply his amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will apply it to one of the sections in regard to the Army. The amendment relates to the Ordnance Department. The Secretary of War under date of February 25, 1876, transmitted to the United States Senate and House of Representatives a letter from the Chief of Ordnance which is dated February 19, 1876, and that letter of the Chief of Ordnance reads thus:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 19, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to an omission in the Revised Statutes not enumerated in my letter of August 17, 1875.

The laws under which persons intrusted with ordnance stores were required to make returns of the same to the Chief of Ordnance were as follows:

Act of March 3, 1813. * * * The commissary of ordnance, his assistants and deputies, * * * and all other officers, agents, or persons who shall have received or may be intrusted with any stores or supplies of any description whatever for the use of the Army of the United States, and of the volunteers or militia in their service, shall render quarterly accounts of the disposition and state of all such stores and supplies to the superintendent-general of military supplies. * * *

Act of February 8, 1815, which organized the Ordnance Department upon its present basis, required that the keepers of all magazines and arsenals, in addition to the returns mentioned in the act of 1813, should "quarterly, or oftener if so directed, and in such manner as directed by the colonel of the Ordnance Department, make correct returns to the colonel or senior officer of the Ordnance Department of all ordnance, arms, and ordnance stores they may have in charge."

Most of the sections of the act of February 8, 1815, have been incorporated in the Revised Statutes, but the sixth and tenth sections, relating to ordnance returns, seem to have been entirely overlooked; and, as the act itself is repealed by the Revised Statutes, this Department is without any legislative authority whatever under which persons responsible for ordnance stores may be required to render accounts of the disposition thereof.

It is, therefore, respectfully requested that the matter be brought to the attention of Congress, and such legislation be asked as will enable this Department to continue in use the system of property accountability authorized by previous laws and regulations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

I reported from the Committee on Military Affairs the following bill:

That every officer of the Ordnance Department, every ordnance storekeeper, every post ordnance sergeant, each keeper of magazines, arsenals, and armories, every assistant and deputy of such, and all other officers, agents, or persons who shall have received or may be intrusted with any stores or supplies, shall quarterly, or oftener if so directed, and in such manner and on such forms as may be directed or prescribed by the Chief of Ordnance, make true and correct returns to the Chief of Ordnance of all ordnance arms, ordnance stores, and all other supplies and property of every kind received by or intrusted to them and each of them, or which may in any manner come into their and each of their possession or charge.

SEC. 2. That the Chief of Ordnance, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized and directed to draw up and enforce in his department a system of rules and regulations for the government of the Ordnance Department, and of all persons in said department, and for the safe-keeping and preservation of all ordnance property of every kind, and to direct and to prescribe the time, number, and forms of all returns and reports, and to enforce compliance therewith.

I have the act of 1813 and also the act of 1815, showing the law as it was then enacted and as it continued ever since up to the revision, when it was omitted. I think this bill which is prepared covers the omission of the statute and it might be put in as an amendment here.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Upon the statement made by the Senator from Missouri I will not object to the adoption of the amendment, with the understanding of course that the committee of the House, with such aid as I can give, will make an examination for the purpose of satisfying themselves that it is right, although I dare say it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 131 of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Section 1167 is amended by adding thereto the following words:

"Every officer of the Ordnance Department, every ordnance storekeeper, every post ordnance sergeant, each keeper of magazines, arsenals, and armories, every assistant and deputy of such, and all other officers, agents, or persons who shall have received or may be intrusted with any stores or supplies, shall quarterly, or oftener if so directed, and in such manner and on such forms as may be directed or prescribed by the Chief of Ordnance, make true and correct returns to the Chief of Ordnance of all ordnance arms, ordnance stores, and all other supplies and property of every kind, received by or intrusted to them and each of them, or which may in any manner come into their and each of their possession or charge. The Chief of Ordnance, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized and directed to draw up and enforce in his department a system of rules and regulations for the government of the Ordnance Department, and of all persons in said department, and for the safe-keeping and preservation of all ordnance property of every kind, and to direct and prescribe the time, number, and forms of all returns and reports, and to enforce compliance therewith."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. In regard to the amendment to section 1270 that was reserved, some reasonable doubt exists I think as to whether that amendment should be adopted. I will move to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the reserved clause.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out from lines 183 to 193, in the following words:

Section 1270 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, however, That when forage in kind cannot be furnished by the proper Departments, then, and in all such cases, officers entitled to forage may commute the same according to existing regulations: Provided further, That officers of the Army and of volunteers assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted shall, during the time they are employed on such duty, receive the pay, emoluments, and allowances of cavalry officers of the same grade respectively."

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now suggest that the bill be informally laid aside to be taken up when the Senator from Maine is ready.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued, if there be no objection.

CENTRAL BRANCH PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 60) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. CONKLING. If I may be allowed by consent of the Senator from Iowa, as his motion will be pending, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not be pending. It will fall with an adjournment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can that motion be made while we are dividing?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator who makes the motion consents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has not actually divided.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to understand before that motion is submitted what will be the condition of the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 60.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion would fall, because the Senate has not decided to take up the bill. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at two o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to a question of privilege and beg leave to present the credentials of my colleague Mr. David Dudley Field, and move that they be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, ss:

We, the secretary of state, comptroller, treasurer, attorney-general, and State engineer and surveyor of said State, having formed a board of State canvassers and having canvassed and estimated the whole number of votes given for Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States, at a special election held in the seventh congressional district of State, pursuant to a proclamation of the governor of said State, dated December 11, 1876, on the 2d day of January, 1877, according to the certified statements of the said votes, received by the secretary of state, in the manner directed by law, do hereby determine, declare, and certify that David Dudley Field was, in accordance with the laws of this State, duly and regularly elected Representative of the State of New York in the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States, to fill vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Smith Ely, jr.

Given under our hands at the office of the secretary of state of the said State, in the city of Albany, the tenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven.

JOHN BIGELOW,
Secretary of State.
F. P. ALCOTT, Comptroller.
CHARLES N. ROSS, Treasurer.
CHARLES S. FAIRCHILD,
Attorney General.
JOHN D. VAN BUREN, JR.,
State Engineer and Surveyor.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Office of the Secretary of State, ss:

I certify that I have compared the foregoing with an original certificate filed in this office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of such original.

Given under my hand and seal of office, at the city of Albany, this 10th day of January, 1877.

JOHN BIGELOW,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that Mr. Field be now sworn in.

Mr. FIELD, accompanied by Mr. HEWITT of New York, presented himself in front of the Speaker's desk and was duly qualified by taking the customary oath.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 182) providing a mode for counting the electoral vote in February next; which was read a first and second time, referred to the joint committee on the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was no objection. The joint resolution is as follows:

Whereas grave fears have been and still are entertained by many persons throughout the country that the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States will not be fairly and honestly counted when the two Houses of Congress meet for that purpose on the 14th day of February next, and that by reason thereof results of the most serious nature may befall the country, even to the shedding of blood;

And whereas for the purpose of quieting all unnecessary fears on this subject and re-assuring the country that no purpose is entertained by either House of Congress to do anything in the counting of the electoral vote that is not warranted by law and sanctioned by the acts and declarations of the ablest and wisest statesmen in the earlier days of the Republic; Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in counting the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States on the 14th day of February next, the Senate and House of Representatives shall, in making such count, proceed in the identical form and manner, so far as the same is applicable, as provided for in a bill for the count of the electoral vote which passed the Senate of the United States on the 19th day of April, 1824, which bill on the 21st day of the same month was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives, and on the 10th day of May following was reported from that committee by Daniel Webster without amendment to the House of Representatives and with a recommendation that it pass; the fourth, fifth, and seventh sections of which bill are applicable to the present count, and read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That before the Senate and House of Representatives shall assemble for the purpose of counting the votes, as hereinafter directed, each House shall choose by ballot two members thereof as tellers, whose duty it shall be to receive the certificates of the electors from the President of the Senate after they shall have been opened, and to read, and note in writing, the dates of the certificates, the names of the electors, the time of their election, and the time and place of their meeting, the number of votes given, and the names of the persons voted for, and also the substance of the certificate from the executive authority of each State accompanying the certificate of the electors; and the minutes thus made by the tellers shall be read in the presence of both Houses and a copy thereof entered on the Journals of each House.

"SEC. 5. That at twelve o'clock of the day appointed for counting the votes that may have been given for President and Vice-President, the Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives, * * * at which meeting the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer, but no debate shall be had nor question taken. The packet containing the certificates from the electors of each State shall then be opened by the President of the Senate, beginning with the State of New Hampshire and going through to Georgia, in the order in which the thirteen original States are enumerated in the Constitution, and afterward through the other States in the order in which they were respectively admitted into the Union; and if no exceptions are taken thereto, all the votes contained in such certificate shall be counted; but, if any exceptions be taken, the person taking the same shall state it in writing directly, and not argumentatively, and sign his name thereto; and if the exception be seconded by one member from the Senate and one member from the House of Representatives, and each of whom shall sign the said exception as having seconded the same, the exception shall be read by the President of the Senate, and then the Senate shall immediately retire, without question or debate to its own apartment, and each House shall take the question on the exception, without debate, by ayes and noes. So soon as the question shall be taken in either House a message shall be sent to the other, informing them of the decision of the question and that the House sending the message is prepared to resume the count; and when such message shall have been received by both Houses, they shall again meet in the same room as before, and the count shall be resumed. And if the two Houses have concurred in rejecting the vote or votes objected to, such vote or votes shall not be counted; but unless both Houses concur, such vote or votes shall be counted. The vote of one State being thus counted, another shall, in like manner, be called, and the certificates of the votes of the State thus called shall be proceeded on as is hereinbefore directed; and so on, one after another, in the order above mentioned, until the count shall be completed.

"SEC. 7. That in all cases where the election of President and Vice-President of the United States shall have been by the electors the same shall be declared and communicated to the persons elected in such manner as the Senate shall direct. In every case in which the President shall be chosen by the House of Representatives, the choice shall be declared and communicated to the person chosen in such manner as the House of Representatives shall direct; and in every case in which the Vice-President shall be chosen by the Senate, the choice shall be declared and communicated to the person chosen in such manner as the Senate shall direct."

The other sections of the bill refer to the pay of electors and such minor matters and are therefore not important.

And whereas by said bill no provision is made for counting the votes of States where the votes of more than one set of electors have been sent to the President of the Senate, which is the condition of our present electoral vote.

And whereas such vote must be counted and some body of men must be trusted to count the same, if the question is to be settled peaceably and in accordance with the forms of law: Therefore, in order to make such settlement,

Be it resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives, in making the count of the electoral votes on the 14th day of February next, and from day to day thereafter, as provided by law, shall in all cases where one or more States have sent to the President of the Senate the vote of more than one set of electors settle the question as to which votes of electors shall be counted from such State or States in accordance with the spirit of the first section of a bill reported from a select committee of the Senate on the 24th day of January, 1800, providing a mode for deciding disputed elections of President and Vice-President of the United States, as follows, to wit:

"The Senate and House of Representatives shall choose by ballot in each House six members th reof, neither of whom shall be of kin to either of the candidates, and the persons thus chosen shall form a joint committee, and no change in such committee shall be made except in case of death of one or more of its members, in such case the vacancy shall be supplied by selecting another person by ballot from the same House and in the same manner in which the deceased had been appointed. And such committee shall have power to examine into and decide which set of electors from any such State or States as aforesaid was legally elected or appointed by such State or States to cast their electoral votes as aforesaid, and the vote of such electors thus decided to be legal from any such State or States shall only be counted, and none others, in making the count of the electoral vote as herein provided. The question of the legality of electors where the votes of more than one set of electors are sent to the President of the Senate from any State or States as aforesaid shall be settled by such committee at least two days before the 4th day of March next, and no exceptions shall be taken or vote had by either House in reference to the vote of any such State or States until the report of such committee shall be made therein as aforesaid. In case such committee cannot agree at least five days before the 4th day of March next, as to which set of electors are the legal electors from any State or States where more than one set of electors have been elected and have cast their votes and sent them to the President of the Senate as aforesaid, then such committee shall call in the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who shall act as umpire and shall in each case submitted to him decide it under his oath as Chief-Justice strictly in accordance with the principles of law, and without any reference whatever to the political questions involved as to which set of electors were legally entitled to cast the electoral vote of any such State or States as aforesaid, and the decision thus made shall be final; and the vote or votes of the electors thus decided as the legal elector or electors from any such State or States as aforesaid shall be counted by the Senate and House of Representatives before the 4th day of March next as provided herein, to the end that the votes of all the States shall be counted by the Senate and House of Representatives as aforesaid, and the result of such count announced prior to the 4th day of March next."

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution in relation to counting the electoral vote; which was referred to the joint committee on the counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President, and ordered to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the people of the United States of America, That in the opinion and judgment of this House the twelfth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States hath not clothed the President of the Senate with any other or greater power in respect of the votes of the electors of President and Vice-President than to open in the presence of the two Houses the certificates of such votes.

That in the opinion and judgment of this House it is the duty of the President of the Senate, under the twelfth article of the amendments of the Constitution, to open all the certificates which he may have received, and to lay them before the two Houses of Congress to be then counted, in such manner as by act of Congress or joint rule of the two Houses may have been directed, or as the two Houses may then there determine.

That the House of Representatives of the United States goeth nowhither as a House except with its Speaker at its head, and is present and sitteth nowhere as a House except with its Speaker in his chair of office, presiding over it; and that no officer of any other body can preside over it, sitting as a House, but only its own Speaker, elected by itself.

That the certificates of the electoral votes are to be opened in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, and the electoral votes are to be counted by the two Houses, by such agents as each may appoint; each House sitting by itself in the presence of the other, presided over by its own President or Speaker, and deliberating and voting by itself, either having the right at any moment to withdraw; or if the twelfth article of the amendments of the Constitution doth permit the two Houses, in virtue of an act of Congress theretofore enacted to that effect, or by joint rule, or by mutual agreement and common consent at the time, to resolve themselves into a joint assembly or convention, such assembly or convention is one, all who compose it having equal voices; and the presiding officers of both are jointly to preside, and all questions are to be determined by majority of voices.

That no vote or votes can be counted as the electoral vote or votes, or one or more of the electoral votes of any State, without the consent of this House, or of a majority of the voices of the joint assembly or convention; nor in the absence of either House.

That no person will be President unless, upon the counting of the two Houses, he shall be found to have received the votes of a majority of the whole number of electors eligible under the Constitution and otherwise lawfully appointed, and so recognized to have been by both Houses or by a majority of voices of the joint assembly or convention.

Which being the well-considered conclusions and definitive resolutions of this House, it does further declare and resolve:

That if the mode and manner of procedure to ascertain who have been lately elected President and Vice-President of these United States be not presently settled, and the powers and rights of each House of Congress be not presently defined by act of Congress or by joint rule of these two Houses, as the peace and safety of the country demand and as this House doth most earnestly desire (being ready to hear reason in the matter, and to yield if in any wise in error) this House will unalterably adhere to and abide by and be governed by these resolves.

JONAS A. BIGELOW.

Mr. WALLING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4391) granting a pension to Jonas A. Bigelow, of Company K, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN IDAHO.

Mr. SOUTHARD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Territories, reported back the bill (S. No. 538) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Idaho; and moved that the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES L. HIGH.

Mr. CAULFIELD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3052) for the relief of James L. High; and moved that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

DOWER IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, with amendments by the Senate; and moved that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That one-third in value of all the equitable estate in real property owned and held by the husband within the District of Columbia at any time during the marriage, to which the wife has made no relinquishment of her right, shall be set apart to said wife as her dower-right in such property. Such dower may be assigned specifically by metes and bounds, or as of a third part of the net annual value of the rents, issues, and profits of the lands and tenements, or interest therein, in which the dower-right exists."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act in relation to dower in the District of Columbia."

The motion of Mr. LAWRENCE was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON. If in order, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I hope the House will have the morning hour before we go into committee.

The SPEAKER. The House has it in its power to go into committee before the morning hour.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand that; but I wish to notify the House that this motion, if agreed to, cuts off the morning hour.

Mr. SINGLETON. And pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I move that all debate on the pending amendment be closed in one minute.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was also agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CAULFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, debate on the pending amendment has been limited to one minute. The Clerk will read the pending amendment, which is the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for the second paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 30th day of June, 1877, embassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, and ministers resident shall be entitled to the salaries following, namely:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, $15 000 each; to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, $10,000 each; to Chili and Peru, $10,000 each.

Ministers resident accredited to Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and the Argentine Republic, $7,000 each.

Minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua, to reside at such place in either of said states as the President may select, $8,000.

Minister resident and consul-general to Hayti and Liberia, $4,000 each.

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment, there were —ayes 29, noes 70; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted and I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HALE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 100.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For ministers resident at Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and the Argentine Republic, at $7,500 each, $52,500.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 20 by striking out the words "Hawaiian Islands," and by striking out, of line 22, the words "fifty-two thousand five hundred" and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "forty-five thousand."

Mr. REAGAN. I have proposed four amendments, and I will call the attention of the committee to the object of them at this time as briefly as I can.

The first is to strike out, in line 20, the words "Hawaiian Islands," and to strike out, in line 22, the words "$52,500" and insert in lieu thereof the words "$45,000;" so as to make the amount required to be appropriated in the paragraph corresponding with the change made in the first amendment.

The second amendment is to strike out lines 27 and 28 of the bill, being the provision for a minister resident and consul-general to Hayti, $7,500.

The third amendment is to strike out the provision for minister resident and consul-general to Liberia, at a salary of $4,000.

The fourth amendment is to insert after line 73 the words: "For consuls at the Hawaiian Islands, Hayti, and Liberia, $3,500 each, $10,500."

I am induced, sir, to offer this amendment from looking at the general object and character of the bill and having reference to the action of the House at the last session, and in this connection I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that at the last session we abolished the office of minister to Ecuador, in South America, a civilized people with a population of 1,200,000. We also abolished the office of minister to Colombia, in South America, with a civilized population of 2,500,000. We also abolished the office of minister resident to Bolivia, a civilized community, with a population of 1,868,252. We abolished the minister resident to Switzerland, a Republic with a population of 2,534,240. We also abolished the mission to Greece, a civilized community, with a population of 1,067,216. We also abolished the mission to the pontifical states, with a population of 692,106. And we now retain a minister resident and consul to the Hawaiian Islands, a barbarous people, with a population of only 70,000; we retain a minister resident to Hayti, a barbarous people, with a population of only 572,000; we retain a minister to Liberia, a semi-barbarous people, without commerce, with a population not exceeding 120,000.

I do not understand, and that is the reason why I offered my amendments, why, in the three countries which I have last named, with their small population, barbarous and semi-barbarous, and with a very limited commerce, and one of these countries with no commerce at all, we should incur the expense of having a minister resident, while at these other civilized courts, with vastly more population and more commerce, we abolish the office of minister resident, they being civilized, Christianized, and commercial nations.

I am unable to comprehend or see the propriety of it; and I trust that, unless better explanation than is known to me shall be made, the House will sustain the amendment and abolish the office of minister resident to these three republics.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will omit the addition to the consuls, in regard to which the question as to amount is a mere matter of calculation afterward, it will avoid confusion.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will understand that the question now is upon my first amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For minister resident and consul-general at Hayti, $7,500.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out those two lines.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is taken upon striking out, I make an informal motion to reduce the amount of that appropriation to $4,000, and I would ask my friend from Mississippi whether it would not be proper to put Hayti and Liberia on the same footing. The minister to Hayti receives $7,500. The minister to Liberia receives only $4,000. Would it not be proper to put Hayti on the same footing with Liberia?

Mr. SINGLETON. I believe that we attempted to do that in the bill that passed last session; but we thoroughly failed, because the Senate would not agree to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WATTERSON. I ask the consent of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to move an amendment in a portion of the bill preceding his, and it is in line 19, to insert after the word "Belgium" the word "Switzerland;" so as to provide for a minister to Switzerland.

The CHAIRMAN. That portion of the bill has been passed.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that we cannot go back.

Mr. WATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent to go back so as to offer that amendment.

Mr. HALE. What is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. WATTERSON. Its purpose is to insert the name of the only republic in the world, except the United States, composed of a civilized people, which has been omitted from the list, and that is the republic of Switzerland.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object. I do not consider Switzerland a republic in any respect.

Mr. BANKS. Let the amendment come in, and let us vote upon it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. WATTERSON. I then offer the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the point of order upon that amendment until the gentleman from Kentucky shall be heard, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. WATTERSON. I simply wish to state my belief that the Republic of the United States should not discontinue its representation in the only republic in Europe, which is the republic of Switzerland.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order is that the amendment would change existing law. There is no law providing for a minister to Switzerland.

Mr. HALE. I submit that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not press it.

Mr. WATTERSON. This provision was in the original bill, but was left out by accident.

Mr. SINGLETON. O, no! The gentleman is mistaken about that.

The question was taken on Mr. WATTERSON's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 70, noes 58.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. WATTERSON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon Mr. REAGAN's amendment to strike out the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth lines of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to that amendment. If there is a place in the universe that is less important to this Government than any other, in a diplomatic sense, it is the republic of Hayti. That the Government should support a minister there at an expense of $7,500 per annum for the purpose of diplomatic intercourse, seems to me quite inexplicable.

I recognize the fact that we must have a consular officer at the commercial port of those islands. But what necessity there can be for a diplomatic officer for a small group of islands in the ocean with which we have and can have no diplomatic relations of any importance is a mystery to me.

I desire also to call attention to the fact that our efforts at the last session of Congress to reduce these supernumeraries have had a very wholesome effect. Gentlemen will remember we made an effort to eliminate from the diplomatic correspondence which is annually transmitted to this House and the other certain portions which were of no earthly importance to any one. From an examination of the papers furnished to Congress at this session by the State Department I am happy to see that the diplomatic correspondence with various foreign governments, especially with the government of Greece, has been so pruned by some gentleman in the State Department as to relieve it of many of the offensive and objectionable parts. In the correspondence of J. Meredith Reed, our minister to Greece, I find numerous lines of stars dividing the various paragraphs. That I presume indicates that the State Department, in pursuance of the intimation of the House, has caused to be stricken out a great portion of his correspondence which can be of no use to any one.

In regard to the pending amendment to strike out the appropriation for the minister resident and consul-general at Hayti, I desire to say that if it is adopted and it will deprive the commercial port of that country of a consul, then I would move, or ask the gentleman from Texas to move, to supply the omission when we reach the portion of the bill providing for consuls.

Mr. REAGAN. I would refer the gentleman to my fourth amendment, which covers that point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that the gentleman from Texas has already anticipated the difficulty which I thought might arise by leaving Hayti without a consul. I insist that the Committee of the Whole should strike out this appropriation for a minister resident at Hayti who by the terms of this bill receives the same compensation as is paid to our ministers resident at the most courtly governments in Europe and South America.

Mr. BANKS. So far as I could understand the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] it does not seem to me that he presents any sufficient reason for striking out the appropriation for a minister resident and consul-general at Hayti. It may very well be said that commercially speaking the trade of Hayti is not now of great importance to the United States, but it may be made a matter of some advantage. The policy of the Government for a long time past has been such as to strip the United States of nearly all its commerce with the islands of the Gulf, with Mexico, and the Central American and South American governments. The principal part of their commerce is with the nations of Europe, three thousand miles distant, and we rest here within a couple of days' sail of the principal ports of the West Indies and South America, embracing a population of 30,000,000 or more, without any of the advantages of communication or trade which belong to us. There should be a policy adopted to restore that trade to us, to whom it naturally belongs.

Another reason why this appropriation should not be stricken out is this: Hayti is one of the principal governments of the Gulf of Mexico, the most important sea of the United States. The course of events, or the policy of the Government, has been such that we have scarcely a sail to-day on its waters. It is no longer an American sea, as it should be. That results from the fact that we take little or no interest and give no encouragement to any of the republics or states of that portion of the world. Our course has been such as to lead them, or at least to encourage them, to continue their trade with European governments.

Mr. SPRINGER. What policy is it to which the gentleman refers as discouraging our trade with these countries?

Mr. BANKS. I have not said what the policy is; I do not care what it is; I speak of the fact and its inevitable result. One step further in that line of policy is the proposition advocated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman must excuse me; I have but five minutes. The island of Hayti is the key to the Gulf of Mexico. The government of that island may part with its jurisdiction at any time it pleases to any foreign government. I know it will be said we can interfere with any such transfer, and perhaps successfully resist it; but why should we put ourselves in the attitude of seeming indifference if not of absolute hostility to the government of an island so important to us as to justify even the thought of opposing any action it might think proper to adopt, or to give the opponents of this country an opportunity to encourage a belief that the United States is hostile to their interests? If we want to maintain our power in the Gulf of Mexico, and certainly I think gentlemen must at least favor that proposition, why should we make enemies of those who have a just, natural right to control in part this most important island?

Another and still more pregnant reason for opposition to this amendment is that the government of Hayti is a government of colored people. The solution of the question as to the ultimate destiny of the colored people of this continent is a problem of vast importance, one which very few men of our time can fully comprehend. I have heard two men, one some years ago, and the other very recently, speak with great interest of the island of Hayti and San Domingo, its relation to the ultimate condition and destiny of the colored people of this Republic. One was Mr. Seward, who made a voyage to all the states of the Gulf to satisfy his own mind on that question, and the other was President Grant, whose views of the importance of the island now in question were presented with such force as to be still alive in the remembrance of the people. Mr. Seward said with great earnestness that the subject was one of the most important that could be presented to the people of this country; that whatever might be our purposes or our views now, we should hereafter turn to the Gulf of Mexico and the states upon its coasts for a solution of this great question which so much embarrasses the people of this country at this time. The President under circumstances altogether different expressed in equally earnest language the same general views. The most distinguished officers of the Army and Navy have repeatedly asserted its importance to us as a means of national defense. If this be true, why step out of our way to put ourselves on record as utterly indifferent spectators, if not opponents, of a people and government that is possibly to occupy so important a position hereafter with reference to this country?

What do we do by adopting this amendment? At the most we may save $4,000 a year, though I do not think we shall save anything. But suppose we do save $4,000, is that a sufficient reason for cutting off official communication with that portion of the world, which is so important to us in every point of view? I know that the time was when the best part of the trade of New England, that trade which built up its foreign commerce, which gave it a commercial power that enabled its merchants to extend their commerce to the East Indies, had its basis in the eastern trade with West India Islands. Similar results can be attained now if we choose to encourage commercial intercourse with that part of the world, and the way to encourage it is to maintain our connection as a government with those countries, thus increasing the natural and proper influence, intercourse, and trade with prosperous states around us.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word. If this amendment would have the effect supposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] I would not favor it. If the retention of a minister resident in that country would be of material service in promoting our commercial interests or would accomplish any important result in relation to the amelioration of the colored population of the United States, either of these considerations would be, with me, a good reason for retaining a minister resident. But, as I understand, the office of a minister is to go into the higher fields of diplomacy, while the interests of commerce are, in a very large degree, attended to by a consul, an officer that it is proposed to provide at a salary of $2,500. If this consul can do all that is necessary in a commercial point of view, if there is no high reason of state for a diplomatic representative, it seems to me we should not make the discrimination to which I called attention a while ago, of abolishing the office of minister resident to six powers of the earth, having a population of from one to two and a half millions of civilized people, and yet give a minister resident in the case now under consideration.

I would do all in my power to encourage the improvement of our commercial interests in that direction; I feel as much anxiety, I trust, for the advancement of our commerce as does the gentleman from Massachusetts. But our commerce cannot be improved by simply sending a minister there. Our commerce with that and other West India Islands is to be advanced, the trade of the Gulf and of South America is to be secured, by improving the industrial interests of our own country and by a modification of the tariff so as to enable us, in seeking the trade of those countries, to compete with the skill and capital of other nations. This improvement of our commerce as I understand will not come through sending a minister there, but must come through the improvement of the condition of our own country and the promotion of commercial facilities through a modification of our tariff laws.

Now, it seems to me that in a country so small in territory and population, we need not have a minister resident; that a consul there will answer all necessary purposes of commerce and international intercourse. In offering the amendment I was partly influenced by this consideration and partly by the desire to make this bill harmonize with our general action heretofore, by which the positions of six ministers resident at countries of far more population, of far higher civilization, and of far greater commercial importance were abolished.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman state what they are?

Mr. REAGAN. I will in a moment; I have not my notes here just now.

Mr. BANKS. They are not in that part of the world, I presume.

Mr. REAGAN. Three are in South America and three in Europe.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Texas is certainly in error in regard to the commercial powers which he ascribes to the consuls of this Government at any foreign port where we have established diplomatic intercourse. I know very well that consuls and consular agents attend to the details of trade and commerce; but I must suggest to the gentleman that there is not a single instance in the history of this country where a consul has opened or established originally a trade between this and other countries. In almost every instance the system of trade and the conditions of trade are established by diplomatic agents, ministers resident, or others; and where there is a minister resident, or any other diplomatic officer of high character to introduce a commercial system, or contribute to its establishment, then consuls attend to the duties of detail connected with the matter.

We want a trade with the South American countries. I do not believe that we have abolished absolutely ministers resident in six of the South American states or the Central American states. We have doubtless consolidated the offices in some cases; but is there a South American or Central American state where we have no diplomatic agency at all?

Mr. REAGAN. I now call the attention of the gentleman to the fact, which appears by the statement before me, that we have refused to provide ministers resident for Ecuador, Colombia, and Bolivia in South America, and for Switzerland, Greece, and Rome in Europe.

Mr. BANKS. Are not those South American States, in reference to diplomatic matters, attached to some other country?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; we are represented in the South American states as in Europe by our agents at designated places.

Mr. BANKS. We have, as I understand, a diplomatic representative at each of these States; but if we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Texas we shall have no diplomatic agent there; and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that no consul can communicate in any way whatever with the government of Hayti. We cannot through such an officer communicate with that government on any subject of trade or commerce or anything else, and hence we must lose important advantages which may be secured by other countries.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. REAGAN.

The House divided; and there were ayes 27, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$4,000," as the salary of the minister resident and consul-general to Hayti. The salary of the minister resident and consul-general to Liberia is fixed in this same bill at $4,000. Liberia is remote from the United States and requires on the part of the minister resident and consul-general much greater expense in going to and returning from his post of duty. Perhaps, too, the expense of living is much greater in Liberia than in Hayti, but of that I do not know. At all events, I do not see why there should be $7,500 for the minister resident and consul-general to Hayti and only $4,000 for the minister resident and consul-general to Liberia. I therefore hope the committee will strike out "$7,500" and insert "$4,000," so that the salaries shall be the same at both places.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to a question of order. I think that matter was fully considered on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] That proposition embraced precisely this proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it embraced a great deal more.

Mr. SINGLETON. The House has already rejected the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana embraced several propositions. Mine is a single proposition, to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$4,000" in the case of the minister resident and consul-general to Hayti. This, under the rules, is perfectly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi, that this being embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is not in order now.

Mr. SPRINGER. This single question has never been put to the House, and under the rules is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It was part of the proposition voted down, and is therefore not in order.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the regular order. I rise to the point of order that my amendment is in order, as it is a proposition the House has not yet voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been ruled against the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. And I move to lay it on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the House whether the judgment of the Chair shall be sustained or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the appeal, as I do not desire to press a matter of so little importance.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I renew the appeal from the decision of the Chair, that the amendment having been offered in gross and defeated, the same amendment of only a part is out of order. With due respect to the Chair, I say that the Chair is radically and entirely wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The House will decide that question.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the House is, Shall the judgment of the Chair be sustained?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I desire to be heard on this question of order. An appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, and that appeal, as I understand, was laid on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. No, the appeal was withdrawn.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Besides it cannot be laid upon the table, as there is no table in committee. That motion can only be made in the House. I renew the appeal from the decision of the Chair, believing that the Chair's decision is radically wrong.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is it in order to lay the appeal upon the table?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in committee.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I wish to state my reason for taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is, Shall the judgment of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 16.

The CHAIRMAN. So the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But I should like to know whether a quorum voted?

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum did not vote, but the decision of the vote was announced by the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to move to insert $4,500 as the salary of the minister resident and consul-general of Hayti?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to strike out $7,500 and insert $4,500.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For minister resident and consul-general to Liberia, $4,000.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike that out.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all the missions abroad, $85,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi who has charge of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, what is the amount of reduction in the contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper made by this bill as compared with the sum appropriated for the contingent expenses of foreign intercourse in the last session of Congress?

Mr. CONGER. There is no proposition pending upon which debate can be had, and I therefore object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the word "dollars," at the end of the line, to allow me to put the question to the gentleman from Mississippi as what sum was appropriated for this purpose in the Forty-third Congress?

Mr. SINGLETON. The amount appropriated in the Forty-third Congress was $100,000. The Secretary of State asked us to appropriate for this same purpose $100,000 for the next fiscal year; but we thought $85,000 would be sufficient. That is an increase of $10,000 over the sum voted by this House at the last session. The Secretary stated that the accounts had not all come in, or he could state exactly what sum was required; but he believed the amount would be far in excess of $75,000, and asked $100,000, and we gave him only $85,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that at last session of Congress when this item was pending the expenses for postage and other contingent expenses of the dispatch agent at London, which were paid out of this item, were referred to as excessive. It was then shown that these expenses for postage were about, on the average, $1,400 per month. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the gratifying result of the legislation of that session, as shown by a statement of the expenses for the same purpose since the passage of the bill of last session. Before the legislation of last session the expenses for postage, stationery, &c., of the dispatch agent at London averaged $1,400 a month, but since the passage of the bill of last session they have been reduced to $331 per month, showing the benefits of our reformatory legislation. I ask that this table may be published as part of my remarks.

There was no objection. The memorandum is as follows:

Memorandum of monthly disbursements made by B. F. Stevens as dispatch agent at London for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1875 and 1876, for postages, stationery, &c.

1875.

Amount expended:
1874—July	$1,282 81

1876—July	331 31
August	340 95
September	345 92
October	475 54

The attention of the country was called to the exorbitant expenses of Mr. Stevens for postage, &c., in February, 1876. At that time his account was over $1,000 per month. At once it begins to decrease, as will be seen above, and for July, 1876, the first month after the law of last session took effect, it amounted to only $331.31. This is a gratifying exhibit, and shows what might be accomplished in other departments of the public service by the enforcement of a rigid economy.

Mr. CONGER. I understand then that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] thinks that the fewer letters our ministers and commercial agents abroad write on the business of the United States, the better it is for the country?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. And that it is true economy to show to this House that there has been less postage, and consequently fewer letters written by our agents abroad?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; that is not the question at all. It has nothing to do with it. If the gentleman from Michigan had been informed upon the subject, he would not have made that point. The legislation of last session required that all letters of foreign ministers abroad should be postpaid here, under the arrangement of the international postal union, which is substantially free postage for Government matter to all parts of the world; whereas previously they had been forwarded to England, to a special agent in London, and the postage was there prepaid to foreign parts.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand now, the sack is saved to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman from Michigan speaking to?

Mr. CONGER. The amendment last proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on that amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CONGER. I am glad that sack is saved to the country.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For the consul at Liverpool, $6,000.

Mr. REAGAN. I had given notice of an amendment to insert at this point these words:

For consuls at the Hawaiian Islands, Hayti, and Liberia, $3,500 each, $10,500.

The three former amendments that I offered, which, if adopted, would have made this amendment necessary, having been negatived, I withdraw it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and under the heading of "Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Commercial Agents," read as follows:

Friendly and Navigators' Islands. Apia.

Mr. TEESE. I offer the following amendment:

After line 217 insert the following:

Italy. Milan. The consulship at Milan, Italy, shall be, and the same is hereby, placed under class 7 of this bill, and the consul at Milan shall hereafter receive a salary of $1,000 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is subject to the point of order, but I will withhold it until the gentleman from New Jersey is heard.

Mr. TEESE. What point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. That it is independent legislation.

Mr. TEESE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to restore this consulship to where it was before the appropriation bill of last year. The salary was then $1,000. By the appropriation bill of last session this was stricken out and fees substituted. This consulship is of very considerable importance. Milan is the second city of Italy; and it is the second city of the world so far as the trade in raw silk is concerned. There are many thousands of Americans there annually and the duties of the consulship at Milan are very considerable. I think, sir, it is right and fair that this consulship should be put back to the position it occupied before the passage of the last appropriation bill.

Mr. SINGLETON. It will be noticed that we have a minister resident in Italy with a salary of $12,000 a year; and then under class 6 we have consuls at Genoa, Naples, Leghorn, Florence, Palermo, and Messina—six points—getting $2,500 a year. Under the compromise which we made last year it was considered sufficient that we had consulships at six different points with a full mission to Italy. That was a part of the compromise. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] will observe too that we have a consul at Milan who is paid by fees.

Mr. SINGLETON. Yes; I failed to make that remark. We have a consul at Milan who is not paid a stated salary, but receives an income from the fees of the consulship.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TEESE, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer an amendment to come in at line 138——

Mr. SINGLETON. I make the point of order that we have passed that.

Mr. HARRISON. We passed it but the Clerk did not stop reading. Must we stop the reading of the Clerk as he proceeds?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The line at which the gentleman from Illinois desires to offer an amendment having been passed, the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi must be sustained.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for information whether it has been determined that the passing of a clause in the rapid reading of the Clerk prevents a member from offering an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; except by unanimous consent. Any member of the committee has the right to interrupt the Clerk in his reading at any point where he desires to offer an amendment. If he does not, he waives his right.

Several members called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAULFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads, asked a conference with the House upon the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed as managers on the part of the Senate, Mr. HAMLIN, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. MAXEY.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) in reference to the congratulations from the republic of Pretoria, South Africa; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) relating to the congratulations from the Argentine Republic.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4307) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to one hour.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TURNEY in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I propose at a later stage in the consideration of this bill to make a brief explanation of its contents. For the present I yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. FINLEY.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, a member of this body, and representing, as I do, a constituency on this floor, I do not feel that I shall overstep the bounds of a modest reserve if at this time I shall offer a few observations on the state of the Union.

If there ever was a juncture in the history of the Government which demanded thoughtful consideration and deliberate and wise action, it is now.

That our Government has reached a crisis in its existence can no longer be disguised, a crisis fraught with more danger to the integrity of our political institutions than any which has hitherto marked its history.

When I take a careful survey of the present political condition of the country; when I witness the anxiety and unrest which now pervade the public mind; when I attentively consider the alarming tendencies which have marked the administrative policy of the Government for several years past, I must confess that my mind is filled with distressing fears and gloomy forebodings. It is indeed a time of dark omen, when even thoughtful and brave men grow pale and stand appalled in the presence of the fearful possibilities in the near future which, like stalking apparitions, mysteriously forewarn of approaching calamity.

What I now have to say shall be said without passion, and wholly unintluenced by any mere party consideration; for I hold that to love one's country above all party is the highest duty of patriotism, especially at a time like this, when the wisest and most thoughtful statesmen in the land are filled with apprehension and alarm for the safety of our institutions, and when, if ever, partisan rancor should stand rebuked in the presence of the dangers by which the nation is now confronted.

When our common habitation is on fire, let us not be guilty of the insane folly of continuing our family controversies until its smoking rafters shall come tumbling about our heads.

It is indeed true that the body-politic is diseased, but it is not the helpless yielding of attenuated age to the inexorable demands of death and decay; it is rather the mighty struggle between life and death in the robust system of a young giant, who yet has strength to rally into renewed and vigorous life. Yet, I am profoundly impressed with the conviction that we have now reached a point in our national life when nothing but the invisible power and omnipotent force of a sound patriotic public opinion can save our institutions from a fearful and complete overthrow.

If I am asked by whom this saving power is to be applied, I answer that it can only be done by our brethren of the North and Northwest, irrespective of party. I say our brethren of the North and Northwest, because, in the present stage of party strife, the Southern States occupy a position so anomalous that they can scarcely hazard an opinion without increasing and intensifying sectional jealousy to a degree which might again consolidate public opinion, both North and South, upon the basis of sectional antagonism—that dangerous rock which has already well nigh wrecked our noble ship of state, leaving her in such a shattered condition that a repetition of the shock would certainly cause her to go down in the seething waters of an angry sea.

If I may be pardoned for pursuing the simile a moment longer, I venture to affirm what every considerate man in the country will admit, and that is, that our ship of state, which has so nobly survived all the vicissitudes of a whole century's voyage, is now, in the very hour in which I am speaking, driven by the most fearful tempest she has ever encountered head on to a rock-bound coast, with every timber strained, and every mast and beam quivering, and unless the popular sentiment of the North and Northwest (which can alone control the helm) shall speedily "'bout ship," and draw out into an open and smooth sea, the noble craft upon which is freighted the hopes of republican freedom throughout the world must inevitably perish.

Representatives, this rock-bound coast is centralized power.

If I am asked how this popular opinion of which I have spoken can be aroused in time to deliver us from the peril in which we now stand, I unhesitatingly reply: Let some leading statesmen of both parties in each wing of this Capitol, who come from the North and Northwest, and have the ear of their people, throw wide their hearts and minds to the divine inspirations of patriotism, and first raising themselves up to the exalted heights of a sublime love of country, let them appeal to their people in the name of republican and constitutional government, and they will "draw all men after them"; and to the honor of having once saved the Union let them add the imperishable glory of preserving the very life of our Constitution and of re-establishing the tottering foundations of our Government.

A careful observer cannot fail to perceive that there is in our Government a conflict between two antagonizing principles which are fiercely contending for the mastery. Upon its result will depend the continued existence of our political institutions. It is a conflict between a manifest tendency to centralism on the one side and constitutional government on the other. It is the conflict of two opposing principles, between which there can be no compromise. For the concession of any constitutional guarantee would imperil our institutions, while to abandon ourselves to the policy of progressive innovation would, in the end, accomplish the complete overthrow of our whole system of government.

I need not tell the intelligent representatives of the American people of the various steps which have been taken in the direction of an unauthorized central power. They stand forever recorded in our political history, and will readily occur to all who have carefully studied the theory and practice of the Government. I forbear to mention or dwell upon them in detail, because, from my locality, and that of the constituency I represent, I cannot do so without the risk of imparting fresh irritation to that sectional sensitiveness which all good men, both North and South, should be so anxious to allay. But I implore my countrymen to bury the bitter memories of the past, and calmly consider and ponder the events of the last ten years, each one for himself, and in the light of sound constitutional interpretation determine for himself whether indeed it be true that we are drifting into the vortex of a dangerous central power.

In this solemn juncture, when, in the opinion of many of our wisest statesmen, the very life of constitutional government is put at peril, the helpless and exhausted South calls upon the patriotic people of the North and Northwest, without regard to party, to come to the rescue not of the South alone, but of the whole country; for rest assured, that whatever may have been our past relations and antagonisms, now, when our common heritage is in danger of being wrested from us, you may truly exclaim that the cause of any one State is "the cause of us all."

I appeal to you to-day, and ask if you can contemplate the danger to which we are alike exposed with feelings of indifference? I implore you to rise from the death of apathy to a life of patriotism, and remember that "at certain moments, in certain places, in certain shades, to sleep is to die." Then will you not arouse yourselves to active and earnest effort to restore the Government to a purely constitutional administration? Not to do so would be a crime against yourselves. It would be an unatonable sin against all the generations to come after you. I speak to my countrymen to-day without regard to party. I speak to the Representatives of the nation. I speak to the whole American people. I here proclaim that we are not only debtors to the present, but that we owe a solemn duty to the future. What our forefathers achieved in 1776 the men of 1876 must preserve. If neglected, it will entail upon our children for all time to come a heritage of woe. It will fill all the coming ages with the fruitless wailings of a crushed and down-trodden people.

I will now look into this subject somewhat, promising, however, to avoid even the appearance of party bias or sectional prejudice.

When the philosophy of our Government is carefully studied, it will be seen to be a system of distributed powers between the different departments thereof. It will also be seen that these departments have been so incorporated into the general system, and endowed with such functions, as to enable them to act as checks upon each other; and hence, among the earlier statesmen of our country, it was called a system of "checks and balances." In this distribution all the powers of Government are vested by the Constitution in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and that instrument has, with rare precision and certainty, assigned to each its appropriate functions, and has wisely guarded the whole by expressly forbidding the exercise by any one of them of the powers assigned to either of the others.

It will be further seen that all the powers not conferred on the General Government by the Constitution, and not "prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." Here we have the various departments of the National Government acting as checks the one upon the other, while the General and State Governments are alike checks upon each other. It is in this admirable distribution of power between the different departments of the General Government, and between the General and State Governments, that we find the wisdom, beauty, and strength of our system. While it is complex it is also simple, and when its theory is rightly understood no practical solecism will be found in this declaration. It will be found to be complex in its machinery, but at the same time simple in its operation. It will be found to be the only feasible system by which absolute power can be avoided and at the same time civil liberty preserved. As a system of government it is the wonder of the ages, and if not perverted or destroyed it will in less than a century become the model upon which all the governments of the world will be molded. The inspirations of popular government have already entered into the hearts of the masses in Europe, and if we shall illustrate by our example that republican liberty is not the synonym of license, some who exist to-day may possibly live to see all the world substantially republican; otherwise all the world will be given over to kingly power. Which shall it be? Our experiment in government must and will solve the problem. If we fail in the experiment, our own countrymen will be "dead to all hope and buried in the grave of their calamities," and the last hope of republican freedom will die out from the hearts of all mankind and all the peoples of the earth will be subjected to absolute rule.

But I digress from my purpose. I desire to say a little more of the antagonistic principles of centralism and republican liberty, which in my judgment are now grappling in a fierce and deadly struggle in the United States. If the former triumphs it will be at the expense of all the checks provided by the Constitution; if the latter, it guarantees the perpetuation of our institutions, it may be, for all time to come.

It must I think be admitted by all candid minds that have fairly comprehended the nature and scope of our system that a centralization of power beyond the limits prescribed by the Constitution would necessarily involve a substantial change in both its nature and operations; would disadjust the balance of power and destroy the checks which have been so wisely provided by that instrument. If this be true would it not be well for the leading men both in and out of Congress to pause for a while in the maddening whirl of partisan politics, and, in a calm and dispassionate retrospection of the past, endeavor to ascertain whether it be true that our ship of state is being loosed from its constitutional moorings, and whether she is indeed drifting toward the dangerous reefs of centralized power.

If our statesmen, the trusted mariners placed on the ship's lookout to discover the dangers ahead, so that they may be avoided, shall fail in their duty it will then be time for the ship's crew—the people—to look into the matter for themselves, and by a timely foresight provide against the threatened catastrophe. I have only mentioned these things to put the people upon inquiry and the nation upon its guard. It is against any wrong and dangerous tendency in the administration of the Government, and which may finally culminate in usurpation, that the country should be vigilantly guarded.

I do not believe that the present Chief Executive has ever for a moment contemplated a coup d'état. Nay, I go further and declare, that I do not believe he would desire to do so even if the way were fairly and securely opened to him.

At the present day any President would be rash indeed to attempt to play the rôle of Napoleon III. He would find himself opposed by the earthquake power of a nation's resistance, which no man, not even Washington himself, if alive, could withstand.

It is no present coup d'état that I fear. If it be true that the day for such things has not passed by in the revolutionary governments of Europe and in our sister republic of Mexico, it is also true that the day has not yet come in the United States for such a daring usurpation of power. It is that we may take timely warning, and prevent it in the future, that I have ventured, although almost unknown as an active participant in the proceedings of this body, to raise my voice in solemn warning to my countrymen both North and South.

In a government like ours, where popular sovereignty rules, we cannot watch too sedulously, and, I will add, too jealously, the general tendencies of its administration; and in this connection I beg to say that if the employment of the military arm of the Government, of late years, in any of the States is unauthorized by the Constitution, such employment is in the direction of consolidated power, and has an alarming tendency to dictatorial rule. Such a tendency is manifestly dangerous to our institutions, and should be promptly and effectually arrested by the people at the ballot-box. This is the more essential to our safety because in our Government a precedent once set and repeated soon solidifies itself into the potential force of an organic law.

What I mean, if possible, to impress upon the minds of my countrymen is, that although President Grant might and doubtless would follow the illustrious example of Cincinnatus and repudiate the dictatorship, still as a natural outgrowth of unauthorized military power it may be that at some time not very far in the future some Servilius Geminus may rise up in our country and seize the reins of dictatorial rule, and we may find the history of the Roman republic repeated in our own.

We value and regard our institutions of government as being eminently wise and benign in themselves; and indeed they are, but even if they were less so the spirit of the second century of our national life is opposed to any radical change in their organic form, whether such change is effected by formal amendments of the Constitution or by precedents which have been sanctified by continued use. At this very moment the great national heart, so long silent, is throbbing in audible pulsation and is ready to articulate in deep and unmistakable tones its demand for peace, Union, and the Constitution as it is.

What we need in the United States is stability in the organic forms of our Government, unvarying obedience to organic law, and just such frequent changes in our rulers as may be necessary to secure honest, economical, and efficient administration.

In this nineteenth century the voice of civilization demands peace instead of revolution, and pleads for stability in all governments which do really and substantially secure to citizens and subjects the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property.

Our own Government, if wisely and honestly administered, is abundantly adequate to this great and salutary end; and we shall become of all the nations on earth the most reprobate if we either pollute or break down the sacred altars which our fathers erected to constitutional freedom one hundred years ago.

That something is wrong in the working of the government machinery must, I think, be apparent to all who will take the pains to observe its operations. It will be seen that there is derangement somewhere, in some of its parts; that its regularity and harmony of movement have been disturbed. This must be patent to all intelligent and unprejudiced minds. And perhaps no better proof of this can be found than is presented in the known fact that the patriotic and thoughtful statesmen of the entire country are at this moment oppressed with perplexity of mind and anxious foreboding on account of the events that are now transpiring around us.

It must be apparent to all that the great balance-wheel in the machinery of government has been thrown from its axis, and unless it is speedily replaced and re-adjusted it must and will result in fearful collision, and in the ultimate destruction of a system which in times past has performed its functions with a certainty and precision that has not only secured the confidence of our own people, but has excited the wonder and challenged the admiration of the world. In the very nature of our political system, involving as it does both national and State organization, it is indispensable, in order to insure its harmonious working, that each shall be confined within its own appropriate and constitutional sphere. This delicate and difficult task was sought to be accomplished by the sages who framed the Constitution. That the system has from time to time been drawn within the influence of disturbing causes has been owing more to administrative mismanagement than to any inherent defect.

The sphere in which both the national and State governments were intended to move is accurately and expressly defined in the tenth amendment of the Federal Constitution, and clearly means that the General Government may exercise such powers only as are delegated to it, and that the States may only exercise such powers as are not delegated to the United States and as are not prohibited to the States by the Constitution. The language of the Constitution in this connection is so clear and so free from all ambiguity that there would seem to be no room for doubt as to the intention of its framers; and the only chance for misinterpretation would be in determining with certainty what merely implied powers the General Government may, under the Constitution, rightfully claim to exercise. These questions of construction have often arisen since the foundation of the Government; and as the executive and legislative departments have from time to time assumed to decide them the one way or the other, the executive and legislative policy of the country has been made to fluctuate. But hitherto an appeal to the judicial power of the Government has afforded the only authoritative solution of doubtful constitutional questions. That there should be some tribunal clothed with the power to determine whether executive or legislative action has transcended the limitations of the Constitution was absolutely necessary to prevent usurpations which might be utterly subversive of our entire system of government.

The question of greatest difficulty was, where this important and delicate power might be most safely lodged.

Knowing, as they did, the imperfection of all human systems, and knowing too that ultimate power could not be vested in any man or body of men, whose determinations would be infallibly correct, the framers of the Constitution lodged it in the Federal judiciary as a co-ordinate branch of the Government; and, in order to secure impartial action on their part, they were clothed with the life tenure in office, and thus made independent of the other co-ordinate branches of the Government. Whatever objection has been or may be urged against this appropriation of power, it is, I believe, generally conceded that it was the best and safest that could be devised, and it may here be added that the interpretations of the Constitution given by this high and august tribunal have rarely been brought in question.

Whether the Constitution thus interpreted has been disregarded by either of the other departments of the Government is certainly a question which the people may as a matter of right, and should as a matter of duty, inquire into.

As in the natural world changes are ever taking place, so it may be said of all human institutions, that they are continually liable to transmutations, and frequently by such slow and gradual processes as scarcely to be perceptible at any given moment of observation. This is especially so in republics, and hence the importance of sleepless vigilance on the part of the people, who are the acknowledged source of political power in a government such as ours. It is their duty to examine and scrutinize every act of every administration of the Government. To do this in a spirit of fairness, and with the sole purpose of preserving the integrity of our institutions, is what patriotism demands of every American citizen.

If the foundations of republican liberty have been weakened by either corrupt or unwise administration, I implore my countrymen without delay to inquire into the nature and extent of the evil, and thoughtfully and wisely to consider of, and apply, the best and most practicable means of removing or lessening it. But, in our anxiety to restore the Government to a healthful state, let us not be rash or inconsiderate in choosing the methods to be used for that purpose. Above all, let us seek a peaceful escape from all the dangers which may, either now or hereafter, threaten our institutions.

Neither section of our country can stand the strain of another civil war, the direst of all calamities. Let us trust to public opinion, which will assuredly open up the way to a peaceful solution of all our troubles for in republics public opinion is more powerful than the sword, and, if relied on, will sooner or later overthrow all conspirators against the constitution. Let us then trust in that; and if hereafter rash and ambitious men shall assail the Constitution, the time will have come when, in the language of Victor Hugo, it, "in spite of all conspirators against the constitution, and mysteriously to them, before the invisible resistance of the moral sentiment, before the invisible force of progress accomplished, before the formidable and mysterious refusal of an entire century, will arise at the North and the South, at the East and the West around tyrants, and tell them No!" and all conspirators against the Constitution of the United States will find that it is safer to play with the lightning and the fierce thunderbolts of heaven than to trifle with a deceived and outraged people.

If the public opinion and moral sentiment of the nation cannot preserve the purity of the ballot, and the integrity of our institutions, then I proclaim our experiment in government a failure—for it is a government of consent and not of force—the idea of a government maintained by armed force is opposed to all our political theories. If ever we shall reach this point, we shall find that a radical change in the theory of our system will become inevitable, and we shall be compelled to adopt some other form of government. In that event (which I pray may never occur) it would be wise to meet the inevitable and respond to its demands by effecting the transition by peaceful and bloodless methods. But I have an abiding faith in a better destiny. Let us vindicate before the world the excellence of our political institutions by keeping as we can, the theory and practice of our Government in perfect harmony and agreement.

It has been said by De Tocqueville, the great political philosopher, that "France was the first to throw into the world, amid the thunders of her first revolution, dogmas which have subsequently become the regenerating principles of all modern societies, which has been the glory and most precious portion of her history." So it may be justly said of the United States that it was her glory, amid the thunders of her first revolution, to seize upon those dogmas and make a practical application of them, so as to illustrate to all the nations of the earth the possibility of successful popular government; and this has become "the most precious portion of our history." And as De Tocqueville said of France, so it may be as truly said of the United States at this time, that it is "these very principles which our example at the present day is depriving of force. The application which we seem to make of them, in our own case, leads the world to doubt their truth. Europe, which is watching us, begins to ask if we were right or wrong. She asks if it is true, what we have so often affirmed, that we are leading the nations of the earth toward a happier and more prosperous future, or whether we are not dragging them down after us into moral degradation and ruin. This, gentlemen, is what causes me most grief, in the spectacle which we are offering to the world. It not only injures us, but it injures our principles and our cause."

I fear we are making dangerous departures from the true theory of our Government. It is to be feared that we have wandered very far out into the wilderness of unauthorized administration. We seem, for a time at least, to have forgotten that the only safety for our Government is in the Union of the Constitution and the perfect and absolute equality of the States. Let us not close our eyes to the fact that, in proportion to the expansion of our territory and the multiplication of States, with the diversity of interests which naturally arise between remote regions, the preservation of unity and equality will become more difficult; and let us remember in time that a strict observance of the Constitution is the only possible method for establishing them upon sure and lasting foundations. To-day our territory spans a continent. With one foot resting on the Atlantic and the other on the Pacific, our Government stands forth among the nations of the earth in all the grand proportions of a Colossus, which can only be saved from dwarfing by preserving the unity of its parts. Let us by our example show to skeptical Europe that the principles of our political institutions are not only capable of securing good government to thirteen States with three millions of citizens, but that it is adequate to the government of thirty-seven States with forty-five millions of people, who are distributed over a vast domain "over which the sun rises and sets through a thousand successive horizons, and above whose carpet of verdure heaven spreads out half its stars."

To preserve so magnificent a country from despotic rule and continue to it and its rapidly increasing millions of population the paternal government bequeathed to us by our forefathers should command the earnest and ceaseless efforts of every patriot in the land throughout all the coming generations.

To this patriotic work we are called by all the memories of the past, urged by all the grave responsibilities of the present, and invited by all the great and glorious hopes of the future. Not only the eyes of the whole world are upon us, but if it be permitted to the spirits of the departed to revisit the earth, I doubt not that the grand army of the heroes of the Revolution, with the immortal Washington at their head, have descended "on the rushing pinions of their fame," and, though invisible to mortal eyes, are now hovering in breathless anxiety above the heads of Senators and Representatives as they sit in deliberation in their respective Halls in this Capitol, and in mute eloquence are pleading for the preservation of the priceless government for the achievement of which they pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

I must confess that I cannot contemplate even the possibility of the failure of our experiment in government without growing sick at heart, and if in the vicissitudes of our national life it is destined to destruction, I feel that I would accept it as a blessing at the hands of an all-merciful Providence not to be allowed to survive its overthrow.

Whatever of misfortune to my country may lie hidden in the misty and unexplored future, when I come to stand on the dim and mysterious boundary of the two worlds, and when my mortal vision is closing upon all sublunary things, I pray that my last and dying gaze may rest upon the flag of my country without one star missing from its glittering folds.

Mr. CLYMER. I propose to make a brief statement for the information of the committee, as to the provisions of this bill. It is substantially the same as that reported last year for the same purposes. The estimates of the Department for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, were $437,470, which sum was largely reduced by the Committee on Appropriations. The law as passed appropriated $290,065, being a reduction on the estimates for 1877 of $147,405.

The estimate of the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, amounts to the sum of $395,080, and the appropriations as recommended by this bill amounts to $265,161, being $129,859 less than the estimate and a reduction of $24,904 from the law of last year.

The reductions were made in the following items:

Pay department	$23,150
Expenses of military band	8,544
Repairs	10,500
Transportation	200
Materials for office, &c.	300
Department of chemistry	2,800
Department of natural philosophy	3,000
Department of French	100
Department of law	285
Department of ordnance and gunnery	400
Department of drawing	440
Miscellaneous and contingent expenses	5,440
Buildings and grounds	74,700

The item of $23,150 is made up by striking out the estimate of $6,700 for additional pay to professors for length of service, and by refusing to recommend additional compensation to officers serving as assistant professors and instructors at the Academy, over and above their pay as officers in the line, amounting to $10,500, and by declining to make appropriations for certain clerkships recommended by the Department, and by reducing the compensation of other employés.

The reduction in the expenses of the band, amounting to $8,544, from $14,880, the sum estimated for by the Department, was made in obedience to the suggestion of the last board of visitors that the military band at West Point was unnecessarily expensive, and should be reduced to its number prior to July 1, 1875.

This recommendation being in harmony with the general views of reform and economy entertained by the committee, they did not fail to observe it. In order to determine what number legally constituted a band prior to July, 1875, an examination was made of the several acts of Congress touching the subject, and, as this question gave rise to much discussion at the last session and seemed not to be clearly understood, it may be of interest to briefly trace the legislation regarding the matter. By the act of July 29, 1861, increasing the military establishment of the United States it was provided that the bands of regular regiments should consist of not more than twenty-four musicians for each regiment of infantry and artillery.

By the act of July 2, 1864, the bands were to be paid as follows: One-fourth of each band, $30 per month; one-fourth of them, $20 per month; and the remaining half, $17 per month. By the act of July 28, 1866, the number of bands in the Army was reduced to fifteen, and by the act of March 3, 1869, all the bands in the service were honorably discharged, except the band at the Military Academy.

From this statement it will appear that the committee in recommending an appropriation of $6,336 have complied strictly with the law and the recommendation of the board of visitors, by reducing the numbers and pay of the band to what they were prior to July 1, 1875, and have thereby effected an important reduction in the estimates this year, and of the existing expenditures for the same purpose, the amount appropriated last session being $11,000.

The estimate of the Department for repairs was $22,500. This the committee have reduced to $12,500, being the amount appropriated last session, and amply sufficient in the judgment of the committee for all needful repairs. Large appropriations for this purpose tend to extravagant and unnecessary expenditures, which can easily be avoided by watchful and prudent supervision. It is sometimes the habit to make new erections and improvements under appropriations for repairs which were never contemplated or authorized.

In the department of chemistry the committee declined making an appropriation for a dynamo-magneto-electric machine costing $2,800, and in the department of natural and experimental philosophy they reduced the estimate for additions to apparatus from $3,500 to $1,000, under the conviction that the real progress of the cadets in learning would not be retarded or impeded by their action.

The committee made reductions in the estimates for the departments of French, law, ordnance and gunnery, drawing, and in miscellaneous and contingent expenses, amounting to $9,665. I will not at this time particularize them. The items generally are small in amount, but have been scrutinized with care. When the bill is considered by sections it will be my pleasure to explain our action in each case, if it is desired by any one.

The chief reduction made by the committee was under the head of buildings and grounds, the estimates of the Department being—

For completion of the hospital	$42,000
For drainage of grounds	16,000
For new reservoir	15,000
For continuing parapet wall	500
For a shed to protect field batteries	1,200
Total	74,000

This large sum was recommended by the Department for the completion of structures already begun and for other and new improvements.

The hospital was begun several years ago, and is partially completed. It may well be doubted if a new hospital is needed at West Point, by considerations either of health, convenience, or comfort, the doubt in my mind being based upon the report of the Surgeon-General of the Army made in 1870. Speaking of the old hospital he says that—

> While this is far from being a model hospital, either in internal arrangement, access of air and sunshine, ventilation, or drainage, the records do not show that any exceptions have ever been made to its sanitary condition, due no doubt to the fact that the number of sick in hospital is usually small and the ailments slight.

From this statement it would appear that there is no such urgent necessity for the completion of the new hospital as would make the appropriation asked for indispensable. If in the near past the old hospital answered all the requirements of the academy, surely the completion of the new one may be delayed until the Treasury is in better condition to meet the expense. I may with propriety make the same remarks regarding the estimate submitted by the Department for the drainage of the grounds, amounting to $16,000. The system was begun some years ago and has cost much money, but if any one will take the trouble to examine the report of the Surgeon-General, to which I have referred, which discusses the subject of sewerage at West Point at length and with great particularity, he cannot fail to be convinced that there is no pressing necessity for the appropriation. That a perfect system of sewerage is desirable is not to be disputed; that it is demanded by any sanitary reasons cannot be maintained, and until we can appropriate for all purposes of absolute necessity, we should postpone those which are simply desirable and convenient.

The estimate made by the Department of $15,000 for a new reservoir received the thoughtful consideration of the committee, and there was a diversity of opinion as to the necessity for the improvement. It is alleged that during the great drought of last summer the post was without water for several days from the usual source of supply, a reservoir upon a stream in the rear of the post, and that the water had to be hauled from the river and distributed by carts. If there was a probability that this was likely to occur again, no one would hesitate as to the propriety of the appropriation; but this is an exceptional and isolated instance of want of capacity, not so much of the reservoir as doubtless of the stream which supplies it, so that a majority of the committee were of opinion that the asked for appropriation might be deferred until a more convenient season. If the judgment of the committee should differ from us in regard to this matter, it will be no subject of regret that we have been corrected.

The estimates for the continuation of the parapet wall and the section of a shed to protect the field batteries, amounting to $1,700, are demanded by no considerations which should outweigh those of the necessity for absolute economy in expenditures at this time; therefore the committee have not recommended appropriations for these purposes.

I have thus endeavored to briefly explain the principal reductions made by the bill, and might with propriety commit it to the action of the committee; but I may not refrain from adverting to the great cost of the management of the Academy and of the instruction afforded by it, as compared with other great seats of learning, such as Harvard, Yale, and Princeton. The average number of cadets is three hundred and ten. The number of officers, professors, assistant professors, masters, and surgeons employed and detailed from the Army for their government, instruction, and care is fifty-seven, as follows: One major-general, three professors with the rank and pay of colonel, six professors with rank and pay of lieutenant-colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, two majors, six captains, sixteen first lieutenants, eighteen second lieutenants, one sword-master, three surgeons, whose pay and allowances amount to $168,394.64, or at the rate of $543.27 a year for the government and tuition of each cadet. The proportion of officers to cadets is as one to five and a half. The cost of boarding, clothing, and general maintenance of each cadet is $540 a year, amounting to $167,400, or $994.64 less than the cost of their government and tuition.

These are startling figures, which should make us pause and reflect. The academic staff has become overgrown, and the time will come when it must and will be reduced. It should be done now, but in this short session neither time nor opportunity has been given us to consider the subject with the care its importance demands. The changes and reductions should be radical. In 1863, when the number of cadets was 253, and when many items were included in the appropriation which are not now estimated for, being provided for in other bills, the entire appropriation for the Academy was only $173,842. The growth in cost and expenditure as shown by these figures is only cumulative proof of the wasteful extravagance of our generation.

I would not willingly cripple the usefulness of this institution in any regard. I acknowledge its value to the country; I know the skilled soldiers it has given to us in the past. They have been and are our pride and glory. I would have men of equal skill and learning trained for the grave duties of the future, but to produce them I do not deem it necessary that there should be wasteful extravagance in the management and support of the Academy. As at present organized its government is extravagant; the cost of its instruction is without parallel. The pruning-knife of economy may be safely applied without fear of detriment to its usefulness. My chief regret is that time will not permit it to be done here and now.

Mr. Chairman, I have detained the committee longer than I intended. When the particular items of the bill are under consideration I shall be glad to give the committee any information I may have acquired by a careful and patient examination of the whole subject.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by clauses for amendment.

The following paragraph was read:

For pay of the Military Academy band, $6,336; which shall be in full for the pay of the said band, and for all company musicians, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, any law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That the pay herein allowed and given shall be in full of all other pay, allowance, forage, and commutation, except for quarters, fuel, and light; and that the pay for other professors, instructors, and assistants, being officers of the Army, when detailed and assigned to service at the Military Academy, shall be only their Army pay and allowances; and that all other acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out after the word "band" these words: "and for all company musicians."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] that in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth lines of this paragraph the words "provided that" should be omitted so as to make this not merely a limitation upon this appropriation, but a permanent provision. It will then read: "The pay herein allowed and given shall be in full," &c.

Mr. CLYMER. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest further that the word "other" preceding the words "pay, allowance, forage, and commutation" should also be struck out as well as the word "other" in the last clause, so that the clause will read: "And that all acts and parts of acts," &c.

Mr. CLYMER. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman and propose further that the word "that" in the twenty-seventh line preceding the words "pay for other professors," and also the word "that" in line 30, near the beginning of the last clause, be also struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the modifications proposed will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TURNEY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same with certain amendments, and with a recommendation that it pass as amended.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF DISTRICT JAIL.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to the Senate bill; and that the Senate agree to the same.

WM. S. HOLMAN,
A. M. KIMBALL,
CASEY YOUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
A. S. PADDOCK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state in a few words the point of disagreement in reference to this bill. The original bill appropriated $14,000 for the removal of the jail and proposed that the money should be paid out of the public Treasury. The House amended the bill so as to direct that the money be paid out of the treasury of the District of Columbia. The conferees on the part of the House have agreed with the conferees on the part of the Senate that the House recede from its amendment so that, if this report be adopted, the bill will pass in its original form appropriating $14,000 out of the public Treasury. I do not think, sir, if it could have been well avoided, this appropriation should be made from the Treasury of the United States. I think it should have come out of the treasury of the District; but it is important this work should be done and it is quite manifest the treasury of the District would not bear the expenditure of that amount of money.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECORDER OF DEEDS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the claim of the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia for re-imbursement of money expended by him for record books; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

DEFICIENCIES IN HOUSE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. FOSTER. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 4307) making appropriation to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate; and that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

FLORIDA ELECTION TESTIMONY.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed for the select committee on the recent election in Florida the testimony taken by that committee.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

THE GOLD AND SILVER INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at ten minutes after three o'clock, and the House resumes, as the unfinished business of the morning hour, the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to attend an international conference on the subject of the relative values of gold and silver. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. O'BRIEN. At the request of gentlemen on both sides of the House, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution now pending be postponed until the morning hour of Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. If there is unfinished business in the morning hour coming up on that day it will of course under the rules take precedence.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WILLARD. I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute for that joint resolution and to move that it be printed, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not object to the substitute being printed, but I object to its being considered as pending.

Mr. WILLARD. I only ask that it be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The substitute is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the event of the full remonetization of silver in the United States, should the governments of one or more countries invite a conference or convention with a view to agree upon and establish a uniform relation of silver with gold as a legal standard of value the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three qualified persons as commissioners to attend such conference or convention.

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to propose to the governments of such countries as use both gold and silver as a legal standard of value such conference or convention, in the event and for the purpose stated in the foregoing resolution.

CENTENNIAL COINS.

Mr. O'BRIEN, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3159) to authorize the coinage of centennial coins, and for other purposes, and moved that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF COINAGE ACT.

Mr. O'BRIEN also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 658) to amend the coinage act of 1873, and moved that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

OVERCHARGE OF DUTIES ON TONNAGE AND IMPORTS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4250) to provide remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports, with amendments.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, asked the reading of the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill is a copy, with one or two verbal corrections, of a bill agreed upon by the Judiciary Committee of this House in January, 1875, and reported therefrom to the House on the 15th of that month, and a recent decision of the Supreme Court, and a conflict between sections 2931 and 3011 of the Revised Statutes, make its immediate enactment into a law a duty to importers and to the Government.

It modifies existing laws in the following particulars:

I. By requiring collectors of customs to inform importers by mail, whenever the post-office address has been left with the collector, of the date of the ascertainment and liquidation of entries, from which the ten days within which a notice of dissatisfaction therewith begins to run. Up to 1867 the several collectors of customs were required to mail, and did mail, such notices.

But on May 10, 1867, the Treasury Department issued a new circular, completely changing the former one, and directing the collectors, instead of informing importers by mail, to publish the date of liquidation in the custom-house, a form of notice not likely to reach those not living or doing business in the place, unless they employed some one to daily watch the posted bulletin. In this circular Secretary McCulloch said:

"In view of this provision making the rights of importers dependent on a compliance therewith within a specified time, 'after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties,' it is deemed proper that they should be duly notified of the time at which the duties on their respective entries may have been ascertained and liquidated. You will therefore cause to be kept a record of the several entries liquidated from day to day, stating the name of the vessel, the place from which and the time when she arrived, the name of the importer, and the date of entry; and will give notice of the liquidation of such entries by posting in some conspicuous place in the custom-house accessible to the public, on the day succeeding the date of ascertainment and liquidation, a transcript of such record, there to remain for ten days, when such transcript will be removed and filed with the records of your office; and the posting of such transcript will be deemed and taken to be a full notice to all parties interested.

"The notice of dissatisfaction or protest referred to in the section before cited must, in all cases, be presented to the collector within ten days, and the appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury be taken within thirty days after notice of the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties as herein provided.

"When an appeal is taken from the decision of a collector, such appeal, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, may be delivered to such collector, who is hereby instructed to receive and transmit the same to this Department, with a full report of the case, together with a statement of the reasons for his decision."

This was the condition of importers till, by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Westray, reported in the eighteenth volume of Wallace, page 322, the court said there was under the law of 1864 no law requiring any notice at all. In that case, the importer offered to show that in October, 1864, he made the import in controversy; that the amount of duty on which was illegal, and the illegality was conceded, but the Government said its suit for the amount must prevail, because he had made no protest against the liquidation within ten days of liquidation of the entry. He offered to prove that he never had any notice of the liquidation, and that none had been sent to him, although the collector was at that time ordered to send it. It must be borne in mind that the liquidation is merely a making up on the custom-house books of the account of duties after the reports of the appraiser or other examiner are received by the collector, and the date of doing it is necessarily known only to the collector's clerks. The importer may not then pay the duty, and on a warehouse entry does not oftentimes for months, but under the law of 1864 he is, unless he protests, estopped from questioning the accuracy of the transaction.

To be sure, under a law of 1866, (section 3013 of the Revised Statutes,) the Secretary has a discretionary authority to relieve from hardship, but it is believed by the committee that the matter ought not to rest on discretion but be regulated by law.

II. By relieving the importer from the labor of sending on each protest a separate appeal to the Secretary in Washington, as now required by section 2931 of Revised Statutes. The regulations under this section now compel the importer to file a duplicate protest with the collector, one copy of which is for the Treasury, and this should be sufficient. The committee see no necessity for requiring a new appeal to the Treasury on each entry. In 1858, the Treasury required the importer to file with the collector duplicate protests. The order was in these words, and this order is now in force:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 19, 1858.

SIR: In all cases hereafter, when duties are paid under protest, you are instructed to require of the importer a duplicate of the same, one to be filed in your office, the other to be transmitted to this Department at the time the protest is made.

In making out the certified statements, a copy of the protest will be required, in accordance with the regulations now in force.

I am, &c.,

HOWELL COBB, Secretary.

AUGUSTUS SCHELL, Collector, New York.

As by this order the duplicate protest is to be forwarded to the Treasury, and by the order of 1867 the appeal is to be filed with the collector, there seems to be no sufficient reason for vexing the importer with making and forwarding so many papers to inform the Treasury of the same thing; but it is sufficient to require one protest to be left with the collector, and he to report to the Treasury why he exacted the duty, the Treasury to inform the importer of his decision, and if the exaction was unwarranted to immediately repay the amount.

III. By enabling the importer, if the Treasury sustains the collector, to bring his suit in a Federal court. Now, the suit must be begun in a State court and removed, by certiorari, into a Federal court; and also by giving to the importer six months in which to begin his suit, instead of two months, as now, and compelling him to include all his claims in that single suit instead of multiplying suits, as must now be (section 2931) on every entry. This matter has been under consideration at the Treasury, as appears by the following communication:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1874.

SIR: * * * I desire to say, in addition, that, upon further examination of the subject-matter of said letter, I am inclined to the opinion that in cases where litigation arises between importers and the Government, as to the proper rate of duty on imports, such importer should be required to bring one suit on every question that may thus arise in order to protect his rights before the court and the Department, and that when in one such case protest and appeal and suit have been instituted by any importer, the filing of protests at the custom-house on each subsequent entry, involving the same question, should be sufficient to protect his rights, without further appeal to this Department, which would save a vast amount of correspondence between the custom house and the Department, and quite as well protect the interest of the Government.

I am, very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

Hon. J. S. MORRILL,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 16, 1874.

* * * I am also of opinion that the existing law, act of June 30, 1864, (chapter 177, sections 14, 15,) should be so modified as to dispense with the necessity of more than one action being brought to determine the correctness of this Department's decision upon any single question arising under the tariff laws. This can be done by making such action a test case. The necessity of a suit being brought by every importer who may deem himself aggrieved by such decision is not apparent, as his rights may be fully secured by protest and appeal without suit, and thus a multiplicity of actions and the consequent accumulation of costs avoided.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Finance Committee United States Senate.

It has seemed to the committee a better course to require a suit every six months, or two suits in each year when the litigation continues undecided in the courts for so long a time, and the importer continues the importation of a similar article on which the same question arises. This will be more prudent than one suit, because it will enable the Treasury to know every six months just what amount is involved. And it is to be hoped that, by vigor in the district attorneys in pressing suits for trial, and similar diligence on the part of the plaintiffs, the litigation may be speedily disposed of.

IV. By requiring the clerk of the court, on a final judgment, to transmit a copy thereof to the Treasury, and the Secretary to forthwith pay it in the kind of money that was exacted, with costs of court duly taxed.

V. By permitting an importer to make a protest by a duly authorized agent, evidence of whose agency must be filed with the collector, and also the post-office address of both, to provide for evidence, or place of business outside the port of entry, and enabling the Secretary to do equity when satisfied that notice of liquidation was not received.

VI. The Supreme Court has decided, in Barney vs. Schneider, (9 Wallace, 248,) that on trials of a suit by an importer to recover excess of duties, he could only use the copies of his protests and entries certified by Treasury officers, and that failure of those officers to procure them on legal notice did not, under the statute, warrant the introduction of copies as evidence. This is a hardship and expense which should be and is remedied in the proposed bill.

VII. There is need that the rule of presumption declared by the Federal courts, (United States vs. Ullman, 4 Benedict, 54,) in suits to recover excessive taxes, be made secure by statute, and that has been done at the end of the second section of the proposed bill.

VIII. For many years it was assumed by the Treasury that the protest law of March 3, 1857, (11 Statutes, 195,) repealed that of February 26, 1845, (5 Statutes, 727.) The importers denied it, and finally, in October, 1875, the Supreme Court, in Barney vs. Watson, (92 United States Reports, 449,) so decided. This decision makes it needful that legislation be had as in the third section of the proposed bill, to save accrued rights and to enforce the decision. In addition this section reveals a blunder of the revision in incorporating the law of 1845, (section 3011,) and that of 1864, (section 2931,) which conflict.

How this conflict arose before the enactment of the present Revised Statutes appears from the following official correspondence:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, SAN FRANCISCO,
Collector's Office, September 30, 1872.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 18th instant, relative to a letter from C. A. McNulty, an attorney in this city, in which he states that Hon. Lorenzo Sawyer, United States judge for the district of California, held, in a case brought before him, that it is necessary to protest at the time of payment of duty, as well as within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of duties, &c.

In reply, I have to respectfully transmit herewith copy of the brief in argument by the United States district attorney, together with a copy of the record of the court sustaining the demurrer, and triplicate protest, and beg to state in this connection that the question involved was raised by the attorney of the United States, on demurrer to the complaint, in the case of the San Francisco and Pacific Sugar Company against John F. Miller, late collector, on the ground that no protest was made at the time of the payment of duties upon an entry for consumption, and not within ten days after ascertainment and liquidation of duties.

I have also to state that, since the date of said decision, the numerous appeal cases represented by Mr. McNulty, as attorney for importers, have been in accordance with the ruling laid down therein, although the general practice at this port has been to protest but once, and that within ten days after the liquidation and ascertainment of duties.

I shall continue to comply with the rules laid down in revised regulations, and the fourteenth and fifteenth sections act June 30, 1864, until otherwise instructed by the Department.

I am, very respectfully,

T. B. SHANNON, Collector.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 19, 1872.

SIR: I submit herewith a letter from the collector of customs at San Francisco, dated the 30th ultimo, with certain other papers in connection therewith relative to a decision rendered by Hon. Lorenzo Sawyer, United States judge for the district of California, in a suit which was brought by certain parties against John F. Miller, late collector at that port, to recover duties claimed to have been exacted in excess.

From these papers it appears that the district attorney demurred to the complaint on the ground that it was not shown that the parties had made a protest at the time of the payment of the duties, and the court sustained the demurrer, with leave to amend the complaint. Of course, if no protest was filed at the time of the payment of the duties, which is understood to have been the fact, the demurrer is fatal to the case, if this point is insisted upon by the Government. Protest in this case was made within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties, and this office has always considered that a protest filed within ten days, and an appeal taken within thirty days after the liquidation of the duties, as a sufficient compliance with the law requiring protest and appeal.

If the decision of Judge Sawyer in this case is to be taken as a rule of action, it would seem to require double protest on every consumption entry, one at the time of the payment of duties, and the other within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of duties, except, of course, where the date of payment, filing of protest, and liquidation are simultaneous. This rule, if adhered to, would be fatal to a number of hundred suits now pending at the principal ports of the United States, and it occurs to this office that it would not be wise for the Government to insist upon this point being sustained. If you concur therein, you are hereby authorized to give such instructions in the matter to the district attorney as shall carry out these views.

I am, &c.,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

E. C. BANFIELD, Esq., Solicitor, &c.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
November 14, 1872.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, together with certain papers relative to a decision recently made by Hon. Lorenzo Sawyer, judge of the United States circuit court for the district of California, in the case of the San Francisco and Pacific Sugar Company against John F. Miller, collector of customs at San Francisco, for the recovery of duties claimed to have been exacted in excess and paid under protest.

It appears that the United States attorney demurred to the complaint, on the ground specifically that it is not averred that protest was made in writing and signed by the plaintiff at or before the payment of the duties claimed to be recovered in the action.

The court sustained the demurrer, with leave to the plaintiff to amend, which, as stated, is fatal to the action, as the plaintiff had made no protest in writing at or before the payment of the duties, but had, according to the provisions of the act of 1864, protested within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of those duties, the fact as well as that of due appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury being averred in the complaint. I am advised by your letter that the rule thus established by Judge Sawyer's decision, if adhered to, would prove fatal to the numbers of suits now pending at the principal ports of the United States, and that, in your opinion, it would not be wise for your Department to insist upon the point taken by the Government's counsel. I am accordingly requested, if this view receives my concurrence, to give proper instructions. In reply I have to say that I am not advised as to the ground taken by the court, but I have before me the brief of the United States attorney, as well as the demurrer, showing the ground taken by that officer specifically, and that I am constrained to doubt the correctness of the position taken. The plaintiff will doubtless take the case to the Supreme Court. Until the decision is sustained by that tribunal I do not think it advisable for your Department to alter the rule of practice which has grown out of what would seem to be a very proper construction of the act of 1864, regarding the time of protest. I do not, however, think of any special instructions to be given to the United States attorney which could result, as far as this case is concerned, in carrying out the views expressed in your letter, but I will direct him to refrain from raising the point in future cases until he is advised on the subject by this office.

Very respectfully,

E. C. BANFIELD,
Solicitor of the Treasury.

Hon. GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
November 16, 1872.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th of September last, in regard to the ruling of Hon. Lorenzo Sawyer, United States judge for the district of California, that it is necessary to protest at the time of payment of duties, as well as within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of duties; and in reply would inform you that, notwithstanding said ruling, the Department will continue to regard a compliance with the requirements of the fourteenth and fifteenth sections of the act of June 30, 1864, and the regulations of the Department as affording ample protection to the rights of importers in such cases.

I am, &c.,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary.

T. B. SHANNON, Esq.,
Collector, San Francisco, California.

The court in California decided that the law of 1845 was, in 1871-'72 not repealed by the law of 1857 or 1864 respecting protests, but was in force. The Treasury Department, however, said that whether it was or not, the importer was safe if he proceeded under that of 1864, but did not say what would happen if he proceeded alone under that of 1845. Thus the question stood till the Revised Statutes, which inserted that of 1845 (section 3011) and that of 1864 (section 2931) as both in force. Even a casual glance shows that both ought not to be in force, for section 3011 says the importer may bring a suit if he protests "at or before payment" of duties, but section 2931 declares he shall not maintain a suit unless he files a notice of dissatisfaction within "ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation" of duties. Must the importer do both? So Judge Sawyer held in California. An importer enters his goods to-day; the duties are estimated, a deposit of money made to cover them, and the merchandise in part delivered. The "liquidation" may not be for a week. Or he may enter for warehouse, the entry liquidated, and the goods not withdrawn and duties paid for six months after liquidation. The entry may be on the 1st of January, the liquidation on the 10th of that month, and the duties paid on the 1st of March; but when, under these two sections, need protests be filed? Was not the California court correct in law and Secretary BOUTWELL right in equity?

Thus embarrassment has been intensified by the late decision of the Supreme Court in Watson's case, which holds, as the importers claimed, that the law of 1845 was not repealed by that of 1857, as the Treasury thought it was.

To remedy this conflict of sections for the future, the committee recommend the very simple and clear provisions of law in the first two sections of the accompanying bill, and to save the rights of all importers who have protested either under section 2931 or 3011, the committee recommend the third section of the bill. This last enables importers to proceed to test the legality of the exactions made of them under the limitations and provisions of either. Under that of 3011 they could, as the Supreme Court now decides, have sued down to 1864, and that right the accompanying bill declares shall not have been taken away, nor shall section 3011 take away any rights under that of 2931.

In order to secure a prompt collection of the revenue the Federal laws prohibit the interference of the judicial powers with the assessment and collection of any amount the executive inflicts. The citizen must first pay and then sue to get it back, if the court says the exaction was illegal. The customs officers, of course exact, in case of doubt, the highest rate for their own protection, either when the article is novel or the law new, although in all State tax laws the citizen has the benefit of the doubt where the law-making power has spoken ambiguously. But the Government owes it to importers to make the remedies open to them clear, unmistakable, and speedy.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now ask that the bill be read as amended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on the future entry of any vessel, or of any merchandise, the decision of the collector of customs at the port of importation and entry, as to the rate and amount of duties to be paid on the tonnage of such vessel or on such merchandise, and the dutiable costs and charges thereon, shall be final and conclusive against all persons interested therein, unless the owner, master, commander, or consignee of such vessel, in the case of duties levied on tonnage, or the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of the merchandise, in the case of duties levied on merchandise, or the costs and charges thereon, has given, or shall give, within ten days after the final liquidation of the duties and closing the account thereof on the books of the custom-house, information whereof is to be communicated by the collector, as is hereinafter required, if dissatisfied with such decision, a notice thereof in writing to the collector, signed by the party or parties making entry, or his, her, or their duly constituted agent or attorney, as hereinafter directed, setting forth therein distinctly and specifically the grounds of objection thereto; and, on the reception of every such protest, the collector shall forthwith transmit the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, with a full report of the circumstances of the decision complained of, and such answer as can be made to the complaint of the importer; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, within ninety days after receiving such report, prepare and transmit by mail to the party making entry, or agent, as aforesaid, his decision thereon; and if in favor of the complainant, or if the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for the period of ninety days as aforesaid, not make and transmit a decision, then he shall immediately draw his warrant upon the Treasurer, in favor of the party entitled to the overpayment, directing a refund of the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but if the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury be adverse to the complainant, then such decision shall be forever final and conclusive, unless, within six months after the date of such decision, the party making entry, or his or their legal representatives, shall institute a suit at law against the collector aforesaid in a district or circuit court of the United States for the district or circuit wherein the payment was made, setting forth all the particulars now required by section 3011 of chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes, approved June 22, 1874. And if in said suit final judgment shall be rendered for the plaintiffs, in either of said courts, the clerk of said court shall within twenty days, provided no appeal shall have been taken, transmit a transcript thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall immediately cause the judgment to be paid out of the Treasury, in the same description of money as was exacted of the plaintiff by the defendant, together with costs of court and attorney's fees, as regulated by the highest court of the State wherein the said suit is brought. And each and every of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States shall have authority to enforce, by writ of mandamus, the payment as aforesaid of every such final judgment.

SEC. 2. That whenever any before-mentioned protest shall not be signed with the signature of the party or parties making entry as aforesaid, but by an agent or attorney, then, in every such case, evidence in writing of such agency, or appointment of such attorney, according to the law of the land, shall be filed with the collector, at or before the serving on him of said protest. And every party making entry of merchandise at any custom-house shall declare thereon his post-office address, and to such address the collector shall mail a notice of the date of the final liquidation of the entry aforesaid and closing of the account thereof in the books of the custom-house, stating the amount of balance, if any there be, due on either side; and the date of receiving such notice in due course of mail, by the party to whom it is addressed, shall be held to be the date of such liquidation and closing for the purposes of protest, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that such notice was not sent or received, and in such case the time for making protest shall be extended by him to ten days from the time when the party making entry was in fact informed of such liquidation and closing. And every suit begun as aforesaid by any party or parties shall contain each and every item of money claimed by said party to have been exacted from him, her, or them by the defendant up to the date of said suit, and which has not been included in some previous suit; and if any party shall, in the opinion of the court before which trial is had, unduly multiply such suits, he shall not, on final judgment therein in his favor, be entitled to recover therein costs against the defendant, but shall pay therein double costs if such judgment be in favor of the defendant. And, on the trial of every such suit, the respective officers of the Government shall, on due notice in writing served by the plaintiff on the defendant, or his attorney, produce before the court in which the trial is had the originals of all entries, and all other papers in their possession relating to the importation or importations in controversy, which are pertinent to the issue, and in default thereof the plaintiff may read in evidence copies of such entries and papers. And on the trial of every such suit, the plaintiff having given evidence, to the satisfaction of the court, of making entry of the importation in controversy, of the rate and amount of duty thereon exacted by the defendant and paid by the plaintiff, and of the protest aforesaid, shall be entitled to rest his cause; and it shall thereupon be for the defendant to make it appear that the exaction complained of was warranted by law; and in every case where the statute relied upon by the defendant is, in the opinion of the court, ambiguous, and fairly capable of two conflicting interpretations as to the rate of duty imposed, the benefit of the doubt shall be given to the plaintiff.

SEC. 3. That nothing in any law of Congress shall take away, or be construed to take away or impair, the right of any person or persons who have, on or before the passage of this act, paid money as and for duties, under protest, according to the requirements and provisions of the act of Congress, chapter 23, approved February 26, 1845, or its revision, contained in section 3011 of the Revised Statutes, chapter 8, approved June 22, 1874, to any collector of customs, or other person acting as such, in order to obtain merchandise imported by him or them, or the fourteenth section of an act approved June 13, 1864, or its revision, in section 2931 of the Revised Statutes, which duties were not authorized wholly or in part by law to maintain an action at law against the persons exacting said money, to ascertain and try the legality of such exaction and payment of duties, according to the limitations and provisions of either of the said acts of Congress.

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I demand the previous question on the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the question being taken in that form.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question in regard to the last clause of the second section of the bill, where it is provided that—

The benefit of the doubt shall be given to the plaintiff.

Perhaps I ought to apologize for asking this question, being a member of the committee, but I was not present when the committee agreed to report the bill. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if the plaintiff in that case is the person who owes the duty.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Yes, sir. I understand the effect of this provision to be that where an importer has sued for the purpose of settling the construction of the law and the court has, in any way, expressed a doubt as to the interpretation of the law imposing the duty, the importer shall be entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM N. HALDEMAN.

Mr. WATTERSON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4262) for the relief of W. N. Haldeman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas, on the 25th of June, 1858, Walter N. Haldeman executed bond to the United States in the penal sum of $50,000, with sureties, covenanting for the faithful discharge of his duties as surveyor of customs at the port of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, and also as designated depositary for the United States;

And whereas in the year 1861 the said Haldeman ceased to be surveyor of customs and depositary;

And whereas, on the 18th day of November, 1861, suit was instituted in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kentucky against the said Haldeman and his sureties, in which judgment was claimed for the balance due on settlement of the account of said Haldeman, late surveyor of customs and depositary;

And whereas, on the 17th of June, in the year 1863, by the judgment of said court, said suit was dismissed agreed;

And whereas, on the 30th day of August, 1870, the United States instituted another suit in said court against the said Haldeman and his sureties for the same cause of action, in which said defendants pleaded the adjudication of said court in a former suit in bar;

And whereas said court held as matter of law that such former judgment was not a bar, and rendered judgment against the said Haldeman, which, upon appeal, was affirmed by the Supreme Court on the question of law therein involved;

And whereas it is alleged by the said Haldeman and his sureties that such judgment against them is unjust and inequitable: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to re-open the accounts of the said Haldeman, late surveyor and depositary as aforesaid, and allow him credits for such sums as the Secretary of the Treasury may find to be justly and equitably due; and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be entered in said court satisfaction of said judgment to the extent of the credit which may be so allowed.

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of Walter N. Haldeman, late surveyor of customs at the port of Louisville, Kentucky, to credit and allow such amounts as may be shown to have been improperly charged against him in the statement of his accounts; also, such sums as may be shown to have been paid by said Haldeman or his sureties to any officer of the Government having charge of the reported balance against him for collection, it being first proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that such payments were made, or that said Haldeman is justly and equitably entitled to such credits; and upon the final statement of the accounts of said Haldeman under this act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause satisfaction to be entered on a judgment lately obtained against said Haldeman and his sureties in the circuit court of the United States for the Kentucky district, to the extent of the reduction of the amount of balance now held against him, by the allowance of such credits.

Mr. WATTERSON. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The report was read.

Mr. STONE. I make the point of order that the bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WATTERSON. The bill does not appropriate one dollar of money.

The SPEAKER. As far as the Chair can find, by looking over the bill quickly, the facts of this case are that this is a debt due the Government by Mr. Haldeman. The bill authorizes credits against that debt, and releases to that extent a debt due to the United States. The Chair is of opinion that this brings it within the rule that—

All proceedings touching appropriations of money, and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

The House will notice the use of the word "touching." The use of this word seems to indicate that there should be great delicacy in discriminating between points of order when raised as to the taking of money out of the Treasury. The Chair, therefore, is of opinion that any doubt on this subject should be given in the direction of protecting the Treasury of the Government from anything that would prevent money coming into the Treasury or make appropriations from it. "Touching" would seem to mean in the least degree relating to appropriations of money or property. A debt due an individual is the property of such individual, and so with a debt due the Government; it is in like manner the property of the Government, and the word "touching" therefore attaches. The Chair therefore gives the benefit of the doubt to the Treasury, and rules that the bill is subject to the point of order.

The Chair desires to say further that this ruling works no hardship to the bill; that if a majority favor the bill they can readily, in the course of legislation, reach it. It is better then that the word "touching" should be construed to mean, as above stated, as relating in the least degree to the taking of money out of the Treasury or the taking of property of the Government. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri, and rules this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole this day week after the morning hour.

Mr. FORT. I object.

Mr. HALE. Let it take its course.

Mr. BLAND. Is this a private bill?

The SPEAKER. It is. It goes to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WATTERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was given as follows:

To Mr. DOUGLAS, for three days on account of illness.

To Mr. JAMES B. REILLY, for one week.

DOWER IN THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, Mr. LAWRENCE of Ohio, Mr. LYNDE of Wisconsin, and Mr. LORD of New York.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORT. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WATTERSON] to yield to me for a moment, that I may make a report.

Mr. WATTERSON. I decline to yield.

The question being taken on Mr. WATTERSON'S motion, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Dr. George McCoy, acting assistant surgeon United States Army, for a pension, on account of disability incurred in the line of his duty, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. G. A. BAGLEY: The petition of citizens of Lewis County, New York, for the purchase and operation of the telegraph lines of the country by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois: The petition of George C. Crisly and other citizens of Iowa, for an investigation of the Des Moines River land grant, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of Mary Riley, mother of George Ward, deceased, late a private in Company C, Fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of L. G. Martin and George N. Lamphere, for compensation for additional services in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of Messrs. Strong & Ross, of Vermont, for an extension of a patent for improvements in weighing-scales, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HENKLE: Memorial of Anna Maria Biscoe, widow of General George W. Biscoe, of the Nineteenth Regiment Maryland Volunteers in the war of 1812, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLMAN: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Aurora to Hartford, Indiana, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the improvement of Youghiogheny River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LORD: The petition of R. P. Buck, of Brooklyn, New York, administrator of the estate of Franklin Spofford, deceased, for an increase of interest on claims allowed by the court of Alabama claims, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of Brett, Son & Co., of New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Oliver Bulkley, of Connecticut, administrator &c., and Lathrop L. S. Clearman, of New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of D. T. Trundy, of Brooklyn, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Charles James, G. N. Bowman, Samuel Harwood, S. Godley, J. B. Fuller, Elijah Drake, V. B. Perry, W. H. Buell, and other business men of Holley, Orleans County, New York, of both political parties, expressing satisfaction in the appointment of conference committees to consider the mode of counting the ballots for President and Vice-President, and earnestly asking that all party considerations may be thrown aside, to the committee on counting the electoral vote.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, that the investigation of the recent presidential election shall be fair, and for an amendment to the Constitution to prevent a recurrence of existing evils, to the same committee.

By Mr. STRAIT: The petition of Joseph Bobleter and 72 others, of Minnesota, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. TURNEY: The petition of citizens of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WARREN: The petition of H. M. Whitney, for a change of the name of the propeller Ella Knight to that of City of Gloucester, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama: The petition of J. W. Tucker and other citizens of Alabama, for a post-route from Lake City, Covington County, via Alford's Mills, to Geneva, in Geneva County, Alabama, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, accompanying a memorial from citizens of Wrangle, Alaska, asking for the establishment of courts of justice in that Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I present a memorial numerously signed by leading business men in the city of Newark, New Jersey, relative to the counting of the electoral vote, which, as it is brief, I ask to have read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to its reading. The petition will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, representing a large proportion of the financial, commercial, manufacturing and business interests of the city of Newark, beg leave most respectfully to express their great satisfaction at the action of your honorable bodies in appointing committees of conference to consider the proper mode of counting the ballots for President and Vice-President of the United States.

They hail this action as an indication that the two Houses of Congress are desirous of settling this complicated question in a spirit of moderation and conciliation; and they beg leave to represent that in acting thus your honorable bodies have the cordial sympathy of the great mass of the American people, irrespective of party.

Your memorialists, most respectfully but most earnestly, pray that all mere party considerations may be thrown aside, and that in this crisis in the history of the United States the pure and unselfish patriotism which inspired the founders of the Republic may guide your legislative action, and that you may thus relieve the country from its present uncertainty and apprehension by a prompt determination of the mode in which the pending momentous issue shall be decided.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish simply to say, Mr. President, that I sympathize with the sentiments of this petition, and believe there is patriotism enough and statesmanship enough in the representatives of the American people to reach a satisfactory solution of the present embarrassment, and I hope that statesmanship and that patriotism may be exercised.

Let me add that should a satisfactory result be reached, the complications that we deprecate may in their effect in mitigating the acerbities of party prove a boon to the nation worthy of the memorial year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the select committee to devise a mode of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petition of citizens of Ohio, soldiers in the late war, praying the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WHYTE. I present a petition of H. Clay Naill, Charles W. Miller, Charles Cole, and other citizens of Frederick, Maryland, urging the passage of the bill allowing to pensioners the arrears due them but from which they are debarred by the limitations of the existing pension laws, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. The committee have reported the bill to the Senate to which the petition refers, and I therefore suggest that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Crown, of the District of Columbia, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of his lands in said District, and the destruction of certain property thereon by the United States troops during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1071) for the relief of H. E. Woodhouse & Co., of Brownsville, Texas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 28) for the relief of D. S. Miller and G. W. Riley, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1121) to abolish the board of commissioners of "the metropolitan police district of the District of Columbia," and for other purposes, moved that it be postponed indefinitely, a House bill of a similar import having already passed; which motion was agreed to.

PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE PAVEMENT.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on the District of Columbia have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," and the act amendatory thereof, and have instructed me to report it without amendment. This bill proposes to extend the period of limitation for the completion of the pavement from the 15th of January until the 1st of June, 1877. The period named in the act for the completion of the pavement having very nearly arrived, it is essential that some immediate action should be taken. The committee have directed me to report favorably upon the bill. I ask that it be read for information, and if there is no objection I will then ask the Senate to put it on its passage.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill had better go over. It is a very important subject to the property-holders.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course I know that the bill is liable to objection and goes over under the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont; but as the period of limitation expires on the 15th, which is Monday of next week, and it is possible that this Senate may adjourn over to-morrow, it is exceedingly desirable, unless there is some objection, in order to save the rights of all parties under this contract, that action should be had to-day. I do not propose to urge the matter against the judgment of the Senator from Vermont, but wish merely to say that the necessity is very urgent and would probably prevent some legal questions that might possibly arise if the period of limitation should expire without the work having been completed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see the force of what the honorable Senator from Kansas says, but I also saw the force of what the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] said the other day about the state of the Avenue, (either here or elsewhere, I do not say it was here,) and about the wrong—he did not say that, that I know of, but I do—the apparent wrong that has been done to the property-holders on the whole of the south side of that Avenue, or almost the whole of them, by the manner in which this work has been performed, and by the want of diligence apparently, (I do not now criticise it or condemn it because causes I know nothing about may have made it necessary, but the apparent want of diligence,) in the contractors in coming to time in respect of their contract, so that the people on the south side of the Avenue could have the benefit of the street and the use of their property. It appears to have done a great injury to them. Therefore, I ask that this bill may go over in order that there may be a day during which the public in this town will know that the bill is up for consideration, and if they have any views to present about it they will have time to do so.

Mr. INGALLS. May I be permitted to say one word, Mr. President, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont that the people of the town may have information of the pendency of the bill. While it is exceedingly proper that they should be advised, yet the Senator may not be aware that this is a House bill, that the measure has been pending before the House and before the committees both in the House and the Senate, and that there is no objection to the adoption of this measure coming from any source, so far as I am advised.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad to hear that they understand it.

Mr. INGALLS. In regard to the action of the contractors in connection with the rights of property-holders upon the south side of the street, I am not prepared to say that injustice has not been done. There is apparently an embargo, a blockade, that has been imposed upon traffic on the south side of the Avenue. That appears to me to have been irregular and improper, to say the least, but I am advised that the action of the contractors was had under the direction of the commissioners who were appointed by the act, and therefore the contractors ought not to be held responsible for that portion of the difficulty that has arisen. Unless the Senator from Vermont has some special reason for believing that obstacles will be interposed to the passage of this bill by parties interested, I wish he would permit it to pass.

Mr. CONKLING. If I am not out of order I should like to say a word about this matter. Unwisely probably, when the bill to which this is an amendment was before the Senate, I said that I would not vote at any time for the extension of the period within which the contractors might do their work. That remark, perhaps not a very provident one, arose in this way: I had ascertained the number of square yards of pavement requisite for the Avenue. It was 90,000. A thousand yards a day, was the statement of the contractors of the amount of pavement which could be laid in workmanlike and proper manner. Thus ninety days were necessary to put down the pavement. The Senate, possibly upon my suggestion, (I will not say that, although I think so, at any rate on a suggestion which I heartily concurred in, as did a majority of the Senate,) added a considerable number of days; perhaps the Senator from Kansas will remember how many; I think fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five days.

Mr. DORSEY. Forty-five.

Mr. CONKLING. Forty-five, my friend behind me says, so as to make it one hundred and thirty-five days, excluding Sundays, to allow for inclement weather, not likely to occur at the season of the year to be covered by this period, and still to leave a margin of time within which the contractors might do this work. I am told,—the committee know about it, I presume,—that the contractors, or those who supervised them, or both, lay upon their oars for a considerable time, and day after day and week after week of pleasant weather, at the time of year that everybody knows is applicable to such work, elapsed. Then, and I may add then, as usual in the doing of such work in this city, when a day had arrived near enough to the coming of frost to make it pretty certain that frost would intercept the work, it began; and now it is as every Senator who has passed down the Avenue has seen it. The Senator from Vermont speaks of property-holders on the south side of the Avenue. I suggest to him that he does not describe the aggravation of their case. They are property-holders, but they are tradesmen.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should have said "the occupiers." I did not mean the mere owners of the property, but the people who do business there.

Mr. CONKLING. Of course, I know my friend's meaning; but I remind him that it is worse than the ordinary case of property-holders who want to go and come to and from their residences. These men are tradesmen, tenants and owners together, carrying on trade upon the south side of Pennsylvania avenue, retail trade, the life of which consists in the freedom with which everybody can drive to their doors and walk to their doors, and bring in and send out packages of goods. Here all this winter these tradesmen have been practically shut out, as the Senator from Kansas said embargoed, and their traffic too, because the street has been torn up in front of where they are. Between the trams which lie in the middle of the street and the curb on their side barrels of asphalt or coal tar, or whatever they may be, have been piled, and in many places it has been impossible to traverse the street and impossible cross-wise to go to the doors of these shops.

Now, I think that is a pretty serious matter, Mr. President. I do not know who is to blame for it. I do not say that anybody is to blame; but it is a very unfortunate casualty, to say the least, that a pavement cannot be laid on Pennsylvania avenue without entailing such disadvantages upon the people. I should like to hear why it is that these contractors did not proceed to execute their thousand yards a day, which was their own statement, during the pleasant and tranquil season of the year, and why it is that they deferred the beginning until the end was overtaken by weather which prevents them going on. Then I should also like to hear why it is that the 1st of June, which I believe is fixed by the bill, is deemed a day necessary. Early in March there ceases to be winter here. Soon after, the weather becomes sufficiently settled for their purpose. There are to be March, April, May, three months, ninety days, of probably settled weather, after more than half the work has been done, the whole of which originally was compassable by ninety days, and for which one hundred and thirty-five days were given in the original act.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

Mr. THURMAN. Are resolutions in order?

Mr. INGALLS. I was asking the passage of a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asked the present consideration of the bill. The Senator from Vermont objected. Does the Senator from Vermont insist on his objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do, until I take it back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to say a single word in relation to the subject, if it has not already passed out of reach?

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to give notice, if the Senator will excuse me a moment, that the bill having gone over under the objection of the Senator from Vermont, I will on Monday morning during the morning hour, if I can obtain the floor, ask the attention of the Senate to House bill No. 4281.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that I have not kept myself posted up in relation to all the complications about this new pavement. I have been told that the reason of the first delay was because of the contractors not being able to get the proper asphalt, and that they had to send and order it from abroad before it could be obtained. That delayed them for some considerable time; and then in the month of November there was not more than half of the time when there was weather which enabled them to go on with their work.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1131) to authorize the removal of obstructions in the channel of the Missouri River and to repair and protect levees at Omaha, Plattsmouth, and Brownville, Nebraska, and Sioux City and Council Bluffs, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHAFFEE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1132) to abolish the use of stoves in passenger railroad cars; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1133) to correct an appointment in the Pay Department of the Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1134) to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the Government bonds advanced to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company and to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, under and in pursuance of the act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and the acts amending the same or supplemental thereto, and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said lands; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) to amend the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms, approved July 3, 1876; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask for the present consideration of this joint resolution, as it is important to the frontier States and Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution, approved July 3, 1876, authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms to the Territories and the States bordering thereon be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "each of said Territories" the words "and ammunition for the same not to exceed fifty ball-cartridges for each man."

Mr. MAXEY. I will state that a joint resolution was passed and approved on the 3d of July last authorizing the issuance of certain arms which had gone out of use in the United States Army to the Territories and States liable and subject to Indian raids. In pursuance of that joint resolution the Secretary of War has on the request of the governor issued that class of arms to the State of Texas. One thousand have been issued. The fixed ammunition that goes along with those guns, by an oversight in the joint resolution, was not authorized to be issued. The only purpose of the joint resolution which I now introduce is to authorize the issuance of the fixed ammunition which belongs to those guns. I will state that I ask for its consideration now because it is a matter of immediate necessity. In my own State within the last few days, at the close of December, we had an Indian raid in one of the counties, the county of Kerr, by thirteen Indians, and a large amount of stock was driven off and two citizens killed. We depend upon the rangers and frontiersmen to whom these guns have been distributed for the protection of that country, and it is only in consequence of the necessity of this ammunition to enable them to use those guns that I have introduced the joint resolution. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is it reported from a committee?

Mr. MAXEY. No, sir. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that I submitted this question to the Chief of Ordnance, calling his attention to the oversight in the joint resolution of July last. The resolution which I introduce, which is merely amendatory, in order to let the ammunition go with the guns, meets with his approval, and at my request he prepared such an amendment as would meet the approbation of the Ordnance Department. It is a trifling matter, but it is important to the Territories and States liable to Indian raids. I gave, as the reason for immediate action, that we have already had, on the 27th of December, a raid in which property was stolen and life destroyed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I doubt not that this matter is all right, and I especially have no doubt of the truth of the statement made by the Senator from Texas; but I think, as the bill has just been introduced now and has never been in the hands of a committee and never has been printed, it would be better, under the rules, that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. A day or two cannot make any great difference.

Mr. MAXEY. The whole object of the joint resolution is simply to let the ammunition go with the guns that were distributed by the Government to the frontier States and Territories.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has the Senator any objection that the resolution should go to the committee? It will only delay the matter a day or two.

Mr. MAXEY. My only objection is that the chairman of that committee is absent. As we all know, all the committees are scattered now; and it is exceedingly difficult to get a committee together. It is a short session, and this is a Senate joint resolution, and therefore it has to go from here to the House. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object to its present consideration.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think it had better go over, or if the Senator prefers let it go to the committee, and if the chairman is absent the next member, of course, is acting chairman, and the joint resolution can be reported back in a short time.

Mr. MAXEY. Of course if the Senator objects I have nothing further to say. I asked the courtesy of the Senate for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And printed.

REPUBLICATION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. THURMAN. I submit the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Revision of the Laws are hereby instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing for the publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes, as corrected by subsequent acts of Congress, and to include in the same the other acts enacted since December 1, 1873; and also the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution of the United States with the amendments; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

It is a mere resolution of inquiry.

Mr. CONKLING. And I think you might say something about an index.

Mr. THURMAN. It would necessarily require a new index, and that we can provide for.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

WILLIAM H. WARD.

Mr. JOHNSTON. When the chairman of the Committee on Patents [Mr. WADLEIGH] left here to attend a committee in the South, he requested me to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 419) for the relief of William H. Ward. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read, if there is one, before we take up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, July 21, 1876:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of William H. Ward, for the extension of his bullet and shell molding machine patents, as also for compensation for the use of the same by the Government of the United States during the life-time of said patents, make the following report:

Letters-patent were granted to the said William H. Ward, of Auburn, New York, on the 10th day of November, A. D. 1857, for the term of fourteen years, for an "improved bullet-making machine;" and on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1857, a patent was granted to the said Ward for a "machine for molding shells," for a like term of fourteen years, both of which inventions are "original" or "first patents" of their respective classes or kinds, and are known by the term of "foundation patents," which, as a rule, require a great deal of mental consideration to perfect them, as ideas that must be followed up with costly experiments, requiring both time and money, as is instanced in almost every new invention wherein capital and labor are taxed to their utmost in perfecting some new labor-saving device.

These inventions of Mr. Ward seem to your committee to embrace all the essentials of perfection of their kind, and they have proved to be economical of material and a great saving of labor in the production of bullets from cold lead and bomb shells from molten iron, respectively, as is shown in evidence and from copies of the special reports, &c. From the copies of official reports it appears that Mr. Ward commenced shell-experiments as early as 1841, with good results, and from that time forward he seems to have been more or less engaged until he had expended on his bullet-machine invention upward of forty-nine thousand dollars ($49,700) and on the shell-molding-machine invention upward of twenty thousand dollars, ($20,712.) making for the two, counting interest, the sum of $70,000 up to the 10th day of February, 1874.

And it further appears in evidence that these patented inventions and machines of Mr. Ward have been made use of by the Government from the time of their issue and all through the life-time of the said patents in the manufacture of leaden bullets and iron shell without any compensation to Mr. Ward, as is certified to by the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Congressman MACDOUGALL, a copy of which is hereto added, and of the bullet-machine by testimony of Hon. Thomas Hood, a copy of which is also added, both of which are supported by the testimony of the patentee, who seems to have been diligent in trying to obtain some just consideration for his invention, as set forth in his petition and his letter to your committee, a copy of which letter is also added hereto.

It further appears that during the years from 1860 to 1866, inclusive, the Government, from necessity, were obliged to build machines for the manufacture of bullets without reference to patents generally, and in doing so it appears that the Chief of Ordnance (at the time) was fully aware of Mr. Ward's patent, as set forth in the said testimony of Mr. Hood, when he, as Chief of Ordnance, gave authority for the construction of bullet-machines; and it further appears in evidence that he in no instance paid or caused to be paid to William H. Ward any consideration whatever, but referred him to Congress.

It is further manifest and known to your committee that William H. Ward made application for the extension of his patents aforesaid, and such extensions were passed through the House of Representatives by an almost unanimous vote, during the first session of the Forty-third Congress, and in their regular order came to your committee, together with the petition for compensation for use of same, and that your committee, considering that the granting of the said extension would again render the Government liable to William H. Ward, the said patentee, for such extended term of said patents, denied the granting of the said extensions, with the understanding that the matter be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication on the merits of the inventions and claims arising therefrom, and in accordance with such consideration your committee recommend the accompanying bill.

WASHINGTON ARSENAL,
October 29, 1841.

SIR: I respectfully report that three shells, as directed in the letter from the Ordnance Office of October 27 instant, were prepared, and, after being charged by Mr. Ward with the composition of his invention, were tested, with the following results.* These trials, limited as they are, afford evidence that the invention merits consideration, and it would be desirable that others be made more fully to test it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN SYMINGTON,
Captain of Ordnance.

Captain A. MORDECAI,
Ordnance Office.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WASHINGTON NAVY-YARD,
November 12, 1858.

SIR: I respectfully state that in obedience to your order I have continued the experiments with Mr. Ward's machine for making shells, casting usually one per day. On the 10th instant Mr. Ward reported twenty-five flasks ready for use; they were placed in the hands of the molder, who prepared sixteen molds with them during the forenoon. In the same time four men made by the mode at present in use forty-four. It is but justice to Mr. Ward to add that these men worked with unusual zeal and rapidity, as the foreman of the factory reported to me, while the operator with the other machine seems to have displayed less than the usual industry, for I have seen Mr. Ward prepare a mold, adjust a core, &c., in six minutes, and know that it has also been done by one of our own workmen.

The shells produced by the machine are in no respect inferior to those hitherto cast in the foundery.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. K. MURRAY,
Executive Officer Ordnance Department in the Yard.

Capt. D. N. INGRAHAM,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 14, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to your letter of the 5th instant, in reference to the machine furnished by Mr. W. H. Ward, of Auburn, New York, that the machine was furnished to the Department, and used for the service of the Government; that it is of present use and value to the service, and that no payment has been made to Mr. Ward for the same.

Very respectfully,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. C. D. MACDOUGALL,
House of Representatives.

In the matter of the bill for the relief of William H. Ward, being Senate bill 419, introduced by Mr. WADLEIGH, February 9, 1876, and before the Committee on Patents, United States Senate.

Thomas Hood, of the city of Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, on oath says: "That as attorney for William H. Ward, at different times during the years 1871 and 1872, and possibly as late as 1873, affiant had repeated interviews with the late Brigadier-General Dyer, then Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, in relation to the claim of William H. Ward for the use of his patented bullet-machine by the United States. At these interviews, when speaking of the subject of this claim, Mr. Dyer would say something like this: 'That he had no doubt the Government ought to pay something to Mr. Ward on account of his claim, but that he would have to go to Congress for it; that he had no doubt the machinery used by the Government in the manufacture of bullets was adopted from Ward's machine, or from Ward's invention; or that the Government had taken all that was of value in Ward's machine, and utilized it,' or words equivalent to the foregoing. As already stated, I had repeated conversations with Mr. Dyer on the subject of this claim, and I give the above as the substance of what he would say tending to recognize the claim of Mr. Ward, which I state according to my best recollection.

"THOMAS HOOD."

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of March, 1876.

R. J. MEIGS,
Clerk Supreme Court District of Columbia,
By L. C. WILLIAMS,
Assistant Clerk.

To the honorable Committee on Patents, United States Senate:

The pending, or third petition to Congress, was presented on the 19th day of December, 1873, to both Houses of Congress, and on the 21st of January following the bullet-machine case was submitted to the War Department for examination and report, by the House Military Committee, and on the 10th of February, 1874, the War Department returned said petition with their report thereto, which was printed, and referred to said committee. And as the result of such reference the said Military Committee, as a body, prepared a bill (as is now before your committee) which was placed on the Private Calendar of the House, but never reached during the session. On the 8th of April, 1874, the House of Representatives unanimously passed the bullet-machine extension case, which came before your committee the following 16th, and was taken charge of by the then acting chairman, Mr. WADLEIGH, who at the time had (as a member of the Senate Military Committee) the Senate's bullet-machine petition. Mr. WADLEIGH desired to know if I would accept of a bill granting a specified sum for the claim, at the same time naming an amount; my reply then was that no such consideration could be carried through Congress, for already I had unsuccessfully tried $30,000 for the shell-molding machine claim; and as an alternate the Naval Committee of the House, as a body, advised me to combine the bullet and shell machine claims in one bill, with authority to go before the Court of Claims. (See Debates House of Representatives, as per RECORD of Sunday, May 3, 1874.) Next in order was the passing of the shell-molding machine extension case, which took place on the 2d day of May, 1874; and on the 7th was before the Senate Committee on Patents, and was taken charge of by Mr. WADLEIGH, making three bills of mine in his charge, two of which had already passed the House, and the other on the Private Calendar.

At the second session all my energies were with the Senate Committee on Patents, as that committee had the bills, and near the close thereof the present chairman informed me that the committee had concluded to send my claims to the Court of Claims and drop the extension cases, and not to make the Government a second time liable.

In January of the current year your petitioner again presented himself to your committee and learned from the chairman thereof that the bill for the Court of Claims would go forward; and on the 9th day of February following Mr. WADLEIGH did offer the bill now before your committee, which seems to embrace all that is necessary and essential to send these claims to the Court of Claims for adjudication on their respective merits.

All of which is most respectfully submitted by your humble servant and petitioner,

W. H. WARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. If a single objection will put it over, I object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question is on the motion to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the hands of the Senate. A majority can control it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Chair called for objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is on the Calendar. It will be read, the reading being called for by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment reported by the committee, which will also be read.

* The results, being lengthy, are omitted.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee report an amendment to the bill by adding to it the following:

With full power to send for persons, books, and papers, &c., having any reference thereto, so as to enable the court to adjudicate said claims on their respective merits, without reference to the statutes of limitations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we had better wait until the chairman of the committee comes back. We have no official report from the Navy Department about this bill, and I wish somebody would offer a resolution that we may. There may be merit in it, but it is rather unfortunate to take up bills of this character without an official report on the subject from the Department that had to do with the supposed claim. There is here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy written at some time stating one very narrow fact, that a particular machine was used. That is a mere bubble in this bill. The real thing is the infringement, as it is called, and the use of the patent during the great number of years that are said to have elapsed since this gentleman began. I should hope the Senator from Virginia would not insist on its being taken up to-day, but let us have a resolution directing the proper Executive Department to report all the facts with their judgment upon them as to the state of this claim and what it was.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It seemed to me that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy was sufficient; but, of course, I do not desire to have the case taken up without a full knowledge of its merits on the part of the Senate. I will therefore prepare a resolution, and ask that it be adopted by the Senate, calling for information from the Department on this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the correct thing.

Mr. JOHNSTON. When that information comes in, if the chairman of the committee be not here, I will ask the Senate to take up the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator to say he will prepare a resolution calling on the Navy Department for information.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be the Ordnance Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whatever the proper Department may be.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will prepare a resolution and offer it for adoption. I withdraw the motion to take up the bill at present.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which declares that nothing in the act of incorporation shall prevent the owner or owners of any lot or lots therein from making such improvements or decorations thereon without let or hinderance as may not be inconsistent with the objects and purposes of the cemetery.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer as a substitute for the bill an amendment of which I gave notice at the last session at the time it was reported. I will state in offering it that while it has been very carefully prepared and I have read it, I would have no objection at all to having the matter referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia if they desire it.

Mr. INGALLS. In regard to a reference of this subject to the Committee on the District of Columbia, I have this to say: that it is a local question that has excited a great deal of feeling between the incorporators or owners of this cemetery and the lot-holders and other persons having interments in it. The committee had the subject under consideration at the last session of Congress and differed radically as to the method that should be pursued, and I conclude therefore that a further reference would be unadvisable and unnecessary. I hope the Senate will act upon it without any further reference to the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that there will be any objection to the amendment that I offer. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the above-entitled act of incorporation be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, to wit:

First. The name and title of said corporation shall be The Glenwood Cemetery, and in that corporate name it shall hereafter sue and be sued as a body politic and corporate, and exercise all the corporate authority and powers conferred upon it, and be subject to all the liabilities and duties imposed under the original act of incorporation aforesaid.

Second. That the affairs, business, and property of the said corporation shall be under the direction, control, and management of a board of five trustees, any three of whom shall constitute a quorum, with full authority to act, which board of trustees shall be elected annually, three by the proprietors of lots in said cemetery and two by the original proprietors; and the trustees shall select and appoint, from their own board, a president, secretary, and treasurer, and also, from their own board or otherwise, a superintendent, to have the immediate custody, supervision, and management of the cemetery, under the rules and regulations of the board. The trustees shall have authority to fill temporary vacancies occurring in their board, and shall hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified: Provided, however, That the original proprietors shall have no representation in said board of trustees until a conveyance shall have been made to the cemetery corporation of the ninety acres of ground now dedicated for the purpose of burial.

Third. The annual meeting of the proprietors of lots shall be held on the first Monday of June of every year, the place and hour of assembling to be specified in a public notice previously given by the trustees. The president of the board of trustees shall preside and the secretary act at such meeting; but, in the absence of either, his place shall be filled by a vote of the meeting. At such meeting there shall be at least twenty lot-proprietors to constitute a quorum to transact business, either in person or by proxy, although a less number may adjourn the meeting from day to day until a quorum be present. In the election of the trustees at such meeting, each lot proprietor shall be entitled to one vote for each lot owned by him in good faith, upon which a burial has been made. The two trustees of the board which are to be elected by the original proprietors shall be elected in such manner as said original proprietors shall determine.

Fourth. The affairs of the cemetery shall be so conducted under the authority of the board of trustees as to secure the equitable rights of each and every person having in any way any vested interest in the said cemetery; and the cemetery shall be amenable and subject to the jurisdiction of the equity courts of the District of Columbia for any disregard of the rights or interests of any person whatsoever. And any person who may refuse peaceable possession of said grounds to said trustees, or obstruct or disturb such possession in said trustees for said purposes of burial, shall forfeit and pay, as a penalty therefor, the sum of $100 for each and every day of such refusal or disturbance, to be collected in an action of debt, in the name of the cemetery corporation; and the sum that may be recovered shall be appropriated for the improvement of the cemetery grounds.

Fifth. That the words "the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery," where they occur in the original act of incorporation hereby amended, shall be interpreted and construed to mean the proprietors of lots in said cemetery, and which is hereby now declared by this amendment to be the true intent and meaning of said words.

Sixth. That from the receipts from the sale of lots hereafter sold, of the ground now dedicated for burial purposes, there shall be paid, on the first Monday in June in each year, by the board of trustees, to the original proprietors, one-fourth of the gross receipts arising from such sales, the remainder to be devoted to the improvement and maintenance of the cemetery.

Seventh. That within ten days after the approval of this act, any five proprietors of lots in said cemetery may call a meeting by giving two days' notice thereof in any newspaper published in the city of Washington, at which meeting the said proprietors shall proceed, as provided in sections 2 and 3 of this act, to elect a board of trustees, who shall hold office until their successors are duly elected and qualified under the annual election to be held on the first Monday in June following.

Mr. SHERMAN. In 1854 Congress incorporated this cemetery company, (Statutes at Large, volume 10, pages 789 and 790.)

By the first section of the charter twelve persons were named as corporators, the first eight of whom were residents of the District of Columbia and the last four residents of New York City or that vicinity, to wit: Joseph B. Close, William Phelps, William S. Humphreys, and Randolph S. Evans. The sixth section provided "That until an election shall be held under the provisions of this act, the four last-named persons in section 1 shall be the managers of said corporation," and the second section provided "That the affairs of the said corporation shall be conducted by a president and three managers, who shall be elected annually by a majority of the votes of the proprietors; the president and managers to fill all vacancies in their own body," &c.

It seems that under this act of incorporation a very valuable piece of ground was purchased called Glenwood Cemetery and lots were sold under the law until finally some three hundred or four hundred lots have been sold and many of the leading citizens of the city of Washington have purchased, as they supposed, lots in a cemetery, which would give them the right to participate in the management and improvement of the cemetery. A great many dead have been buried, and there are a great many very valuable and expensive monuments erected over the graves. It turned out finally that the four gentlemen who, by the peculiar phraseology of this law, claimed that they alone were the proprietors undertook to manage it entirely themselves; not only absolutely control the mangement of it, but have imposed unreasonable charges upon the proprietors of lots for improvements made there, and allow no improvements to be made without their consent and without contributing more or less to what are called the proprietors of the land. In other words, they claim to have a monopoly, a perpetual monopoly, without end, vested in four nonresidents of the District of Columbia, who, without any control or power over them, have since that time managed this cemetery. Recently it created so much feeling and trouble, so much excitement, that large public meetings were held a year ago in regard to this matter, and the proprietors of the lots joined together in a public memorial to Congress asking relief. All the relief that this amendment gives them is to authorize the proprietors of lots, those who have purchased lots in the cemetery, to participate in the government of the cemetery, so that they may have some part in the management of it and in directing the expenditure of money upon it.

It seems that the proprietors of this land have endeavored to turn it into a speculation. Although they held the property under this corporate act, they have been re-imbursed several times the cost of the land; they claim it to be exempt from taxes on the ground that it is a public burial ground. They manage it as a monopoly without any authority whatever in any one to interfere with them, and they have so conducted the matter as to create a great and bitter public feeling, and gentlemen of the highest standing in this city have come to me complaining about it over and over again. I may say that I myself some years ago, having occasion to buy a cemetery lot, being attracted by the beauty of the position, selected this as the place and purchased a lot for cemetery purposes, supposing that it was an ordinary cemetery association, and I was as much surprised as the rest of the proprietors no doubt were to ascertain that we had no rights whatever in the management of its affairs; that our money went to swell the already swollen profits of a foreign corporation; a corporation that would not, according to their construction of the law, be represented by any one here, and that was used simply for the purpose of making money. I believe it is conceded on all hands that these proprietors of the land who now claim that they are a perpetual corporation have been re-imbursed the entire outlay they have made several times. At any rate that is the allegation.

I have here the proceedings of a public meeting held in this city, setting out, in temperate, well-considered language, the complaints made by them, signed by S. T. G. Morsell, president of the lot-proprietors' meeting, William Lord, secretary, and resolutions reported by a committee consisting of T. W. Bartley, W. H. Morrison, William Lord, Dr. Daniel McFarland, and Wilson E. Brown. It sets out the whole management of this cemetery corporation and the complaints which the lot-holders make. It seems to me that the amended charter which is now before you carefully guards the property-rights of all persons interested, and it provides for a mode of trying before the courts the legal right of these original incorporators by providing them a remedy. It gives to them a portion of the management and control of the cemetery. It is just and fair in all its details. If it be desired, I can have this paper read, which contains all the facts, I believe, that are material to the matter.

I suppose the committee had some difficulty about a question of law involved; but that is fully provided for by the amendment that is now proposed by me on behalf of the lot-proprietors, which gives to the alleged corporators fair rights in the management of the cemetery, and provides for a remedy for them in case they think their rights are invaded, and an appeal can be taken by either or a decision may be procured from the courts by either side. I hope therefore the amendment will be adopted and the bill passed. It is a House bill, and was pretty well considered during the last session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, but there is no special order and no unfinished business. The Chair will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] gave notice of his intention to submit some remarks to-day.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask permission to introduce the resolution I referred to some time ago.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to ask the Senator from California if he desires to proceed immediately or whether he would not be willing to allow this bill to be further considered?

Mr. BOOTH. I have no objection to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I yield then for the purpose of the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Virginia.

W. H. WARD.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Ordnance Department be directed to furnish the Senate with all the facts and documents, if any, in possession of the Department touching the use by the Government of a patented machine or machines of W. H. Ward, for making bullets and molding shells.

Mr. WEST. I suggest to the Senator that that be a requirement on the Secretary of War. We do not deal with the Ordnance Department directly.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Let that change be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill No. 3741 is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] has stated to me that he would like to proceed at this time. I will yield the floor for that purpose, with the understanding that if no Senator objects I may resume the floor at the conclusion of his remarks in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to temporarily laying aside this bill for the purpose stated? The Chair hears none.

MODE OF COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, I gave notice on Monday that I would speak to-day on the resolution that I had the honor to introduce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be considered as before the Senate and will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States whose terms are to begin on the 4th of March, 1877, the following rules be observed:

One. The President of the Senate pro tempore shall report the certificate of each State before handing it to the tellers. It shall then be the right of any Senator and of any member of the House of Representatives to object to the counting of the votes of said State; which objection shall be reduced to writing. Upon objection being made, the President of the Senate pro tempore shall rule whether or not the votes of said State shall be counted, and for whom. Any Senator or member of the House of Representatives may appeal from said ruling; which appeal shall be reduced to writing. Upon appeal being taken, the two Houses shall immediately separate, and each shall convene in its own Chamber without delay.

Immediately on the convening of each House its presiding officer shall submit the following propositions, in the order herein named, which shall be decided without debate:

1. Shall the ruling of the President of the Senate pro tempore upon the counting of the vote of the State of —— be affirmed?

2. How many votes of the State of —— shall be counted?

3. For whom shall the votes of the State of —— be counted?

Upon each proposition each Senator and each member of the House of Representatives shall announce his vote viva voce, and it shall be entered upon the Journal.

The Journal of each House of the proceedings of that meeting shall then be read and approved, and no other business shall be in order.

The two Houses shall then assemble in the Chamber of —— for the purpose of continuing the count.

Two. When the President of the Senate pro tempore shall have received two or more packages purporting to contain the certificate of the votes of the same State, he shall open and report all of said purported certificates, and then rule for whom the votes of said State shall be counted. Any Senator or member of the House of Representatives may appeal from said ruling; which appeal shall be reduced to writing. Upon appeal being taken, the two Houses shall separate, convene in their respective Chambers, and the same proceedings shall be had as prescribed as in Rule 1.

Three. A complete record of the proceedings when the two Houses are assembled together, and of the proceedings of each House, together with all the certificates and purported certificates of the votes to the counting of which objection has been made, shall be submitted to the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States for their decision.

The Senate and House of Representatives may each appoint a committee of three to present the cases to the justices, subject to such rules as the justices may prescribe. If the justices deem it essential to a final determination, they may, in their discretion, receive as evidence the official acts and proceedings of any State officer or board of State officers and the reports of any committee appointed by either House of Congress.

The Chief Justice shall transmit to the President of the Senate the decision of the majority of the justices upon each case of contested votes, when all the cases have been decided, whereupon the two Houses shall assemble in the Chamber of ——, and the contested votes shall be counted in accordance with such decision.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, one of the difficulties of the present complication in regard to counting the electoral vote arises from the fact that the plan for the election of a President was devised to meet a condition of society essentially different from ours. The authors of our Constitution designed in part to fetter and restrain the democratic spirit and tendencies of this nation. They deemed it unwise to trust the people with the immediate choice of their Chief Executive. The people of each State were to choose certain eminent citizens who were to make the selection for them, and even without their knowledge.

One of the most distinguished authors of the Constitution said that it was contrary to the spirit of that instrument for an elector to divulge his vote before the certificates were opened; the people were to be in ignorance as to who their President should be until the official announcement; and that the reason why upon a failure of choice by the electoral votes the House of Representatives was required to elect immediately was to prevent the influence of foreign powers from controlling the choice and reducing our Government to practical vassalage! Now we should as much expect the choice of a President to be controlled by the conjunction of the planets, the influence of the stars, or phases of the moon, as by foreign nations; and so far from the electors making a President have we drifted that at the late election as little attention was paid to the constitutional provision concerning their eligibility as to a text of the Koran or a chapter of the Talmud. The existence of such a provision to the mass of voters was a discovery or a revelation after it had been violated. Spirit is stronger than letter. Life finds its own channel—political growth its own form.

The problem before us to-day, and which engages the anxious attention of us all, is not to make a President, but to determine who has been made President under the forms of a law whose spirit is obsolete in a method which will satisfy the moral sense and command the moral support of the American people.

The emergency is a grave one. I do not think its dangers have been exaggerated. The rock is in the channel; if we drift we shall strike it. If passion steer, we shall run upon it. To be clear in his great office the President of the United States must hold by an undoubted title. Possession will not sanctify it; arms cannot sustain it; submission cannot justify it.

We may endeavor to reason ourselves into the philosophy of regarding the Presidency as a place, in the language of the Senator from Vermont, to sign appropriation bills and commissions for postmasters, but it still remains a glittering prize of ambition, imperial in power and patronage, royal in opportunity for good and evil; kingly in everything save crown and title. Lawfully held and worthily filled it is the highest political position on earth. But the magnitude of the office as a personal possession is dwarfed into insignificance when compared to its importance to the country.

Every four years the American people meet in committee of the whole on the state of the nation and their report is rendered in the choice of a Chief Magistrate. In making that choice every political question that touches the honor, progress, and well-being of the country is considered. Policies, laws, institutions, character, are assailed and defended; the past is reviewed, the future predicted; nothing is too sacred to be questioned; patriotism and prejudice, reason, imagination, and passion, are appealed to until the whole public mind is agitated and inflamed with a single thought and desire.

In other republics in history this agitation has shaken the very foundations of social order, and to avert that danger they have established or submitted to dynasties; preferring the calm of despotism to the stormy sea of liberty. In existing republics the choice of a chief executive officer is a question of force, an occasion of revolution and a cause of anarchy. In our own generation we have seen two great historical forces, moral and political, come in conflict around the election of our President and culminate in the bloodiest civil war of modern times.

The great difficulty we confront to-day is one of the results of that war. It is the groundswell of the ocean not less perilous to the ship of state than the storm itself.

I know the people as a body want peace. So they did sixteen years ago. Who shall say that the forces and antagonism may not be evoked by a contested election which were by a contest for an election?

Sir, we must provide in advance the method of settling that contest, or we shall be at the mercy of chance and accident when the imprisoned winds of passion are loosed on the sea of public opinion. What chance and accident may bring, no one can predict. Certainly a scene of confusion and turbulence which would convert a solemn occasion to one of unseemly violence, and degrade us in the eyes of the civilized world; certainly in a loss of our self-respect, and of the confidence of the world in American statesmanship; certainly in a weakening of the respect for the constituted authorities which is their moral support, and a growing distrust of that form of government which has cost so much; at best the inauguration of a President to whom a large portion of his fellow citizens would render not homage, respect, willing obedience, but contumely, reproach, and sullen discontent; in an administration embarrassed, hampered, and fettered at every step—incapable at home, insignificant abroad; possibly a divided government with contending chiefs and factions, anarchy, and war. Whoever leaves out of calculation the emotions, prejudices, and passions of human nature omits the great factors from the problem of life.

I have no words of condemnation strong enough for the men who in this time of supreme difficulty appeal to passion, foment disorder, and threaten violence.

Every consideration of patriotism and wisdom requires calm deliberation and prudent forbearance. The responsibility of a solution is upon the American Congress. The patriotism, love of order, respect for law of the people can find expression in memorial and petition, through public meetings, and the public press; it can only find organized form and action here. Time is precious. Every hour brings us nearer the hour when agreement will be difficult or impossible, or action too late. We shall take no step forward by charges and counter-charges of violence and fraud. It is but too evident that our Centennial has not brought the millennium.

We shall reach no conclusion by arguing with each other disputed propositions of law and fact. We shall end as we begin, in disagreement. Each may be strengthened in conviction, until pride of opinion forbids concession or retreat and makes arbitrament impossible.

It is clear as daylight to the eye that no plan can be now or at any time agreed upon which will produce a fore-known result. You and I may have convictions as to the law of the case strong as proof of Holy Writ. Senators on the other side are as strongly intrenched in their opinion as we in ours. Neither can enforce his opinions save by the employment of force or in that sullen acquiesence in the presence of force and for the sake of peace which is scarcely better than resistance. It is as morally certain now as it will be certain in fact then that on the 14th of February the two Houses of Congress will differ as to the legal result of that day's proceeding. It will be the old problem of an irresistible force and impenetrable object, but with the added awful interest, the fate of this Government between.

With the certainty of this disagreement, the eyes of the people have instinctively turned to that august tribunal established to decide the highest questions of law which can arise in this Government.

Through that tribunal I believe a settlement can be devised which will commend itself to the sense of justice and propriety of the country and reconcile the losing party, whichever that may be, to defeat.

In the resolution I have presented for the consideration of the Senate I have endeavored to devise a method of making a record which will bring the legal questions involved before the justices of the Supreme Court for their arbitrament.

There are three theories in respect to power and jurisdiction in this question. Without some tribunal to decide where the power and jurisdiction are "the rest is chaos."

First. There is the theory that the President of the Senate has the absolute right conferred by the Constitution to determine the validity of the votes of each State.

Secondly. That the votes of no State can be counted without the consent of both Houses of Congress.

Thirdly. That the votes of no State can be rejected without affirmative action of both Houses.

The recent suggestion that the House of Representatives has the sole authority to decide upon the votes for President, and can confer upon itself the opportunity to elect, would be the most original discovery if it were not the most unique invention in American politics and the concession that the Senate has a similar authority and prerogative as to the Vice-President is an insignificant tender to a leviathan monster.

The second and third theories would still leave undetermined the votes of States which have sent double returns and how many votes a State is entitled to that has selected inelegible electors if the Houses shall differ.

The resolution contemplates that all these questions shall appear of record and authorizes the tribunal appointed, if it is deemed essential to the final determination of either, to take cognizance of all the facts of which Congress has official knowledge.

It may be suggested that the justices of the Supreme Court would not exercise the power conferred.

Sir, if in this exigency the Congress of the United States believes it to be necessary, they cannot refuse. Honor, patriotism, and gratitude alike forbid.

I do not intend to discuss the legal questions involved in this controversy further than is necessary to a brief expression of my own opinion.

The calcium light of reason and investigation has been thrown upon the clause of the Constitution in relation to counting the electoral votes to ascertain in whom the authority is vested to determine the validity of the votes, and nothing has been discovered because nothing is there. When the authors of the Constitution said "the votes shall then be counted" they meant simply the act of enumeration. There was nothing judicial about it. It was rather clerical than ministerial. It was a question of addition, which an intelligent page could perform as well as Euclid or Sir Isaac Newton, as well as Mansfield or Marshall. The decision as to the validity of votes and counting them are acts as distinct in fact and different in nature as the judgment of a court and the mechanical impression of the seal. In that view the resolution of the Senate of the first Congress, that the President of the Senate should count the votes, has no significance in this question.

When the Constitution was framed the States were organized governments, fully equipped and in successful operation, while the government created was an experiment.

It was not anticipated that by any defect of State government or administration the question which we confront would ever arise, and it was not provided for. Perhaps if it had been anticipated it could not have been provided for in express terms without so exciting the jealousy of the States as to embarrass the adoption of the Constitution.

In the early debates in Congress we find many arguments against the authority of Congress to reject the votes of a State, none I think against the authority of the President of the Senate, for the proposition that he could was never entertained or conceived.

Regarding this question in the light of precedent and experience—recalling the facts of history—States in rebellion, their governments, the organized machinery of revolution, passing through all the phases of civil war and reconstruction—the proposition that the power to determine their relation to the General Government is vested absolutely in the President of the Senate, in the absence of express words, seems to me incredible. Does any one suppose if such a proposition had been submitted to the convention that framed the Constitution it would have been seriously considered?

In my judgment this power is neither ministerial nor judicial, but political, and in the absence of express provision is vested in the Congress of the United States. The resolution I have offered accordingly provides that the decision of the justices shall be adopted by Congress. Their decision could not be enforced by any sanction known to the law, but is an appeal to honor and good faith in the interest of peace and good government.

Upon the other questions I shall only express the opinion that the certificate of returns, when regular upon its face, makes a prima facie case, which it requires the affirmative action of both Houses to overrule, and that when there are double returns the prima facie case is with that of the government de facto. I hold these opinions with unfeigned respect for those who differ. Who shall decide between us? Who shall decide between the two Houses of Congress? There are but two appeals; the one is to law, the other to arms.

Mr. President, in the great problem of human existence the important part has been assigned to the American people to solve the question of a continental republic. That question was never more difficult than now. It demands a wisdom and forbearance which are above statecraft. Our wide country with its varying conditions of life could not fail to produce strongly distinct types of character and society. We have not the strong kinship of blood. We have the antagonism of races. We have four million inhabitants suddenly emancipated from generations of servitude and enfranchised with the rights and privileges of a citizenship which no other people have ever attained except by generations of experience. The passions of the country are scarcely cooled from the white-heat of civil war, and the revolutionary element which exists at all times in every civilized society was never so powerful in our country as to-day.

These are conditions which in any other age and country would inevitably result in separation or despotic form of government; but liberty and union are the immediate jewels of our soul, dearer than life.

The responsibilities of public position were never more solemn. Our personal interest, the interest of our personal advancement, Mr. President and Senators, in any public question is inconsiderable. Life owes us nothing. We have no account against fate. If the book were closed now the balance would be against us. We have each, in honors, consideration, all that makes life attractive, received more than we have given, more than we deserve. Behind us is a past sanctified by the dead who have died for our country and theirs. Before us is the illimitable possibility of national honor and usefulness. Around us are forty million people, bearing life's burdens, toiling, suffering, hoping, trusting. They ask peace. It is for us to give or to refuse.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes as in Committee of the Whole the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Kansas, being the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the bill now under consideration involves a very interesting legal proposition to which I desire particularly to call the attention of the lawyers of the Senate.

Twenty-three years ago a number of gentlemen, residents of the city of New York, purchased a tract of ground, embracing ninety acres, adjacent to the city of Washington. They obtained an act of incorporation from Congress authorizing them to lay off thirty acres of this property into cemetery lots and dispose of them for burial purposes. Out of the tract of ninety acres which they secured they platted and laid off and embellished and decorated the portion required by the act of incorporation, leaving the remainder unimproved to this day, it being still used for agricultural purposes; at least no part of it is used for the purpose contemplated by the act of incorporation. A large number of citizens of Washington have from time to time become proprietors of lots in the thirty acres that have since been known as Glenwood Cemetery, and which has been consecrated by the interment of their friends and relatives. More than two thousand interments have been made, I am informed, and sales are continually being made. A difficulty has arisen between the proprietors of these lots and the original owners of the land in relation to the disposition of the proceeds arising from the sales of the lots, and a further difficulty in regard to the regulations that have been imposed by the original corporators upon those who have subsequently purchased lots and become proprietors.

It is claimed on the one hand that the act of the original corporators, laying out the thirty acres for a cemetery, constituted what is called a dedication of the whole ninety acres to a public or charitable use; that to that extent these corporators became divested of their title to the property that they had bought and paid for, which thereby became vested either in the lot proprietors or in the public; and, acting upon that theory, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio has been offered.

It proposes that hereafter the management and control of affairs of the corporation shall be taken out of the hands of those who purchased the land and paid for it; and that the business shall be committed to a board of trustees, "five in number, three of whom shall constitute a quorum, three to be elected annually by the proprietors of the lots, and two by the original proprietors." The Senate will observe that a very large proportion of the original tract of land, the ninety acres, still remains unoccupied as a cemetery; it never has been platted as a burial ground; no lots, no walks, no avenues have been laid out upon it; also that a very large proportion of the thirty acres that were originally designated as a cemetery still remains unsold and unoccupied. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio proposes not only to deprive the original proprietors of their interest in the thirty acres that they laid out as a cemetery, but in the sixty acres that have remained as agricultural land, and to invest the whole management of this corporation in the hands of five trustees, a majority of whom shall be elected by those who own a minority of the property.

I am not prepared to say that this is not right, nor that there was not by the act of these corporators a dedication of this land to a public or charitable use; but, considering it as a legal proposition, I was unable to give it my assent.

It is not agreeable to raise any question of law about a purpose so pious and so sacred as that affecting the interment of the dead. But it has occurred to me, from an investigation of the authorities and of the questions that have arisen under similar acts of incorporation, that these parties in buying this land adjoining the town and laying out a portion of it as a cemetery occupied no different relation to the people of this community or to the proprietors of the lots in this cemetery than the owner of a suburban addition would do. In the one case, the lots are occupied by the living; in the other, they are occupied by the dead. And if the Senator from Ohio can show any reason or point to any authority or precedent that authorizes Congress to deprive these parties of the property they have bought and paid for and turn it over bodily into the hands of persons who do not even claim to own it, I shall be very glad to have him do so. It seems to me to be a matter purely of sentiment; that the effort is being made to induce Congress to take this property away from these persons who own it and turn it over to those who do not, because, as they urge, this is an attempt to make money out of the sale of land for a purpose so sacred as the burial of the dead.

It may be a very reprehensible and a very inappropriate thing for an association of gentlemen to endeavor to get gain out of a cemetery; but it is not very unusual or very uncommon; for I believe that there are few cemetery associations in the country that have not been established on the expectation of remuneration from the sales of lots. And when the Senator from Ohio attempts to stigmatize these proprietors because of the fact that they have endeavored to make profit out of the purchase of this land, he is going outside of the authority of law into the realm of sentiment, to say the least.

These trustees, the Senate will observe, are five in number, of whom the lot-proprietors are to have a majority. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio provides "that the original proprietors"—that is, the men who bought the ninety acres of ground—"shall have no representation in said board of trustees until a conveyance shall have been made to the cemetery corporation of the ninety acres of ground now dedicated for the purpose of burial." The fact is that there has been no dedication at all of any portion of this ground to any public use. The formalities necessary to "dedicate" a tract of land to a public use require a public record of its area, dimensions, boundaries, and subdivisions, or some public ceremonial or declaration that will be sufficient to advise the world of the fact. There never has been any dedication in any legal or formal sense of any portion of this land. In no event could it be claimed that there has been any dedication of the sixty acres that were not laid out into lots and paths and avenues.

The amendment proceeds further in the sixth clause to declare—

> That from the receipts from the sale of lots hereafter sold, of the ground now dedicated for burial purposes, there shall be paid, on the first Monday in June in each year, by the board of trustees, to the original proprietors, one fourth of the gross receipts arising from such sales, the remainder to be devoted to the improvement and maintenance of the cemetery.

There is an arbitrary division of the funds arising from the proceeds of the sales of this land, that is based on some principle with which I am not familiar, declaring what proportion of their own money the owners of the land shall receive and what proportion shall be devoted to the uses of persons who own none of it. I hope, therefore, that before this amendment is adopted by the Senate it will receive careful consideration and that the Senator from Ohio will be able to give some reason other than that which now appears why it should prevail.

I will say before closing that my theory about the subject has been that the rights both of the original proprietors and of the lot-owners are already defined under existing laws. They arise under the act of incorporation, which was passed in 1854; and if the parties are not able to determine what their respective rights are, the most appropriate action for Congress to take would be to repeal the act of incorporation and leave these parties to ascertain their rights in court.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas seems to forget that we are dealing with a creature of our own creation, a corporation which has no powers except such as are conferred upon it by law. We are not dealing with private people engaged in a speculation. We are not dealing with the subdividers of a town plat or an addition to a city. We are dealing with people whose sole rights depend upon the language of a law of our own and which is subject to repeal and modification. In the charter which incorporates this Glenwood Cemetery Company I find this provision:

> That it may be lawful for Congress hereafter to alter, amend, modify, or repeal the foregoing act.

And this bill now before us is simply an appeal to Congress to alter, amend, and modify this act so far as to give the proprietors of lots, the persons beneficially interested, for whose benefit this corporation was created, some share in its management. That is all there is in the proposition I offer. Every provision of the amendment is fair, honest, and right. These proprietors never paid one single cent on their stock; they never invested one single dollar of money. Upon the blind phraseology of an act of incorporation, passed probably without any close examination, the last four of twelve corporators were made a body-corporate with certain powers, but with a right reserved to Congress to change or modify those powers.

These four men then bought on credit some valuable property near the city of Washington, some sixty, eighty, or ninety acres of land. They paid for that out of the contribution of the proprietors. They sold the lots and the capital stock was paid by the proprietors of the lots and all the money put into this corporation was put in by the owners of the lots; and yet these four non-resident persons, who, under the peculiar phraseology of this act of Congress, called themselves the proprietors of the cemetery, who have invested no money, have governed without an election, from that day to this, this corporation, created by us and subject to our control. They have done it for the purpose of making money. That is a laudable purpose, and I have no objection to it; but these four men without investing money have received from the lot-proprietors twice the cost of the land, have paid themselves dividends on the stock they created without paying any money on it, and now seek to deny the power of Congress to modify or change this law.

Mr. President, there is no question of legal rights or vested rights involved in this matter; we are dealing with a corporation of our own creation, and if these people have any vested rights or any property-rights, the amendment itself provides for their protection. I find in section 4 of the amendment this provision:

> Fourth. The affairs of the cemetery shall be so conducted, under the authority of the board of trustees, as to secure the equitable rights of each and every person having in any way any vested interest in the said cemetery. And the cemetery shall be amenable and subject to the jurisdiction of the equity courts of the District of Columbia for any disregard of the rights or interests of any person whatsoever.

So that if these particular persons who claim to have property-rights have any vested rights, here is ample provision for their protection.

Now, Mr. President, the question is whether Congress, having improvidently created an artificial body called a corporation, under a false cloak, a false color, with apparently the humane and benevolent purpose of burying the dead, will allow the exercise of the corporate powers that have been complained of by these people to be continued to the injury of the lot-owners. That is what Congress is to determine, the express right to amend or modify this charter having been reserved.

Now, I will ask the Secretary to read the pamphlet to which I referred, signed by the lot-proprietors, for the purpose of putting upon the record this brief statement of the law and facts involved in this amendment; and if the few Senators who are here listen to that, they will get all the information I could communicate to them by speaking at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE CONDITION OF GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

A statement of the facts in relation to Glenwood Cemetery, constituting the grounds upon which the lot-proprietors have asked Congress for an amendment of the act incorporating the company.

The cemetery was incorporated by act of Congress, approved July 27, 1854. (See United States Statutes at Large, volume 10, pages 789 and 790.)

William S. Humphreys, of the city of New York, contracted for the purchase of the ground for the cemetery, and he, together with three other persons of New York City, or that vicinity, procured the act of incorporation to be passed without making known to Congress their places of residence.

The first section of the charter named twelve persons as the corporators, the first eight of whom were residents of the District of Columbia, and the last four residents of New York City, or that vicinity, to wit: Joseph B. Close, William Phelps, William S. Humphreys, and Randolph S Evans. And the sixth section provided "that until an election shall be held under the provisions of this act the four last-named persons in section 1 shall be the managers of said corporation." And the second section provided "that the affairs of the said corporation shall be conducted by a president and three managers, who shall be elected annually by a majority of the votes of the proprietors; the president and managers to fill all vacancies in their own body," &c.

These four New York men, having constituted themselves "proprietors," controlled the elections entirely, and elected one of their number president and the other three managers. And they sent here a citizen of New York, Mr. G. Glendenin, (a brother-in-law of said Humphreys,) who has from the beginning acted as superintendent of the cemetery. And so the matter has continued under the sole control of four speculators residing under a foreign jurisdiction ever since the cemetery was incorporated. The eight first-named corporators, being citizens of the District of Columbia, were thus made mere men of straw, and not allowed any voice or authority whatever in the matter. No stock-books were opened for the subscription of stock, or otherwise any opportunity whatsoever given to any of the residents of the District of Columbia to acquire any influence or authority in the management of the cemetery. Thus by strategem, four New York speculators, by deceiving Congress and the people of the District, obtained a charter whereby they took the entire control of the cemetery in the District of Columbia for the purpose of mere speculation. Neither Congress nor the people of the District had any suspicion that any such chicanery or artifice would be resorted to to control and speculate out of the graves of the dead, and therefore did not scrutinize the phraseology of the charter or inquire into the unexpressed places of residence of the corporators. And the lot-owners, when they purchased their lots, had no knowledge of the plot or scheme of the speculators, and supposed that everything was right because the company was incorporated by Congress.

The scheme of the venture is made apparent in the provision of section 3 of the charter, which is as follows: "That the capital stock of said company shall be represented by two thousand shares, of $50 each, divided among the proprietors according to their respective interests, and transferable in such manner as the by-laws may direct." No notice was given and stock subscribed in the usual form, giving to any of the community directly interested an opportunity to become stockholders. And these two thousand shares, or $100,000 of stock, thus factitiously created to represent the capital, was never paid up, or one dollar ever paid on it. It was a mere fiction, and a part of the chicanery of the whole scheme.

The land purchased by William S. Humphreys is said to have been about ninety acres, and bought for $9,000, or $100 per acre. Of this ground about thirty acres were laid out into Glenwood Cemetery. And some years afterward sixty acres more of the ground were ostensibly added to the dedication for the cemetery. But it does not appear from the public records of the District that any title for any of this land was ever conveyed to the cemetery corporation. The legal title of the ground appears to be held by J. B. Close, individually. This is as far as the public records disclose the title. The cemetery coporation professes to convey a title in fee to the lot-proprietors without showing upon the public records of the District that it ever was invested with the title. After the grounds shall have been all sold out in lots and the cemetery ceases to be a source of income to the New York operators, the lot-proprietors have no assurance whatever, as the matter now stands, that the cemetery will be kept up and their titles be made secure.

The lots in the cemetery vary in size from eighty to three hundred and twenty superficial square feet. The price of an ordinary sized lot is $100; half lot, $55, and quarter of a lot, $30, all divisions of lots being made by the superintendent. The inclosure and improvement of the grounds made by the cemetery company have not been costly, and no expensive or heavy grading has been made. The sales of the lots for the first two years after the grant of the act of incorporation furnished means more than sufficient (as we have reason to believe) to refund the purchase-money paid for the grounds and pay for all improvements made, together with the interest thereon. And the superintendent says that the stock of the company pays good and satisfactory dividends.

The management of the affairs of the cemetery, as now conducted, is not satisfactory to the lot-proprietors, the chief part of whom reside in the District of Columbia; and some of the lot-owners make serious complaints of extortion having been practiced and of the failure in the progress of improvement in the cemetery grounds.

No civilized and intelligent community, in any locality in this country, would willingly consent to have their cemetery or the sacred resting-places of their dead under the exclusive control and management of non-resident or foreign speculators. Even if the present managers in New York were humane and good men, we can have no assurance as to what their successors may be; and no lot-proprietor can rest in entire confidence that the sanctity of the graves in which he has interred the remains of his deceased friends will remain inviolate from the aggressive spirit of cupidity in the future if the exclusive control of it be left in the hands of foreign managers, having no interest in the cemetery beyond that of mere speculation.

Besides the fact that the charter was surreptitiously obtained by a deception practiced on Congress, as well as on the citizens of the District of Columbia, the corporation is subject to the objection that, although nominally an institution of the District of Columbia, yet it is in fact an incorporation of citizens of the State of New York to carry on a local business within this District. By comity a corporation in one State or Territory is allowed to do commercial business in another State or Territory; but the citizens of a foreign jurisdiction are never knowingly allowed a grant of corporate power to engage in an enterprise and manage and control it within any State or Territory in which they are not commorant; and the objection applies with still greater force to a corporation of the nature of this one. The common feelings of humanity revolt at the very idea of a combination of persons to speculate out of the graves of the dead in a foreign jurisdiction, with no feelings or interests in common with those who use the ground for the purposes of burial.

The twelfth section of the charter provides "that it may be lawful for Congress hereafter to alter, modify, or repeal the foregoing act." (See United States Statutes at Large, volume 10, page 790.)

The amendment proposed simply contemplates a change in the mode and form of selecting the trustees or managers for the control and conduct of the affairs of the cemetery, in order to transfer the authority from the foreign board of managers to a board of trustees to be elected by the lot-proprietors, who reside in the District of Columbia, the persons most interested in the beneficial objects of the institution, as well as the proper management of its affairs.

The bill provides for the protection of all rights of property in the cemetery of any person or persons whatsoever, as follows:

"The affairs of the cemetery shall be so conducted under the authority of a board of trustees as to secure the equitable rights of each and every person having in any way any vested interest in said cemetery. And the Cemetery Company and the trustees thereof shall be amenable and subject to the jurisdiction of the equity courts of the District of Columbia for any disregard of the rights or interests of any person whatsoever." &c.

Here is afforded all the opportunity which could be fairly and reasonably asked for the protection of rights and the administration of justice. The charter by its terms being subject to amendment, all the rights of property acquired in any form in the cemetery were subject to this express condition. If the New York operators have no confidence in the administration of justice by the courts of the District of Columbia, they should not have sought this locality for their grave-yard speculation.

Without, therefore, intending to wrong or injure any person, but for the charitable and disinterested purpose alone of providing for the most proper and suitable management of this cemetery, the memorialists have petitioned Congress for the proposed amendment of the charter upon the grounds above set out, which may be summed up as follows, namely:

First. By strategem and artifice in framing the bill for the charter, and suppressing the places of residence of the corporators, a deception was practiced on Congress as well as on the people of the District of Columbia in obtaining the grant of the corporate authority as it now stands.

Second. By deception and chicanery a private combination of four or five men in the city and State of New York obtained the franchise and the exclusive control of a cemetery corporation, in the District of Columbia, for the mere purpose of private speculation.

Third. A cemetery association in charge of the sepulchers of the dead, which is in its nature a charitable and public institution, should be under the control and management of the community or people directly interested in its charitable objects, and not those of non-resident and foreign speculators.

Fourth. The managers of a cemetery association should not have an interest therein based on a fictitious and fraudulent issue of stock never subscribed, nor actually and in good faith paid up.

Fifth. A cemetery should never be intrusted to the exclusive control of managers directly interested against the expenditure of the proceeds of the sales of the lots in the improvement and ornament of the grounds, nor should the control of it be given to those who, after the sale of all the lots, and when it ceases to be a source of profitable income, are at liberty to abandon it, and have no motive for keeping it up and in order.

For these and other reasons the lot-proprietors respectfully ask for the exercise of the power, expressly reserved by Congress, to amend the charter of this corporation as proposed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio in the second paragraph by striking out in line 15 the word "three" and inserting the word "two," and in line 16 by striking out the word "two" and inserting the word "three;" so that the proprietors of lots shall have two of the trustees and the original proprietors of the tract of ground shall have three; and I move to further amend in line 27 of the second clause by striking out the word "ninety" and inserting the word "thirty;" so that it will read:

Provided, however, That the original proprietors shall have no representation in said board of trustees until a conveyance shall have been made to the cemetery corporation of the thirty acres of ground now dedicated for the purpose of burial.

In support of this latter suggestion I would call the attention of the Senate to the first section of the act of incorporation, passed on the 27th of July, 1854, page 789 of volume 10 of the statutes, by which the parties named and others were empowered—

To purchase and hold not exceeding one hundred acres of land in the District of Columbia, north of the limits of the city of Washington, to sell and dispose of such parts of said land as may not be wanted for the purpose of a cemetery: Provided, That at least thirty contiguous acres shall be forever appropriated and set apart as a cemetery, with authority to said corporation to receive gifts and bequests for the purpose of ornamenting and improving said cemetery, and to hold such personal property as may be requisite to carry out the object of this act.

The corporators have fully complied with the terms of the act under which they derived their powers; they were authorized to purchase not exceeding one hundred acres of land and to sell such portions of it as might not be needed for a cemetery. They were required to lay out thirty acres into a cemetery, which they have done. They bought ninety acres instead of one hundred, and the sixty acres not laid out have remained agricultural lands. It is a tranquil, peaceful, old pasture, with forest fruit-trees, partly in grass and partly in grain, surrounded by an old stone wall, and is entirely separate from that portion of the tract that is laid out for a cemetery. There certainly can be no reason why Congress should divest those parties of the title to those sixty acres of land when they have fully complied with the act of Congress that required them to dedicate only thirty for a cemetery.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. There were to have been only thirty acres dedicated for the purpose of a cemetery?

Mr. INGALLS. Only thirty acres laid out for a cemetery.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now have these original corporators paid taxes on the other sixty acres since the act of incorporation?

Mr. INGALLS. Upon that subject I am not informed; I do not know anything about it. I presume, if they had not, that the argument filed against them by the lot-proprietors would show it, because this is an exceedingly vindictive and aggressive controversy, and if they had not paid taxes on this sixty acres that fact as an argument—and I see the pertinence of the Senator's inquiry—would undoubtedly have appeared in this brief that has been filed by the attorneys of the lot-proprietors.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can answer the Senator; that is, I have credible information from gentlemen of high standing; I have not any personal information. As I understand the facts the whole ninety acres have been paid for by money received from the proprietors of the lots. First, thirty were openly, publicly dedicated. They afterward bought an addition to that, and the payment for it has been from the money received from the proprietors of lots, and they have always claimed that the whole was exempt from taxation, although I believe there has been some ruling by the present District commissioners on that subject; but I do not know what it is. For years they had it exempt from taxation and paid no taxes on any portion.

Mr. COCKRELL. And have paid only recently, if payment has been enforced.

Mr. SHERMAN. Recently, I believe, they have been forced to do it. I have no feeling about this matter, and if the Senator really thinks that this proviso is unjust and hard on these proprietors, I will not object to striking out the whole proviso and let the question as to what is the extent of the cemetery grounds depend on the decision of the courts.

Mr. INGALLS. That is fair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to strike out the proviso, and then if the whole ninety acres are cemetery property the courts will say so; if not, all right. In regard to the proportion of trustees, that is a question of equity. Is it not better to give the majority of the trustees to the lot-proprietors, who have graves there, grave-stones, &c., rather than to those who are interested simply in putting money in their pockets, and not in improving the grounds? I think it is perfectly right. These men in drawing this amendment have endeavored to be fair. They have given to themselves, as lot-proprietors, a majority of the trustees, three, and have allowed to the original proprietors two. If on the other hand you give the original proprietors three trustees they have the absolute control of it, and therefore the beneficial effect of the amendment would cease; but if there is any injury to the property of these parties section 4 provides for it. If any of their rights are affected you will find in section 4 that they have a right to appeal to the courts for protection. So there can be no injury done them. I was in hopes that, by common consent, including my friend from Kansas, that would be agreed to. I am willing to strike out the proviso and let it stand on the law before the courts. Strike out the proviso and pass the amendment as it is, and I will consent.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Ohio, in my judgment, is in error in his effort to base the representation in the board of trustees upon the numerical relation between the original proprietors and the lot-holders, rather than upon the amount of property that each has in the tract of land. The original proprietors, as I am informed, retain up to this time a very large proportion of the title, even to the thirty acres that have been dedicated. I believe I am correct in that statement. A very large portion even of the thirty acres has not been sold up to this day. Where is the justice, although there are a great many more lot-proprietors than there are original owners—where is the equity in turning over this property into the hands of a board of trustees, and in that board giving the majority and the control to those parties who own a minority of the property? I certainly have no objection to the fair representation of the lot-proprietors in this board; I think it is just and proper; but I may be allowed to say in passing that I never have heard until this moment any complaint against the original corporators in regard to the proper care, embellishment, and decoration of this cemetery. I am advised that they have expended liberal sums in the maintenance and in the embellishment and care of this tract of ground; that the walks and avenues and all the surroundings and inclosures have been kept up in good condition, and that in this respect there can be no just ground of complaint.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is but one remark I wish to make in addition. The rights of these original proprietors, as they are called, are simply money rights. Theirs is a money investment, which they can protect in the courts. It does not require them to look after the property in order to protect their investment of money; but the lot-proprietors, the persons who own the lots, several hundred of them citizens of this city, two thousand people having already been buried there, have an interest of a different character. It is not a money interest so much as it is an interest of feeling, affection, a desire to improve, ornament, and adorn the places of sepulture of their departed relatives and friends. Now is it not right that these people who have that kind of an interest should have the management of the property rather than those who have simply a money interest, which may be protected in the courts? It is as in the case of a railroad. The stockholders of a railroad govern the railroad. The bondholders may have the whole money interest in the road. They may own it and their bonds may be sufficient to exhaust the entire property; yet the bondholders have no vote; they simply hold a legal title or legal right in the case of a failure to pay the interest on their bonds. That is the way with these parties. They ought not to manage the cemetery. Their interest would be protected by the courts, and the proprietors themselves ought to be allowed to manage this property as they think is best for the ornamentation and for the dedication of a cemetery, not as a mere means of money-making. That is the view I take of it. Therefore I think it is far preferable indeed to give to the original proprietors, who have been re-imbursed for their capital, two out of five trustees; but to give them three out of five would be practically to defeat the object of the amendment altogether.

Mr. INGALLS. The argument of the Senator from Ohio certainly rests upon improper premises. It is those men who have a pecuniary interest in this property who are most likely to protect its interest and to do everything necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose which he says they have in view, that is of pecuniary profit. The men who own the land, who expect to make a profit out of it, are the men who ought to have the control of it, even in the view entertained by the Senator from Ohio, because they know that unless they do expend a proper proportion of the moneys received for the maintenance and embellishment and adorning of these grounds, the sales of their lots will cease. Unless they protect the rights of the lot-holders there will be no demand for the purchase of the lots by those who desire to inter their dead.

Therefore, these parties whom he denounces are the very ones to whom this control ought to be confided. Again, the interests of the proprietors of the lots are to a very great extent isolated and separate. They have no community of interest. After a time the profoundest and most poignant grief at separation and bereavement ceases. New relations are formed. The father and mother who have buried their children have others born to them. Those who lose their friends and relative assume other relations in life, and their interest in the dead to a certain extent vanishes away. Grief softens into regret, and the survivors less and less often visit the scene where the remains of their dead are interred, impelled at last by a pathetic recollection that brings no pang. In addition to this families perish; they become entirely extinct; the survivors even of those who die themselves die and are forgotten.

Therefore, the interest that these proprietors have is necessarily evanescent and temporary and fleeting, but the interest of those who own the property and who are to obtain a continuous revenue from it is perpetual and abiding; it never ceases so long as any property remains to be sold; and their interest in the maintenance and care of the property must necessarily continue active and enduring. All the reasons which can be advanced, even those of a sentimental character, would seem to me to indicate that the control ought to be in the hands of the owners of the property. I ask a vote on the motion which I made to amend the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator agrees to strike out the proviso? I think that better.

Mr. INGALLS. No, I want to amend it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to that.

Mr. INGALLS. My motion was to strike out in line 15 the word "three" and insert "two," and in line 16 to strike out "two" and insert "three," the effect of the amendment being to give to the proprietors who own a majority of the property a majority of representation in the board of trustees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EATON in the chair) put the question on the amendment to the amendment; and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope not.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will let it go, rather than to break up a quorum, but I think it unjust.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to unless a division be called for. It is agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. The question now recurs on the amendment in line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In line 16 of the amendment it is moved to amend by striking out the word "two" and inserting the word "three."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. As I understand, the Senator from Ohio consents that the proviso contained in lines 24 to 28 of his amendment shall be stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that now. I am willing that that shall be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the proviso will be considered as stricken out. It is stricken out. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery, approved July 27, 1854."

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. GORDON. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 231.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the Senator from Georgia to yield to me. By unanimous consent yesterday I was authorized to bring to the attention of the Senate the bill in regard to the revision of the statutes. It will occupy not more than five minutes.

Mr. GORDON. I yield, with the understanding that my motion shall not lose its place.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire first to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment which was proposed yesterday to section 1270, on page 9 of the print that I use. I wish now to say to the Senate that under the influence of a letter from General Meigs yesterday the Senate struck out the whole of the proposition to amend section 1270. I received a letter this morning from the Paymaster-General of the Army, stating, and I am satisfied the statement is correct, that so much of that proposition as is contained between lines 189 and 193 should be preserved. I therefore ask the consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote and to strike out all of lines 185, 186, 187, and 188, including the word "further," in line 189; so that it will read, if amended:

Section 1270 is amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"That officers of the Army and of volunteers assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted shall, during the time they are employed on such duty, receive the pay, emoluments, and allowances of cavalry officers of the same grade respectively."

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will concur in that. That is not the portion of the addition to which I objected. I am satisfied that that is correct. That is my understanding of it. It was the first part to which I objected, and that has been stricken out, and will remain so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the amendment was made striking out lines 183 to 193 will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The question is upon the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I call attention now to the next item of amendments under the head of section 1280. So much of the proposition to amend section 1280 as follows in line 196 after "additions" should be added to section 1279, instead of 1280. I am informed by the Paymaster-General of the Army that if it remains as an amendment to section 1280 it may be open to the construction of increasing the pay of these men, and that if it is added to section 1279 it will leave them where they were before. I therefore move that all following "additions," in line 196 of that paragraph, be stricken out and then I will move to add the substance of what is stricken out to section 1279.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Now I move to insert after line 193:

That section 1279 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Artificer for artillery and infantry, $15 per month; wagoner of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, $14 per month. The principal assistant in the Ordnance Bureau shall receive a compensation, including pay and emoluments, not exceeding that of a major of ordnance."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is all I have to present. The Senator from Maine desires to move an amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. After line 416 of the bill to come in after section 2742, as section 2742½, I move to insert the following words:

There shall be allowed and paid the following fees to weighers and gaugers respectively at all ports other than those provided for in the four preceding sections, to be paid monthly by the collector out of the revenue and charged to the United States: For the measurement of every 100 bushels of grain, 45 cents; for the measurement of every 100 bushels of salt, 75 cents; for the measurement of every 100 bushels of coal, 90 cents; for the weighing of every 112 pounds, and marking every cask, box, or package weighing more than 200 pounds each, except sugar, coffee, pepper, pimento, and indigo in bales, bags, mats, canisters, or screons, with the weight in durable characters, in the district of Norfolk, 2½ cents; in other districts, 3 cents; for the gauging and marking every cask, to be marked in durable characters, with his own name, and the quantity, 12 cents; for computing the contents of, and marking cases containing distilled spirits and wines, 4½ cents per case; for actually counting the number of bottles of cider, beer, ale, perry, or porter contained in any cask or other package or packages, 1½ cents per dozen; and in proportion for any greater or lesser quantity; and the allowances aforesaid shall be deemed to include a compensation for making returns of the merchandise weigher, gauger, and measurer, specifying the quality as well as quantity; but the compensation of no weigher or gauger shall exceed the sum of $1,500 per annum; nor shall the union of two or more of these offices in one person entitle him to receive more than that sum per annum.

I will say to the Senate that if this amendment shall be adopted it will make the Revised Statutes precisely according to the text of the original statutes that were in force when the Revised Statutes were passed. That is, the amendment is made up of three different sections which were in force, and they were omitted either accidentally or by design, I do not know which. I have here a communication from the Treasury Department stating the precise mode which is contained in the amendment as the one to restore the matter to its original status.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear that portion about the payment of salaries read again to see if it is not changing the whole law upon that subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. It does not change it a particle.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Clerk read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

There shall be allowed and paid the following fees to weighers and gaugers respectively at all ports other than those provided for in the four preceding sections, to be paid monthly by the collector out of the revenue, and charged to the United States; for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of grain, forty-five cents; for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of salt, seventy-five cents——

Mr. COCKRELL. That is sufficient. I only wanted to know the manner of pay. It seems this is to be paid out of revenue. Is this the way it was paid before?

Mr. HAMLIN. Formerly these fees were collected and they were paid all over the country out of the revenue. By the Revised Statutes there is a change of the law. In what are called the exceptional ports, to wit, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and perhaps San Francisco, salaries were fixed for these officers. They were formerly paid, as it is proposed now to pay these men, from the fees which they received. This amendment restores the fees precisely as they were before the Revised Statutes, leaving the officers in these large ports to be paid a salary not exceeding $2,000. It restores the law precisely to what it was.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read with reference to these fees. It seems to me that seventy-five cents for each hundred bushels of salt is rather an extraordinary fee.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is just what they have been paid. It is the precise sum. I wish to say in this connection that while by design or carelessness these fees were omitted in the Revised Statutes, the Department have assumed the right to go on with the law and have adopted precisely the same rules that existed under the law. The paper is not in the form of a letter, but a memorandum. Last summer the attention of the Committee on Revision was called to this subject by the Department after the bill had been reported. I called upon the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and he could not find the letter. I went to the Department yesterday morning. The Assistant Secretary writes me:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 11, 1877.

DEAR SIR: The letter in relation to fees of weighers, gangers, and measurers, to which you referred in your interview with the Chief Clerk this morning, cannot, after diligent search in the files of the Department, be found. The matter treated of in the letter, however, will be found to be fully covered by the inclosed memorandum.

Very truly yours,

CHAS. F. CONANT.

Hon. HANNIBAL HAMLIN,
United States Senate.

Now this is the memorandum:

The fees for weighing, gauging, and measuring, provided in the act of March 2, 1799, and amended by the act of 26th April, 1816, are omitted in the Revised Statutes.

That is precisely the law:

All quantities of merchandise formerly measured are now ascertained by weight—

This varies from the old statute, as the old statute said "measurers, weighers, and gangers." "Measurers" are left out because everything is reduced to the standard of weight. Be it wheat, be it salt, be it anything, it is reduced to the standard of weight—thus rendering the office of measurer practically of no use. The act of July 26, 1866, abolished the office of measurer at New York.

By special legislation the persons performing the duties of weighers, gangers, &c., (from which duties the fees in question arise, in the larger ports, namely, Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and San Francisco,) are paid a specific salary out of the Treasury.

Before the passage of the Revised Statutes the fees were used as a measure, to ascertain the compensation to be paid out of the Treasury to the persons acting as weighers, gaugers, or measurers, not to exceed the maximum of $1,500 in any one year.

Fees only accrued to the United States in those cases where weight, gauge, or measure was ascertained for the benefit of the parties interested in the merchandise.

Since the passage of the Revised Statutes, in which no provision was made for these fees, where services were performed which would have, under the law as it existed prior to June 22, 1874, required the payment of fees by importers, the same sum has been charged as would have accrued under the old law, this being thought a fair measure of the actual expense.

Weighing and gauging are now performed by persons appointed for that purpose and paid a regular salary from the Treasury.

The only thing that seems to be needed is for the law to be so amended as to state explicitly the amount to be paid by importers for weighing and gauging when required, and the salary to be paid to the persons performing the duty.

This amendment does that precise thing and restores the law to precisely what it was.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I only desire to say that this amendment has not been considered by the committee or by any member of the committee. I am content that it should be agreed to as an amendment, with the understanding, however, on my part that it shall be examined before the bill is finally acted on by the House, so that the House committee may know, and if the Department have any information to communicate to them we may know what it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does seem to me that the mode of paying the salaries is in contravention of the whole system fixed by the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. At those five large ports.

Mr. COCKRELL. Without making any objection to the amendment now, I desire simply to call the attention of the committee to that point. It was the custom of the Government for many years to pay all the customs officers out of the custom duties which they received. Then the whole system was changed and they were paid certain amounts out of a regular appropriation. Now this seems to be going back to the original custom and giving them fees out of their collections. I am opposed to that on principle, and I desire to call the attention of the committee to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2309) granting a pension to Margaret C. Bell.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM LAWRENCE of Ohio, Mr. WILLIAM P. LYNDE of Wisconsin, and Mr. SCOTT LORD of New York managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4250) to provide remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports;

A bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth the reserve and stitched copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 453) to authorize the Vancouver Water Company to lay water-pipes through the Fort Vancouver military reservation;

A bill (S. No. 739) to amend section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to counterfeiting;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 29) extending the time for the making of a report by the Army commission created by the act of July 24, 1876;

A bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply blankets to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

JUNIUS T. TURNER—VETO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

On the eve of the adjournment of the last session of Congress I returned to the Senate bill No. 561, entitled "An act for the relief of Major Junius T. Turner," with my objections to its becoming a law. I now desire to withdraw those objections as I am satisfied they were made under a misapprehension of the facts.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 12, 1877.

Mr. SPENCER. The bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. I move that the message also be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 4250) to provide remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth the reserve and stitched copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote—to the Committee on Printing.

ROBERT ERWIN.

Mr. GORDON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there a favorable or an adverse report in that case?

Mr. GORDON. An adverse report.

Mr. CONKLING. While the Secretary is looking for the bill, I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia, without meaning to interpose against this bill at all, that he is aware that it will lead to debate. The chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. WRIGHT] I do not see at this moment. He, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, made a report on this subject, I believe, and will expect to be here to discuss it when it is to be discussed.

Mr. GORDON. I thought the Senator from Iowa was present. He was here when I called up the bill, a few moments ago. I presume he is in the building now.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me, I will explain to him the purpose of my interruption. I wish to ask the Senate to hold a short executive session when I do not interfere with any other Senator by doing it, as I am compelled to leave the Senate to attend a meeting of a committee.

Mr. GORDON. I will not insist under the circumstances. I ask that the bill be taken up and I will have it laid aside as unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. The bill being taken up so as to be left as unfinished business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at three o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a correction of the Journal. There is a slight error, where it states that the motion I made was that the consideration of Senate resolution No. 16 should be laid over until the next morning hour. It should be the morning hour of Tuesday next. There might be a morning hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour of to-day is for private bills.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But not the morning hour of to-morrow. The proposition I made (and it was made by unanimous consent) was that which I have stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects very distinctly about it, that the object of the gentleman was that it should go over until the morning hour of Tuesday.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But the Journal says the next morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected in that respect.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

COUNTING OF THE PRESIDENTIAL VOTES.

Mr. TARBOX, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of citizens of Lawrence, Massachusetts, of both political parties, in which they pray for a just and honorable settlement of the presidential dispute, such as shall satisfy the conscience of the country; and the same was referred to the special committee upon the electoral votes, and ordered to be printed.

CLERK TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. FROST, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Accounts, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Expenditures in the Treasury Department be allowed a special clerk for the remainder of the session, to be appointed by the chairman thereof, and to receive the same compensation as the clerks of the regular committees.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. BRADLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4392) making appropriations for continuing the improvements upon certain harbors in Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying letter from the Department, referred the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at eighteen minutes past twelve o'clock, and the business is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

CYNTHIA A. MIZELLE.

Mr. BAGBY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2742) granting a pension to Cynthia A. Mizelle, of Bertie County, North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE BRENNAN.

Mr. BAGBY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3972) granting a pension to Catherine Brennan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. BAGBY also, from the same committe, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3710) granting a pension to Martin V. Day, of Massac County, Illinois, which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. FENSCKE.

Mr. RAINEY, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1313) granting a pension to John C. Fenscke; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calander, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDINE DAVIS.

Mr. SINNICKSON, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of Addine Davis, asking to be restored to the pension-roll.

MARGARET C. BELL.

Mr. SINNICKSON also, from the same committee, reported the bill (H. R. No. 2300) granting a pension to Margaret C. Bell, returned from the Senate with an amendment, with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was read and concurred in, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:
Which shall be in lieu of the pension now received by her.

Mr. SINNICKSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH FULKS.

Mr. RIDDLE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4333) to restore to the pension-roll Mrs. Elizabeth Fulks, widow of Elkanah Fulks, of Company A, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

BETSY ANN FRY.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3550) granting a pension to Mrs. Betsy Ann Fry, widow of Captain Alfred Fry, of Company A, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following cases; which were severally laid on the table, and the reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 3089) granting a pension to Mrs. G. A. Dennis, widow of Abraham Dennis, captain of Company D, Second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, in the war with Mexico;

The bill (H. R. No. 3708) granting a pension to Enoch L. Folsom, of Lake County, Indiana;

The bill (H. R. No. 2206) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca Franklin and her children, as widow of Jeremiah S. Franklin, late a private in Company B, Eighth Regiment, Tennessee Volunteers; and

The bill (H. R. No. 4394) granting a pension to Jacob Powers.

JOHN W. JENNINGS.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am directed by the Committee of Accounts to report back the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and at the request of the parties interested I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized and required to pay John W. Jennings, late assistant doorkeeper, his salary as such officer from the date of his discharge, September 15, 1876, up to the day of the meeting of the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, the 4th of December, 1876.

The motion of Mr. HUMPHREYS was agreed to; and the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GEORGE C. JENCKS.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4395) for the relief of George C. Jencks, of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. B. DUFFIELD.

Mr. BRADLEY also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition for the relief of W. B. Duffield, late United States marshal for the Territory of Arizona; which was laid on the table.

MRS. SARAH B. FRANKLIN.

Mr. PRATT, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 3305) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah B. Franklin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM S. ROBINSON.

Mr. TARBOX, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of the legal representatives of William S. Robinson, of Malden, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. TARBOX, from the same committee, also reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4035) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying amendments and report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees having been concluded for reports of a private nature, the Chair will now recognize gentlemen to make such reports who were not present when their committees were called.

CHIPPEWAS OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. TUFTS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to invest in the bonds of the United States the unexpended balance of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Lake Superior.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to invest in the bonds of the United States, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent. per annum, the unexpended balance, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, from the 22d day of June, 1874, of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewas of Lake Superior, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874; the principal sum and interest thereon to be expended as provided in said act.

The amendment reported from the committee was in the last clause of the bill to strike out the words "principal sum and."

Mr. TUFTS. The object of the amendment is to provide that the interest only shall be invested, and that the principal shall remain where it now is.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TUFTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid on the table and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1037) to appropriate $136,597 for necessary improvements at Mare Island navy-yard, Vallejo, California;

A bill (H. R. No. 2603) for the relief of the administrator of Samuel T. Anderson, of Baltimore;

A bill (H. R. No. 3947) for the relief of L. L. Reamy, United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 4005) for the relief of Henry Hoover;

A bill (H. R. No. 4203) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles McCord and Reuben McCord; and

The petition of John S. Gallager, jr., of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, for difference of pay.

WILLAMETTE AND COLUMBIA RIVERS, OREGON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House resolutions of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the Willamette and Columbia Rivers; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a resolution of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, asking favorable legislation for the Northern Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. GRANT, his Private Secretary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent of the House that to-day be considered as objection day.

Mr. HUNTER. I object to that.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I insist upon my original motion.

The motion of Mr. BRIGHT was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. This not being objection day, the bills upon the Private Calendar will be reported for consideration. The first bill is House bill No. 344, to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. BUCKNER. That bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE,] who, I believe, is entitled to the floor on the bill. He is now absent, by order of the House, upon an investigating committee in Louisiana, and desires that I should ask that this bill lie over without prejudice until his return. I make that motion.

The motion of Mr. BUCKNER was agreed to, and the bill was accordingly passed over.

THE MISSION OF SAINT JAMES, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of the mission of Saint James, in Washington Territory, reported, with amendments, from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Congress, in the act entitled "An act to establish the territorial government of Oregon," passed on the 14th of August, 1848, provided "that the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said Territory, together with the improvements thereon, be confirmed and established in the several religious societies to which said missionary societies respectively belong," and by the act entitled "An act to establish the territorial government of Washington," passed on the 2d of March, 1853, provided "that the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said Territory, or that may have been so occupied as missionary stations prior to the passage of the act establishing the territorial government of Oregon, together with the improvements thereon, be, and is hereby, confirmed and established to the several religious societies to which said missionary societies respectively belong;"

And whereas the honorable Secretary of the Interior, by his official and final decision, under date of January 29, 1872, after taking cognizance of the testimony and law in the case, acknowledges that a Catholic mission, called the mission of Saint James, existed at Vancouver, Territory of Washington, on the 14th of August, 1848, within the meaning and provision of the aforesaid acts, and that the said mission is entitled to whatever quantity of land these acts are intended to grant;

And whereas the intention of the aforesaid acts is to grant to each missionary station among the Indian tribes in Oregon and Washington Territories on the 14th of August, 1848, and 2d of March, 1853, respectively, the quantity of six hundred and forty acres of the public lands of the United States, where this quantity can be found in compact form, so as to include the mission improvements, or so much of said land as can be found, not to exceed six hundred and forty acres;

And whereas by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated September 29, 1859, a survey of said claim was made, and a plat thereof, dated December, 1861, approved by the surveyor-general of Washington Territory, was forwarded, and is now on file in the General Land Office of the Department of the Interior, such survey placing the mission improvements as near the center of the claim as possible, and interfering with no prior legal rights: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, within two months after the passage of this act, to cause a patent to be issued for the claim of the Saint James mission of Washington Territory, in accordance with the aforesaid plat of survey, dated in December, 1861.

The amendments were to strike out the third paragraph of the preamble, and to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall operate in any way to affect, impair, or defeat any adverse claim to the land described in said patent, or to any part thereof: And provided further, That the United States shall have the right to remove therefrom any property, buildings, or fixtures it may have thereon.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of the mission of Saint James, in Washington Territory, respectfully report:

That by the act of Congress approved August 14, 1848, by which the Territory of Oregon was organized, it was provided "that the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said Territory, together with the improvements thereon, be confirmed and established in the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong."

There was established at Vancouver, on the north bank of the Columbia River, in the then Territory of Oregon, a missionary station, which has ever since been known as the mission of Saint James, and which has continued to exist as an active mission, from the time of its first establishment, in 1838, down to the present time. Houses were built, a burial-ground laid out, lands cultivated, and other acts of use, occupancy, and enjoyment necessary and proper for the purposes of evangelizing, civilizing, and teaching the Indians resorting to these mission grounds, were performed. It was such an occupancy and use of soil, timber, and grass as was needful for the prosecution of the purpose of the mission. When first established, and until May, 1859, the Hudson Bay Company was in lawful possession of the land on which this mission was located under treaty stipulations between Great Britain and the United States. This company not only encouraged the establishment of this mission by allowing it to occupy the land for its operations, but contributed regularly and liberally to its support. It is clear that the mission of Saint James being, at the passage of the act of August 14, 1848, in the lawful occupancy of the land then and now occupied by it, it is within the provisions of said act.

In the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the surveyor-general of Oregon, issued in 1859, he construed the act of August 14, 1848, "to give to each missionary station six hundred and forty acres, and in order to comply with the terms of the grant made by Congress under circumstances where the land now (then) occupied, together with the improvements thereon, cannot be brought within the legal subdivisions without doing manifest injustice to the missionary stations," he instructs him "to cause to be made a special survey of a square mile, which shall include the land occupied, with buildings and improvements, as the center as nearly as may be." The rights of occupancy of the Hudson Bay Company expired in 1859, and in obedience to the aforesaid instructions of the Land Department, the surveyor-general of Oregon made a survey and plat of a mile square, which included the buildings and improvements of the mission, and caused the same to be filed in the Land Office of the Department of the Interior. The object of this bill is to cause a patent to be issued, according to said survey and plat.

Since the establishment of the Saint James mission several conflicting claims have sprung up to this land. The United States has established a military reservation on a portion of it, and other claimants are contesting the right of the mission. It is not the purpose of the committee to determine as to the validity or invalidity of these adverse claims, and they have amended the bill referred to them so as to enable these claimants to assert their rights before the courts as to any part or the whole of the six hundred and forty acres. But while the bill saves the adverse rights of these claimants, it becomes absolutely essential, in order to give this mission a legal status in court as to the land outside of the half acre on which its church building and mission-house are located, that the land surveyed and platted to the mission in satisfaction of the grant by Congress should be separated from the public domain and patented; and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill referred to them, with an amendment thereto saving the rights of adverse claimants, and the rights of the United States to any buildings or other fixtures on said land, also striking out part of the preamble on second page of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] that it may be desirable to prevent speculation in these lands granted by the Government for a highly charitable object. I would be glad therefore if he would consent to add to the bill the following words:

Provided, however, That all sales, assignments, and contracts for sales of any such lands, made by any such societies prior to the passage of this act, shall be null and void.

In a number of instances where grants of this character have been made by the Government and finally confirmed, the societies themselves have virtually died, so that some few remaining persons exercising the powers of the corporation have made the sales of the property, which has thus become a matter of personal speculation. It seems to me that so far as possible this property should be secured for the benefit of the society alone, and not be allowed to go to the personal benefit of speculators. I trust therefore the gentleman from Missouri will consent to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER. I am not authorized to admit the amendment. I will ask my friend from Indiana whether he has any information, or whether there is any ground to suppose that there is any necessity for the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not perhaps with reference to the specific grant now in question; but this bill is very broad in its terms and it does not appear exactly what grants may be reached.

Mr. BUCKNER. The bill has no reference to any other grant than this particular one.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it confined to a single grant?

Mr. BUCKNER. It is confined to the grant named in the bill; all others have been satisfied, as I understand.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk read the bill again.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this bill, and I wish to make a statement of the facts in this case. By the organic act of Washington Territory and also of Oregon there was granted to the various missions established in Oregon and Washington Territory the lands actually occupied by them for missionary purposes, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres in each case. In this grant there were two limitations: first, the land must be actually occupied for mission purposes, no more land being granted to these societies than they might actually occupy in that manner; and in the next place, the grant was not to exceed in any case six hundred and forty acres. This is the construction which has been put upon this provision of the organic act, not only by the courts of Oregon and Washington Territory, but by the Interior Department of this Government. There were many of these missions; and they have all submitted their proof in the local land offices of the Government, which have granted to these societies the amount of land to which the proof showed them to be entitled. Some of them have received six hundred and forty acres; others less than that quantity.

Now this bill proposes to grant to this mission six hundred and forty acres of land. A portion of this land is already covered by a patent, one hundred and sixty acres having been already patented to the city of Vancouver. What does this bill propose? This grant of six hundred and forty acres covers the town of Vancouver, a town of fifteen hundred inhabitants; and it also covers about half of the military reservation at Vancouver, one of the most important military reservations upon the Pacific coast. The property which the bill proposes to give to this mission is worth at least half a million of dollars; and the Government of the United States has already expended in the building of barracks and other improvements on this land at Vancouver over half a million of dollars.

Now I ask what reason can be given that this case should take a course different from that which has been followed in the other cases? The other missionary societies in Oregon and Washington Territory have presented their claims to the local land offices, and when appeals have been taken the claims have gone before the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior. This is the course which all the other missionary claims have taken. Even in this very case the evidence was taken before the local land offices; the case was decided against the mission; an appeal was taken to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and from him to the Secretary of the Interior. At every step the decision was against the validity of this claim.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. JACOBS. I think I am not mistaken.

Mr. BUCKNER. I think the gentleman is.

Mr. JACOBS. I do not mean to deny the Secretary of the Interior, in the decision which he made upon the appeal, gave the mission the ground upon which their buildings were situated, together with a small quantity of land around the buildings, but no more.

Mr. BUCKNER. How much did the same Secretary give to the Methodist mission at the Dalles?

Mr. JACOBS. Six hundred and forty acres, I believe. After this long and expensive litigation, in which the decision has been uniformly against this mission, with what justice can the Congress of the United States now grant to this defeated party a patent to this property which has been in dispute so long? Why make this case an exception to the rule which has prevailed in all the other cases? The other cases have all taken the course which I have indicated; and the parties have rested satisfied with the decision of the Land Department of the Government.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman tell me what mission in the Territory of Washington or Oregon has ever obtained less than six hundred and forty acres?

Mr. JACOBS. I do not know, sir.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman cannot mention one such case.

Mr. JACOBS. I do not know the exact quantity of land that these missions have obtained; but we make an exception in this case.

Mr. BUCKNER. We do not make any exception, but merely sustain the rule.

Mr. JACOBS. The other parties have made their proofs in the Land Department of the Government and have taken the quantity of land given them by the Government upon that proof.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Washington Territory inform the committee whether by the law making this grant for missionary purposes in Oregon certain proofs were required to be made before the local offices, upon which patents were finally issued. Is that the law? How do they obtain their titles under ordinary circumstances?

Mr. JACOBS. The law is very indefinite on that subject. The lands were located upon legislative grant and then proof was made in the local offices, and if the parties were dissatisfied an appeal was taken to the General Land Office.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then upon the right to the land being confirmed by the Commissioner a patent was issued?

Mr. JACOBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. For six hundred and forty acres of land?

Mr. JACOBS. Yes, sir; or for whatever quantity of land that was claimed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the Delegate from Washington Territory to say that in all the other cases the proofs have been submitted under the law, and that a patent ought to have been issued in this particular case from the local office.

Mr. BUCKNER. That was done in this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand then in this case proofs were submitted to the decision of the local office, and that that decision was against the claim, and then that an appeal was taken to the General Land Office, where the decision was against the claim, at which time the Secretary of the Interior confirmed to these parties the land occupied by their buildings, with a small portion of adjacent land. Is this am I correct?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. One other point. I understand the Delegate to state that a portion of the town of Vancouver occupies this section of land, and that Vancouver has a population of some fifteen hundred persons. I understand further that a portion was appropriated by the Government as a military reservation, and that buildings were erected upon it. Now, will the gentleman inform me how much of this land has been appropriated for the purposes of the town of Vancouver, and whether that has been done under patent obtained from the Government or not—in other words, for how much of this land has the Government already issued patents?

Mr. JACOBS. The town of Vancouver covers about three hundred and twenty acres of this land. One hundred and sixty acres of this land has been patented to the town of Vancouver, and the other one hundred and sixty acres is claimed under the donation law. About three hundred and sixty acres are covered by this military reservation.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask my friend from Washington Territory whether, if these parties are entitled to the land upon which the town of Vancouver is located, he supposes this bill in any way will affect their rights? If they have a superior right to this land, does this bill in any way affect that right?

Mr. JACOBS. I will answer that question in this way: that there is no necessity for this kind of legislation, because now, under the laws of Washington Territory, an appeal can be instituted on the equity side, and that suit can be tried without further legislation of this kind.

Mr. BUCKNER obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will let me ask another question.

Mr. BUCKNER. I think I understand the point of the gentleman from Indiana, and will answer it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question I wish to ask my friend from Missouri is, when the Government took possession of this land as a military post, when buildings were erected upon it, and does the Government still occupy it as a military reservation? Further, for what reason did this missionary society refuse to receive that portion of land awarded to it by the Secretary?

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand, Mr. Chairman, a portion of this land was occupied by order of the Secretary of War as a military reservation. If it is not so occupied now, it is because it has been removed; but there are still buildings there which belong to the Government, and for which this bill provides.

In further answer to the gentleman's question, I will state that when in 1859 this land was authorized to be sold and surveyed, the then surveyor-general of Oregon was directed to lay off six hundred and forty acres to each of these missions. That was the construction at that time, and, I hold, was the proper construction of the law, that they were entitled to six hundred and forty acres each. That was the amount to which each mission in Washington and Oregon was entitled. He did lay off those six hundred and forty acres, including the mission grounds of this mission, as well as the Dalles mission, the Methodist mission. The Methodist mission is precisely in the same condition as this. The General Government made a military reservation on a portion of the Methodist mission at the Dalles. The Government came in and bought the land from the Methodist mission and paid $23,000 for it. That was under the act of Congress of 1873.

Now, when this question came up, when these contesting claims represented by my friend from Washington Territory came up before the Secretary of the Interior, he decided, I say, contrary to the clear meaning of this act, and contrary to the entire practice of the Government at that time and to the decisions of the Land Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior in 1868, that the mission was only entitled to the actual ground on which the church and buildings were located, and gave them a patent for only half an acre of ground, when other missions had received six hundred and forty acres.

Now what is the object of this bill? It does not say that Vancouver has not a good title or that other adverse claimants have not a good title as against this mission; but it gives these parties the only status they can have—that is, by giving them a patent—without prejudicing the claims of any adverse party. The object of the bill is to enable these parties to go into court and test the question whether they are entitled to six hundred and forty acres or to half an acre, or whether the town of Vancouver or any other claimant has any right against them. That is the object of this bill, and no other.

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGHT. Do I understand the gentleman correctly, that the patent is simply intended to give the parties a status in court that they may litigate their respective rights?

Mr. BUCKNER. That is all.

Mr. BRIGHT. It does not propose to divest any other parties of their rights, or disturb them in the possession of them?

Mr. BUCKNER. Not at all. That is the object of this bill, as I understand the law. The gentleman from the Territory of Washington says that the law is different there from what I understand it to be. I understand that these parties have no right to the public lands unless they have been set aside by survey, unless they have been severed from the public domain; and this patent is issued in order that they may go into court and test the legality of their alleged rights. That is what the report says.

Mr. JACOBS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JACOBS. It is true that a patent must be issued by the Government before a suit can be instituted upon the equity side of the court. But a portion of this land has already been patented to the city of Vancouver. If, then, the lands have been patented, cannot these parties commence a suit now, and try the validity of their title, just as they could after the issuance of the patent under this bill?

Mr. BUCKNER. I hold not.

Mr. JACOBS. Why not? The laws of Washington Territory expressly authorize that. So do the laws of Oregon.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not know about that. If that be the case, the bill can do no harm.

Mr. JACOBS. But why issue the patent to the defeated party? Why not issue the patent to the party that has been successful in all this litigation in the Land Department of the Government? Why turn around and issue the patent to the defeated party? Let the patent issue to the parties who have succeeded in this long, expensive, and tedious litigation, and then this mission can at once institute its suit and try the title of the land. That is all we desire.

Mr. BUCKNER. In answer to the gentleman I might ask why the Secretary of the Interior made an exception of this claim against all others? why he gave the patent to the Dalles and these other missions and refused it to this one? why he did not give a patent of six hundred and forty acres for this mission under the same law which governed the issue of patents to the others? why he refused to give this mission more than half an acre? I might ask this and think it is a sufficient answer to the gentleman. To show what is the object of the bill, I will read a portion of the report. It says:

Since the establishment of the Saint James mission several conflicting claims have sprung up to this land. The United States has established a military reservation on a portion of it, and other claimants are contesting the right of the mission. It is not the purpose of the committee to determine as to the validity or invalidity of these adverse claims, and they have amended the bill referred to them so as to enable these claimants to assert their rights before the courts as to any part or the whole of the six hundred and forty acres. But while the bill saves the adverse rights of these claimants, it becomes absolutely essential, in order to give this mission a legal status in court as to the land outside of the half acre on which its church building and mission house are located, that the land surveyed and platted to the mission in satisfaction of the grant by Congress should be separated from the public domain and patented; and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill referred to them, with an amendment thereto saving the rights of adverse claimants, and the rights of the United States to any buildings or other fixtures on said land, also striking out part of the preamble on second page of the bill.

Now the whole object of this bill is that these parties may go into court. The gentleman from Washington Territory says he wants that done. I take it that is not so much his object as to prevent these parties from having a status in court.

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRIGHT. If a suit were brought in the equity side of the court in the Territory, I wish to ask would that court have jurisdiction over the title which is in the United States so as to divest it from the United States and rest it in these parties?

Mr. BUCKNER. I cannot see how any court can have any jurisdiction to settle this matter as between these parties unless they can have a legal status in the courts; and that can only be had by virtue of an act of Congress, and if they had had it this bill would not have been introduced. It is well recognized that these parties have no right to test the question in court unless the land has been set aside to them. Now let it be remembered that this was originally done. After survey, this land was set aside, under the orders of the Land Office, to this mission of Saint James, and it is that survey that they ask shall be confirmed so far as respects the United States. As to the other parties claiming this land, let them go into court. This bill gives the mission no rights against the city of Vancouver or anybody else. It does not pretend to do it. Let the gentleman read the proviso, which is as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall operate in any way to affect, impair, or defeat any adverse claim to the land described in said patent, or to any part thereof: And provided further, That the United States shall have the right to remove therefrom any property, buildings, or fixtures it may have thereon.

Now as to the United States, of course if these lands were granted to the mission, the United States had no right to use them as a military reservation; nor had any one else a right to occupy them. And that is the question which the bill proposes to put in the court; and the question cannot be settled in any other way. It may be settled in favor of the men who have squatted on the land and who have established the town of Vancouver. But until that point is settled, I cannot see how the right of the Saint James mission to this land can ever be adjudicated by any court; and if any gentleman will tell me how it can be done, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the time for debate has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman tell us what limit of debate he has reference to?

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Is there no limit to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. None, except under the hour rule.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the committee do now rise to enable the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report in reference to a recusant witness.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee what probable length of time it will take to transact that business, in order that we may then go back into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. KNOTT. I suppose not more than three-quarters of an hour, perhaps an hour. I cannot say exactly.

The question was taken on Mr. KNOTT's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 28, noes 19.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration sundry bills from the Private Calendar, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RECUSANT WITNESS—E. W. BARNES.

Mr. KNOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to submit a report, and as it is written in a rather illegible hand, I trust I may be allowed to read it myself at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to do that.

Mr. KNOTT then read the report of the committee, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration the report of the select committee, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, in relation to the contempt and breach of the privilege of this House by E. W. Barnes in refusing to produce to said committee certain telegrams mentioned in a subpœna served upon him on the 13th of December, 1876, as well as the answer of said Barnes made to the House on the 5th day of January, 1877, would respectfully submit the following report:

The first question to be considered is whether there is anything in the nature of the papers called for by the committee in this instance which exonerates their custodian from the duty of producing them in obedience to the subpœna served upon him. True there are certain communications which the law will not permit to be disclosed in court by the parties to whom they are made for obvious reasons of public policy, growing out of the peculiar relations which the parties between whom they pass sustain toward each other, such as communications between husband and wife, client and attorney, and under some circumstances between public officers in relation to affairs of state involved in the discharge of their official functions, whether such communications may have been made orally or in writing, or whether sent by private bearer, transmitted through the mail, or dispatched by telegraph. But the question presented here is not whether the messages demanded are privileged on account of the existence of any such relations between the sender and receiver, but simply and solely on account of the particular method in which they were transmitted.

Now, if A in Washington should make an oral communication in the strictest confidence to B to be repeated by him to C in New Orleans, and to C only, and it should afterward become material to prove that communication in a court of justice, no one will pretend that B could not be compelled to disclose it unless protected by the existence of some one of the peculiar relations above referred to; and in the absence of those peculiar circumstances it is equally clear that if A should hand to B a communication in writing, even under the most solemn pledge of secrecy on the part of B, to be delivered to C, and it should become material to show the contents of that writing in a proceeding in a court of justice while the same remained in B's possession, he could be compelled to produce it, notwithstanding he might be the repository of an indefinite number of written messages to the same or other parties. Why, therefore, the same communication handed to B in writing or made to him orally to be transmitted to C by telegraph should become so sacred as to be forever beyond the reach of legal process, simply by reason of the seemingly occult and marvelous method of its transmission, it is difficult, if not quite impossible, to see; so much so indeed that no court in this country or in England has yet been able to perceive it. Even Judge Cooley, whose weighty words this House has been so solemnly conjured to carefully consider before venturing to form an opinion upon this point, has failed to explain the sanctifying influence of electricity upon a communication transmitted through its subtle and mysterious agency, or why it should enjoy superior privileges in the eye of the law to every other vehicle of intelligence known among men. Eminent and distinguished as he is as jurist and writer, it is to be observed that his opinion, cited in the answer of this witness, stands unsupported by the authority of a solitary adjudicated case, and seems to have been called forth by the carefully considered judgment of a distinguished judicial tribunal in which precisely the opposite doctrine was maintained, notwithstanding the view which this learned writer had expressed upon the question in a former edition of his work, and which he may or may not have felt some pride in sustaining in the edition quoted by the witness. It is true, as Judge Cooley suggests, that there is a manifest propriety in securing to telegraphic correspondence all necessary safeguards of privacy, and it is eminently proper that telegraph operators should even be restrained by statutory penalties from willfully disclosing the contents of messages in their custody or passing through their hands. The business interests of their employers and those who patronize them render such enactments necessary and proper; nevertheless, such considerations have never been permitted by any enlightened Legislature nor by any intelligent judicial tribunal that has yet been called upon to expound such statutes, to defeat the superior claim which society has upon the testimony of all its members when essential to the proper administration of public justice. Without pausing to note several inaccuracies, both in the premises and conclusions stated by Judge Cooley in the extract quoted by the witness, it is sufficient to observe that the whole may be completely answered by the following brief quotation from the opinion of Judge King, in the case Henisler vs. Freedman, 2 Patson's Select Cases, 274, which the learned author may possibly have overlooked:

"It must be apparent that if we adopt this construction of the law the telegraph may be used with the most absolute security for purposes destructive to the well-being of society, a state of things rendering its absolute usefulness at least questionable. The correspondence of the traitor, the murderer, the robber, and the swindler, by means of which their crimes and frauds could be more readily accomplished and their detection and punishment avoided, would become things so sacred that they never could be accessible to the public justice, however deep might be the public interest involved in their production."

Indeed, it would seem to be a sufficient answer to all the sentimental solicitude which some seem to indulge in relation to the inviolability of telegraphic correspondence as contradistinguished from other private writings, that whoever has a communication to make which he would be either ashamed or afraid to have exposed if the ends of public justice should require it, had better employ some medium of transmission less accessible to the ordinary process of law, for, as the learned judge remarks, in the opinion just quoted:

"The law is jealous of extending the circle of persons excused or interdicted from giving testimony. Parents are required to testify against children, children against parents, brothers against brothers, and friends against friends, communications or letter, made under the deepest obligations of friendship, affection, or honor, still must be produced if deemed necessary to the ascertainment of truth and the administration of justice by the public tribunals. To this great end of social organization all secondary causes are required to give way. If there exists any great overruling public necessity which requires that telegraphic communications should be exempted from this almost universal principle, it is for the legislature and not for the judiciary to say so."

Or perhaps a more complete answer may be found in the opinion of Chief-Justice Appleton of the supreme court of Maine in the case of The State vs. Litchfield, 58 Maine, 267, which called forth the remark of Judge Cooley quoted with such solemnity by the witness:

"A verbal message communicated to the prisoner," says the learned judge, "would be admissible, and the party communicating it would be compelled to state it. So a written message, or its contents, after due notice to produce the original and a failure of its production by the party notified, would be received in evidence. The mode of transmission to the person delivering the message, whether by telegraph or otherwise, has nothing to do with the matter. The important fact is its materiality. Nor can telegraphic communications be deemed any more confidential than other communications. * * * The honest man asks for no confidential communications, for the withholding the same cannot benefit him. The criminal has no right to demand the exclusion of evidence because it would establish his guilt."

It is urged by the witness, however, that under the rules and instructions received from his employers he did not believe that the legal possession and control of the messages described in the subpœna, if any of them remained in the files of the New Orleans office, resided in him as a subordinate employé, and that he sincerely and honestly believed that under those rules and instructions he would have been guilty of a palpable breach of duty and an actual trespass if he had undertaken to rummage for them among the files and carry them away from the place where they were deposited without the permission of the competent authority of the company. The ground of defense thus submitted presents questions of law as well as of fact, which will be considered in their proper order.

The rule laid down in Archbold's Queen's Bench Practice (volume 1, page 353) upon the authority of the decision in Amy vs. Long (9 East, 473) is that it is no excuse that the legal custody of the instrument belongs to another if it be in the actual possession of the witness. The court held in that case the writ of subpœna duces tecum is of compulsory obligation on a witness to produce papers thereby demanded which he has in his possession and which he has no lawful or reasonable excuse for withholding, of the validity of which excuse the court and not the witness must judge.

Lord Ellenborough in delivering the opinion of the court said: "The only question here to be considered is whether the defendant had the warrant in his custody with the capacity of producing it. If it was in his power to have done so, and he did not, it is not to be endured that by any contrivance between him and G. necessary evidence should be withheld, and the purposes of justice should be defeated."

The witness seems to think, however, that the mere fact that he had possession of the papers called for as the employé of the telegraph company is a legal and sufficient excuse for his refusing to produce them in obedience to the mandate of the House, unless he had permission from the competent authority of the company to do so, that is, although the papers may have been in his actual custody and capable of being produced by him, yet the command of his superior officer would be the paramount law no matter how urgently the ends of public justice might demand their production. The only American case cited in support of this position is that of The President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Utica vs. Hillard, 5 Cowen, 153. In that case a subpœna duces tecum was issued at the instance of Hillard, the defendant in the action, commanding one Collings, the clerk of the bank, who was plaintiff, to produce certain books and papers which belonged to the bank, and the question having arisen on his refusal to produce them, the court said "the obligation of Collings to produce the books upon the duces tecum depends on the question whether they were in his possession and under his control. He was the mere clerk of the plaintiffs, and in that character had no such property in, or possession of, the books as imposed the obligation to bring them. They were under the control of the cashier, who might forbid their removal or place them beyond the reach of the witness." So it will be seen that the reason assigned by the court for refusing to enforce the subpœna was that the clerk was not the custodian of the books, as any one at all acquainted with the organization of banking institutions can readily understand.

The judgement having been reversed, the defendant sent out a subpœna duces tecum commanding the cashier to produce the papers, and upon his refusing to do so a motion was made for an attachment against him, which was overruled on the proper grounds that "the course for proving the books or papers of a bank where it is the adverse party is to give notice to produce them, and on its non compliance, to show the contents by inferior evidence as in other cases." It is true the court in overruling the motion uttered an obiter dictum unsupported by either principle or authority, to the effect that the cashier of a bank holds its books and papers in the same character that an attorney holds the papers of his client, and intimated that he could not on that account be coerced to produce them upon subpœna duces tecum; but, as has already been observed, the point was decided upon the familiar principle of common law, that a party to an action at law could not be compelled to furnish evidence to his adversary, whether that party were a corporation or a natural person, but might choose between the alternative of producing the books and papers or having their contents proven by evidence aliunde. The case has consequently no significance as authority upon the question under consideration.

The attention of your committee has been called to two English election cases, reported in O'Malley & Hardcastle's Election Petitions, known as the "Taunton Case" and the "Strand Case," in each of which an officer of the post-office was excused from producing telegrams in his hands as such. It will be observed, however, that there is such a wide difference in the circumstances attending those cases and the one at bar that the opinions expressed therein, even if they had not been delivered with great doubt, as both of them were, can afford no authoritative guide to a conclusion in this. It must be remembered that in each of those cases the witness was a government official, engaged in a department depending for its efficiency, as well as the extent of its patronage, upon an implied pledge of the confidence of the Crown, the sovereign power. Hence there was a strong reason for the ground, and the sole ground upon which the witnesses were excused, namely, the impolicy of the Crown—the only power which could compel its agent to disclose the messages in his possession—violating the confidence it had invited and the faith it had impliedly pledged in establishing its postal telegraph. It will be observed, moreover, that in neither of the cases was it denied that cases might arise in which it would be proper for the Crown to violate even that pledge, but the contrary plainly intimated in both. It is scarcely necessary to add that no such circumstances exist here, and that consequently the cases can have no analogy to the one under consideration. Nor do your committee deem it necessary to add to the length of this paper by reviewing the English cases cited by the witness in support of his view of the question under discussion, in order to show their want of analogy to other reasons that might be urged against their consideration as authority here, but will call attention to one directly in point which seems to have escaped the observation of the witness and his counsel. It is the case of Ince, decided in the court of common pleas in 1869, and reported in 20 Law Times N. S., 421:

"Mr. James Ince, examined by James, said he was a telegraph clerk in charge at Coventry.

"Question. Do you produce any telegram from London from Mr. Seymour? First, give any from Mr. Seymour, whether to Leicester or London.

"Answer. I have one or two from Mr. Seymour, but I have instructions from our secretary not to let those papers leave my hands.

"James. You must address yourself to his lordship.

"Witness. (addressing his lordship.) I have instructions not to let those papers leave my hands and to answer no question unless I am authorized by you.

"Willes, J. The secretary has no such power. The only persons who can refuse to answer questions are attorneys, and of course counsel, who would stand on the same footing for a stronger reason. I do not enter into any questions whether another class is or is not privileged. I do not choose to introduce matter that is doubtful; but, with the exception perhaps of people in government offices, as to matters of state, and counsel, and attorneys, I do not know of any class that is privileged. On another class the question might arise, but I do not mention it here. It is quite clear that telegraph companies are not privileged.

"Witness. Then I am authorized by you to produce these papers to counsel?

"Willes, J. From what you have stated has passed with the secretary, it is quite clear that his attention has been called to the subject, and he has sent you to represent him, and I must address you exactly as I would address the secretary. If you did not produce these papers everybody connected with the telegraph company who could lay his hand on them would be subject to be brought here and to be punished for not producing them."

The telegrams were read.

But admitting for the sake of the argument that the witness could not be compelled to produce the telegrams called for without the consent of his employers, your committee find from his own answer that at the time the papers were demanded by the committee he actually had that permission.

According to the witness's own statement the following was the standing rule of the company prior to May 2, 1873:

"94. No original message or duplicate of a received message will be permitted to leave the possession of the company except by authority of an executive officer. Whenever a manager or other employé is subpœnaed to produced messages in court or before commissioners, he will notify the secretary of the company at once by telegraph for instructions."

The ninety-fourth rule, above mentioned, was modified in 1873, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, May 2, 1873.

Executive Order No. 147.

Rule 94 is hereby modified as follows:

No original sent message or duplicate of a received message will be allowed to pass out of the possession of the company except by authority of an executive officer.

Whenever a manager or other employé is subpœnaed on the part of the sender or receiver of a message to produce it before a court or other legal tribunal, he will comply with the subpœna and afterward return the message to the files. When subpœnaed by any other party than the sender or receiver, he will take the message into court and submit to the judge that he ought not to produce it, the communication being privileged, and that he cannot do so unless a rule of the court is entered requiring it. If such rule is entered the manager must obey it, asking the clerk to give him a copy of the rule and message.

The subpœna and other papers in connection therewith should be retained on file with the message to which they relate.

WILLIAM ORTON, President.

This order the witness admits was in force at the time the subpœna was served upon him; and it would be mere trifling with the patience of the House to pretend that it does not authorize any manager or other employé of the Western Union Telegraph company to obey any subpœna duces tecum issued by lawful authority by at once producing the telegrams demanded, if in his possession, without telegraphing to the secretary of the company for instructions as required by rule 94. It is manifest that it was intended to avoid unnecessary delay in such matters, as well as useless annoyance to an officer of the company, perhaps at a remote point from the place of investigation, by investing each manager or other employé in possession of dispatches with permission to carry them immediately to the tribunal demanding them, with general directions to secure the company as far as possible from all blame, by taking certain prescribed steps to throw the responsibility of exposing their contents upon the tribunal ordering their production.

It will not do to say that such permission extended no further than to take such messages before courts of justice. The language of the order is not merely permissive, but mandatory. It leaves no discretion in the employé, but commands him to do what is therein required whenever subpœnaed to produce messages before a court "or other legal tribunal." In view of the plain language of this order it is more than idle to pretend that the witness was the mere depositary of the messages, with no power to "rummage for them among the files," or to carry them before the committee in obedience to the subpœna without being "guilty of a palpable breach of duty and an actual trespass." The plain simple truth is, so far from having no authority to obey the subpœna, he was "guilty of a palpable breach of duty" by violating the standing rule of the company in failing to do so.

Having it thus clearly within his power to produce the papers in his custody at the time of the service of the subpœna, any subsequent order he may have received from Merriweather or Van Horne or Orton or any one else could avail him nothing as an excuse for refusing to do so. In the language of Lord Ellenborough, in Amy vs. Long: "If it was in his power to have done so, and he did not, it is not to be endured that by any contrivance between him and either or all of them necessary evidence should be withheld and the purposes of justice defeated."

The witness claims, however, that the subpœna served upon him was "not in form or substance a subpœna to him, or to any one except to John G. Thompson named therein; and that said paper is not in any sense an order or direction of this House subject to obedience or disobedience by him, the witness.

It might possibly be too harsh to say that this is a subterfuge, but it is certainly not going too far to pronounce it an after-thought, especially when the language of the writ is interpreted in the light of the witnesses own conduct and statements after it was served upon him. The language of the subpœna is as follows:

By authority of the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

To JOHN G. THOMPSON, Esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special messenger:

You are hereby commanded to summon E. W. Barnes, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at New Orleans, Louisiana, to be and appear before the Louisiana affairs special committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, and with you bring all telegrams sent or received by William Pitt Kellogg, &c., at the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, New Orleans, from and after the 15th day of August, 1876, in their chamber in the city of New Orleans, Saint Charles Hotel, forthwith, then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee. Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives at the city of Washington this 13th day of December, 1876.

[SEAL.] SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker.
Attest:
GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk.

It is true that by a clerical misprision the pronoun "you" is used instead of "him," nevertheless when the subpœna was served upon him Mr. Barnes understood it precisely as every other sane mind on the continent would have understood it. He understood it to be a command to him—Mr. Barnes—to produce the telegrams therein designated. He accordingly at once sent the following dispatch to his superior officer:

NEW ORLEANS, 13 December, 1876.

To C. G. M., Superintendent, Mobile:

I am subpœnaed to produce all messages sent and received by W. P. Kellogg and others from and after 15 August by congressional committee. Had I better produce as far as in my possession, leaving those not, for further inquiry, if it is to be done?

E. W. BARNES.

But if such injustice could by any possibility be done to Mr. Barnes's common sense as to suppose that he could have believed that the paper served upon him was "not in form or in substance a subpœna to him," or that he could have mistaken the true meaning and intent of the mandate to produce the messages, notwithstanding the clerical misprision, it would at least be some slight compensation for the outrage upon his intelligence to give him some credit for candor and fairness, and to suppose that he would have told the committee that he did not know or believe from the terms of the writ that he was desired or commanded to produce the telegrams described. Had he done so he would not have been sent here until his misapprehension had been corrected and a fair opportunity afforded him to act with a distinct knowledge of the true meaning of the writ. But the committee were apprised that he needed no such information, for he distinctly stated under oath that he did understand that he was required by the subpœna to bring the messages, as witness his answer to the following plain question:

"You answered that you were subpœnaed to appear and produce telegrams sent by and received by parties named in this subpœna?

"Answer. Yes, sir."

The witness knew, therefore, what the real meaning of the paper was just as distinctly and certainly as if there had been no clerical error in its language at all; he knew that he was commanded to bring the telegrams just as perfectly as if the pronoun "him" had been really employed instead of the word "you," and yet with this distinct, confessed knowledge on his part, he chose to disobey the subpœna upon the assurance of Mr. Orton that he would take the responsibility.

In view of these facts it would seem that the pretense that the witness should be excused on account of a forced construction of the words of the subpœna, which perhaps never occurred to him until "advised by counsel," is scarcely up to the dignity of a decent quibble.

By way of further objection to the subpœna, the witness excepts to the manner in which the desired papers are described, and insists that it is in effect a "general warrant," and within the prohibition of the fourth amendment to the Constitution. Without diverging here into a history of the abuses of those unauthorized engines of executive power known as "general warrants," or pausing to inquire into the circumstances arising out of such abuses, which led to the authoritative declaration of these essential elements of personal liberty, protected by the fourth amendment to the Federal Constitution, which must be familar to every student of political history, it is perhaps sufficient to say that in the hundreds of instances in which the subpœna duces tecum has been resorted to in the British Parliament, the English courts, the Congress and Legislatures of the United States, and in our Federal and State courts, the similarity which the witness supposes to exist between that writ and the "general warrants" condemned by the constitutional provision cited by him has never yet been detected.

Again he says:

"I am further advised by my counsel that no judicial tribunal, proceeding in due course of law, would compel a witness to obey a subpœna duces tecum in such general form as I have mentioned, and that such attempts have often been condemned in the highest courts as efforts to abuse and prostitute the administration of justice by turning such subpœnas into bills of discovery."

And as evidence of the frequency with which such subpœnas as the one under consideration have been condemned by the highest courts, he cites two English cases, the Attorney-General vs. Wilson, 9 Simons, 528, in which the court said the description of the books and papers was so vague that the court could not enforce the subpœna, and Lee vs. Angas, law reports, 2 equity, 63, in which the subpœna was objected to because it called "upon the witness to ransack his papers for a period of thirty-three years," but in which the witness was nevertheless required by the court to produce the papers, inasmuch as he had admitted that he had them in his possession.

A variety of adjudged cases might be cited against the doctrine asserted by the witness in this particular, but a most complete answer to his objections to the subpœna may be found in the opinion of Judge Dillon, concurred in by Judge Treat, in a recent case of some celebrity, The United States vs. Orville E. Babcock, 3 Dillon's C. C. R., 567, where the correct rule, and the one which has been followed by the committee in this instance, is very clearly and succinctly stated.

A subpœna duces tecum had been issued in that case requiring William Orton to produce copies of all telegrams received through the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Long Branch, in the State of New Jersey, from the 15th of June to the 15th of September, 1874, and from June 15 to September, 1875, addressed to General O. E. Babcock, signed John McDonald, John A. Joyce, John, or J.; with books showing the delivery of the same; all telegrams sent from Long Branch through said office during said months, signed O. E. Babcock, O. E. B., Bab., or B., addressed to John McDonald, or John A. Joyce, Saint Louis, Missouri, or Ripon, Wisconsin; all telegrams sent through the office of said company at the city of New York, upon the 9th, 10th, 11th, or 12th days of December, 1874, signed John McDonald, John, Mac, or Mc., addressed to John A. Joyce, Saint Louis, Missouri, or General O. E. Babcock, Washington, District of Columbia; also copies of all telegrams received from the city of Saint Louis, at the city of New York on the 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th and 29th days of October, 1874, addressed to Mrs. John A. Joyce, Mrs. Kate M. Joyce, Mrs. Kate Joyce, Kate Joyce, or Kate M. Joyce, with books showing their delivery. Mr. Orton, as president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, appeared by counsel and moved to quash the subpœna on the ground that it had been improvidently issued. The court, after hearing elaborate argument and a thorough examination of the authorities, proceeded to dispose of the various objections to the subpœna, and among other things said:

"The only other objection was that the petition and writ do not sufficiently identify the messages or show them to be in the possession of the company, and that the writ in fact requires the company to search for these messages. We think that the objection is not made with a proper view of the statements of the petition in that regard, and of the functions of the writ. It is very easy, if Mr. Orton or the company is not in possession of the papers, for them to come here and say 'We have no such papers.' That excuses them to the court, if the court is satisfied that such is the fact. But some degree of certainty is undoubtedly required in undertaking to specify the papers, and we have looked through books which have been referred to by counsel and others, and we find the law and practice to be quite well settled. It is this: The papers are required to be stated or specified only with that degree of certainty which is practicable, considering all the circumstances of the case, so that the witness may be able to know what is wanted of him and to have the papers on the trial, so that they can be used if the court shall then determine that they are competent and relevant evidence. * * * The writ describes with sufficient particularity, indeed with all the particularity that seemed to be practicable under the circumstances, the very messages that are wanted.

"It is objected that the writ as framed in effect, though not in terms, commands Mr. Orton to search for the messages. It is the duty of a person to whom such a writ is directed to make reasonable search for the papers and documents if in his possession."

This plain, practical, common-sense rule, so clearly expressed by the court, which has been followed by the committee in this instance and which will doubtless be observed by every honorable congressional committee in discharge of like duties, would seem to be sufficient to quiet all undue apprehensions of "drag nets" and other instrumentalities which are supposed to be inimical to the privacy of innocent telegraphic correspondence.

The witness finally under the advice of counsel suggests the possibility that he would have laid himself liable to a criminal prosecution under section 3763 of the revised statutes of Louisiana had he produced the telegrams demanded in the subpœna, and so perhaps he might, as any innocent man is liable to be prosecuted either through malice or mistake for any crime whatever; but it requires but little reflection to convince any legal mind that he would not have been guilty of a misdemeanor and that he could not be convicted of such in any just and enlightened court, either in Louisiana or elsewhere, for obeying the subpœna.

The witness being a layman may not have known, and possibly his counsel may not have remembered at the moment, that in order to constitute a crime or misdemeanor the act done must have been willfully committed, and that the production of the papers by him in obedience to the command of one having lawful authority to require them to be produced would in no sense be an act of his own volition, but of the party ordering it to be done. Now, it has never been questioned that the House of Representatives has the inherent power under the Constitution from the very nature and purposes of its organization to institute any investigation which in its judgment may be necessary to the proper discharge of any of its functions, that in such investigations it has the power to examine witnesses, and to require the production of any paper that may be necessary to render the same effectual, and that its jurisdiction in that regard is co-extensive with the limits of the United States, including Louisiana. It is furthermore certain that it may in the exercise of those powers act through a committee regularly appointed and authorized for that purpose. These principles are so universally understood and admitted that it requires neither argument or authority for their illustration. It follows, therefore, that the law of any State which might either directly or by implication undertake to abridge the exercise of any of these powers by the House would be in derogation of its constitutional functions and to that extent absolutely void. The question then in this case is not whether Congress can curtail the powers of the Legislature of Louisiana, but whether the Legislature can abridge the true scope and intendment of the Constitution of the United States.

There is another principle that should be borne in mind in this connection, and that is that the statutes of Louisiana must be construed, as they doubtless will be by the courts of that State, according to the true intent and meaning of the Legislature which enacted them, and that the statute cited by the witness cannot be construed to apply to a telegraph operator or employé who produces a telegram in obedience to legal process regular on its face, and emanating from a source legally empowered to issue it, any more than a statute making it a felony for any one to draw blood in the street should be held to embrace the case of a surgeon who should open the vein in the arm of a person who had fallen upon the sidewalk in a fit of cerebral congestion that might otherwise have caused his death.

The books abound in illustrations of this principle. For instance, in Lee v. Birrell, 3 Campbell, 387, where a witness refused to produce a certain book or to answer any question concerning the defendant's acts as collector, on the ground that before entering upon his office as clerk to the commissioners they had administered to him an oath not to disclose anything he should learn in that capacity respecting the property tax except with their consent, or by force of an act of Parliament, Lord Ellenborough said:

"I clearly think the oath contains an implied exception of evidence to be given in a court of justice in obedience to a writ of subpœna. The witness must produce the book and answer all questions respecting the collection of the tax as if no such oath had been administered to him."

So also grand jurors are generally, if not invariably, sworn to keep secret what may transpire in the grand-jury room, yet it has never been disputed that where the testimony of a grand juror as to what has taken place there is necessary in a court of justice he must testify notwithstanding his oath of secrecy. So also the members of courts-martial are sworn to the maintenance of secrecy as respects certain parts of their proceedings, yet when it becomes necessary that those proceedings shall be known in a court of justice they are obliged to testify in regard to them.

It was manifestly the intention of the Legislature in passing the law cited by the witness to protect the interests of telegraph companies, as well as of their patrons, by making it a penal offense for an operator to willfully, wantonly, or fraudulently expose or make use of messages in their custody or passing through their hands, and not to defeat the ends of public justice or public duty. And fortunately there have been solemn judicial decisions to that effect directly in point.

The statute of Louisiana is almost a literal copy of a similar provision enacted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, April 14, 1851. On the trial of the case of Henisler vs. Freedman, already cited, which took place in the June following, David Brooks, the manager of the Ohio and Atlantic Telegraph Company, on being required to produce certain dispatches, pleaded the Pennsylvania statute and his fear of prosecution thereunder as an excuse for refusing to do so, precisely as the witness has done in this instance, but the court held that he was bound to produce the telegrams, and that in so doing he would commit no violation of the statute then recently passed.

Again: The statute, 17 Victoria, chapter 2, section 9, incorporating the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, provided that "every operator, agent, or servant of said company employed in the transmission or delivery of intelligence or messages shall before he enters on the duties of his office make oath before a judge or a justice of the peace that he will not willfully divulge the contents of any message transmitted by the said company or left with any of its operators or servants for transmission or delivery; and every person violating the said oath shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year and by a fine not exceeding £200."

In Waddell's case, reported in 8 Jurist, N. S., part 2, 181, Mr. John Waddell was sworn and requested to disclose the contents of a message which had been transmitted by the company, but declined to do so on the ground that as an operator in the employment of the company he would be liable to the penalties denounced by the act just recited; and the question being submitted to the Lord Chief-Justice he took time to consider, and after deliberation delivered the following judgment:

"In this case, after full consideration of the general law relating to privileged communications, and as to the true construction of the legislative enactment set forth in the special case, and the decision of Lord Ellenborough in Lee vs. Birrell under circumstances so very analogous, I do not entertain a doubt that the communications or messages through telegraph offices are not in law privileged communications, and that Mr. Waddell and others in similar positions are compelled to attend a judicial proceeding, they are bound to disclose the contents of such messages, and that in so doing they do not at all violate the oath they have taken that they will not willfully divulge the contents of messages, nor do they subject themselves to any prosecution under that enactment."

As to the dispatches which the witness had transmitted to his superior officers before the service of the subpœna upon him, he could not of course be expected or compelled to produce them, as they had passed beyond his control, but your committee, in view of the law and facts presented in the whole case, are of the opinion that Mr. Barnes was legally bound to produce to the committee all dispatches within the description contained in the subpœna which remained in his possession at the time he was served with the subpœna, and that he could not evade the obligation to produce such telegrams by delivering them up to Mr. Orton, Mr. Merriweather, or any one else after he was subpœnaed to produce them, and that in refusing to produce those in his possession he was guilty of a contempt of the authority and a breach of the privilege of the House of Representatives. They would therefore recommend the adoption of the resolutions;

Which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read the resolutions reported by the committee, as follows:

Resolved, That E. W. Barnes be required to produce to the select committee of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, the telegrams mentioned in the subpœna which had not been sent to Mobile by order of the superintendent before the service of the subpœna upon him on the 13th of December, 1876.

Resolved, That said Barnes be again brought to the bar of the House and the Speaker then demand of him if he is now willing to produce to said committee the telegrams mentioned in the subpœna which had not been sent by him to Mobile before the 13th of December, 1876, when the subpœna was served on him, and whether he will do so.

Resolved, That if said Barnes shall answer that he is now willing to produce said telegrams to said committee, and promises to do so, that he be allowed to do so without unnecessary delay, and upon so doing he shall be discharged from custody.

Mr. KNOTT. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish the gentleman would state whether the committee has found in that report—I did not catch the entire reading of it—that this subpœna was a proper subpœna to him, on which we can base proceedings for contempt.

Mr. KNOTT. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, I will say that a majority of the committee were of the opinion that this was a legal and sufficient subpœna. There were others on the committee who denied its efficiency, who nevertheless concurred unanimously in the resolutions presented as the conclusions of the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish the gentleman would put it in a shape where the House can demand an answer to the questions propounded and if he refuses the contempt will be in his refusal to do it, but not the refusal to answer under this subpœna.

Mr. KNOTT. If the gentleman had listened to the resolutions, he would have found that they required that precisely to be done.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; but I would like to hear the resolutions again read.

The Clerk again read the resolutions.

Mr. GARFIELD. A single question more. As I understand, from the reading of the resolutions, there is nothing in them that lays the foundation for a contempt for not heretofore producing the messages called for. If the witness shall refuse to produce them now, that will be the foundation for the contempt; is that it?

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman can put his own construction upon the resolutions.

Mr. GARFIELD. I want to know the construction that the committee puts upon them.

Mr. KNOTT. The construction of the committee is contained in the report. The resolutions are susceptible of the construction that the witness will be in contempt if he violates the order now made or sought to be made in the first resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is satisfactory; I have no further question to ask.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the resolutions be again reported.

Many MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. CONGER. O-h, y-e-s! [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. As this is an important proceeding, the Chair would suggest that it would be better to have the resolutions again read.

The resolutions were again read.

The question was then taken, and the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House, the Sergeant-at-Arms will now produce the witness E. W. Barnes at the bar of the House.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS then appeared at the bar of the House accompanied by Mr. Barnes, and said:

Mr. Speaker, in obedience to the order of the House, I have now at its bar the witness E. W. Barnes.

The SPEAKER. I am directed, Mr. Barnes, by the House to ask you if you are now willing to produce before the committee sitting in New Orleans, of which WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, the telegrams mentioned in the subpœna served upon you which had not been sent by you to Mobile before the 13th day of December, 1876, when the subpœna was served?

Mr. HOAR. I would inquire of the Chair if the resolutions reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and adopted by the House have been read to the witness? If not, I think they should be read to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a very proper suggestion. The Chair understood that the witness was present in the Hall when the resolutions were read and adopted. Perhaps it would be as well to have all the resolutions read in the hearing of the witness for his information.

The Clerk accordingly read the resolutions just adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Barnes, are you now willing to produce before the committee sitting in New Orleans, of which WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, the telegrams mentioned in the subpœna which had not been sent by you to Mobile before the 13th day of December, 1876, when the subpœna was served upon you?

Mr. BARNES, (the witness.) Mr. Speaker, when I left New Orleans I was necessarily superseded, being under heavy bonds and being unwilling to be responsible for the money and business of the office when not personally present; I am therefore not at present in control of anything or any messages in the New Orleans office. Should I come in possession of the messages again, and should there prove to be any such messages there as are described in the subpœna, I will willingly produce them.

The SPEAKER. The witness at the bar is in the charge and custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. KASSON. Is there not another question in the resolution adopted by the House? I had the impression that there were two questions.

The SPEAKER. There is no instructions for the Chair to make any other inquiry.

Mr. KASSON. I understood the resolution to embrace two questions; I may be in error about that.

The SPEAKER. The resolution states conditionally that if said Barnes shall answer that he is now willing to produce said telegrams before said committee and shall promise to do so, he shall be allowed an opportunity to do so without unnecessary delay, and that upon his doing so he shall be discharged from custody.

Mr. KASSON. Then there is no other question but the one propounded by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. There is no other question.

Mr. GARFIELD. The witness is not now in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but in the custody of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that the execution of the order of the House requires him to declare that the witness at the bar is in the charge and custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the Chair by that declaration decide that the witness has not answered as the resolution directs?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the witness has not answered as he should have answered, categorically.

Mr. KASSON. If the Speaker will permit me, I will say that the witness is not discharged from custody until the House so orders; that is the uniform practice of the House. The Speaker cannot order him to be discharged without a previous resolution of the House.

The SPEAKER. By the resolution the Sergeant-at-Arms is made the custodian of the witness.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Sergeant-at-Arms has delivered up his custody to the House.

The SPEAKER. And the House has passed a resolution, the effect of which is to again place him in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, if the House has so resolved.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The order of the House was given when the resolution was passed, to the effect that if the witness shall refuse to answer he of course should be committed for contempt.

The SPEAKER. And the resolutions adopted to-day are in entire harmony with that.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Speaker will allow me——

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that the witness has now answered to the House, and there is no power but the House that can determine whether his answer is satisfactory. Until the House acts upon that subject, the witness is not discharged from the custody of the House nor delivered over to the Sergeant-at-Arms. If the House now declares that his answer is satisfactory, then his discharge will follow as the result of such declaration.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not the effect of the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the House declares that his answer is not satisfactory, and orders his commitment again to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, then of course he is so committed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman misapprehends the effect of the resolution. I ask that it be again reported. The present action does not discharge the witness; it is not so intended.

The SPEAKER. Nor did the Speaker intend to have it supposed that he had any power to commit.

Mr. HOLMAN. The witness still remains in custody under that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution passed to-day affirms the former action of the House putting the prisoner in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. HOLMAN. The witness is to be discharged when he shall comply with the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair merely made his statement in conformity with that order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The resolution furnishes to the witness an opportunity to comply with the order of the House; and on doing so, he is discharged.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Or on promising to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; on doing so.

Mr. KASSON. I think that the only point on which there can be any difference arises from the expression of opinion on the part of the Speaker that the witness had not purged himself from contempt. Of course it is the House only that can express such an opinion. I agree with the Speaker that the witness is in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until otherwise ordered by the House; and it remains for the gentleman in charge of this matter, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to offer hereafter such resolution based upon this reply as he may think proper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he has made no mistake about this question. In the comparatively recent case of Mr. Stewart, the then occupant of the chair, following the practice in such cases, decided that the witness at the bar must make categorical answer. The present occupant of the chair only stated his opinion that this witness had not made a categorical answer.

Mr. BRIGHT. I submit that the resolution we have already adopted provides the precise time when the witness shall be discharged; and it is when he has complied with the terms of the resolution which expresses the action of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the Chair will entertain at any time, as a matter of privilege, a resolution proposing to discharge the witness, if the House sees fit to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not decide that point now. He thinks that the question of privilege is exhausted so far as this report is concerned when definite action has been taken on the report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But I presume the Chair will still hold that so long as Mr. Barnes remains in custody a resolution relative to him is privileged.

The SPEAKER. It would come up as new matter, and of course in a new relation of the case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But still it would be privileged.

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir; in a new relation of the case.

Mr. HALE. I do not say that the case I am about to state has arisen; but supposing that the answer of the witness had been such that a majority of members believed it purged him of contempt and that he should be discharged; does the Chair, in his intimation that the witness is still in custody, go so far as to rule that in the case I have supposed a motion would not be in order from the floor to discharge him?

The SPEAKER. When the supposition which the gentleman states is realized then the Chair will decide that point.

Mr. HALE. But my point is that, supposing in the judgment of a certain number of members, making in the aggregate a majority, such a case has arisen, does the Chair hold that in this case, with the witness before the House, a motion would not be entertained to discharge him, but that the Speaker might by virtue of his position rule the witness to be still in custody?

The SPEAKER. The original resolution continues in force, and its effect is to keep the witness in custody. The Chair has never made any such ruling as seems to have been apprehended by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I only wanted to know the extent of the ruling, because this is of course not the end of proceedings in like matters. I wanted to know for my own satisfaction, and perhaps for the information of other members, whether at this stage of proceeding in a like transaction the Chair would not recognize a motion, if it were made, to discharge the prisoner.

The SPEAKER. So far as the Chair is able to gather the meaning of the gentleman, he will state that this proposition comes before the House from a committee who were charged with its consideration; that the chairman of the committee demanded the previous question on the resolution. Upon that demand a majority of the House had it within their power either to bring about a direct vote upon the resolution, or if the demand for the previous question should not be sustained, then to admit any amendment which the gentleman from Maine or any other gentleman might wish to offer. But if the gentleman reporting the resolution demands the previous question and the previous question be sustained and the main question ordered, then the Speaker does hold that no amendment, such as proposing the discharge of this witness, would be in order.

Mr. HALE. Of course, then, the Speaker decides that the House has no control over it at present.

The SPEAKER. Not until the question so far as the report of the committee has been disposed of.

Mr. KASSON. According to my recollection of the precedents, Mr. Speaker, on the response of the witness in pursuance of an order which the House has made, and which is executed on the floor, that response of the witness is followed by a resolution declaring the disposition the House wishes to make on that answer. In other words, I suggest the offering of a resolution, to which I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky, of this nature: that the witness be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and his answer to the question propounded by the Speaker be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The necessity for it arises, I judge, from the remark of the Speaker that he does not regard the witness as saying categorically that he is willing to produce the papers. The witness does say categorically, however, that there has been a change in his relation to the custody of the papers without his being responsible for it, and that therefore he makes the answer which he does make, that if he does come into the possession of the papers he will then produce them.

The SPEAKER. Is it modified by the answer?

Mr. KASSON. It is modified by that phrase used by the witness that he has not the power now to produce the papers, but that he is willing to do so when he shall have the power. But whatever it may be I do not wish to take up the time of the House in further discussion, and will merely suggest that, in my judgment, the question should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for further action.

The SPEAKER. The action taken by the Chair is precisely that taken by the Speaker in the similar case of Mr. Stewart, who was brought in like manner before the bar of the House for contempt in refusing to answer questions propounded to him by a committee. The statement of the Chair was in exact harmony and accord with all the proceedings of the House at that time.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which the House has passed, if I understand it correctly, provided a contingency in which the witness should be released if he answered to the satisfaction of the House. His answer has been read. It strikes me that the Speaker has assumed individually to pass upon the sufficiency of that answer, which is a prerogative belonging only to the House. It seems to me, sir, that the House, by resolution, should take further action in this matter, remanding the witness to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms for contempt; and that it does not belong to the Speaker to decide that question without action by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that nothing could be further from his purpose than to assume anything. He has disclaimed any assumption in the matter whatever. What he has done has been in strict harmony with the instructions of the House contained in the last paragraph of the resolution which was adopted. This it was the duty of the Chair to do. The House passed an order in this matter, and it was his duty to see that that order was executed.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. The fact is that the Speaker alone has decided the sufficiency of the response, as I understand it. This House, and not its Speaker, should pass upon that matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only stated, as he was bound in duty to state, that the witness at the bar remained in the custody and charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms; that is all.

Mr. KASSON. If the Chair will have the clause of the last resolution read, he will find, I think, that the resolution omits to say what shall be done with the witness.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that, if these gentlemen would recur to the resolution passed when Mr. Barnes was last brought to the bar of the House, the difficulties which seem to be upon their minds would be removed. That resolution, sir, distinctly provides that Mr. Barnes shall remain in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until he shall be discharged by order of the House. That is already provided for in advance.

The SPEAKER. And what the Speaker has said and done has been in strict compliance with the instructions of the House contained in the resolution adopted by the House.

Mr. KNOTT. But in order, sir, to relieve this matter from all difficulty I offer this resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the answer made by the witness, E. W. Barnes, to the questions propounded to him by the Speaker under the resolution of the House is not deemed sufficient; and that he be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and by him closely kept until he shall produce to the committee all telegrams demanded from him and be discharged from custody by order of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist upon the House passing at this moment upon the sufficiency of that answer, assuming that it is in his power to answer, when he answers that it is not in his power. I hope he will allow it to be referred to his committee, to consider what ought to be done.

Mr. KNOTT. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that, if the previous question should be sustained and there should be a desire to discuss the resolution for an hour, gentlemen on the other side can have half of that hour.

Mr. KASSON. That is fair.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will also open the door to receive an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] demands the previous question on the resolution which he has submitted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that there will be no chance for debate on the resolution after the previous question is ordered, this not being a report of a committee.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry: Whether if the previous question is sustained, there will be the hour which the gentleman from Kentucky proposes and whether his purpose will not be accomplished by his now taking the floor himself upon his resolution, with the notice that he will call the previous question at the expiration of an hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to ask consent that there should be an hour for debate after the previous question was seconded, and that one-half of it should be assigned to the one side and one-half to the other.

Mr. HOAR. But the Chair was putting the question on the demand for the previous question, without first asking that consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear any dissent, and supposed there was none.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Supposing the witness at the bar desires to make further answer to the question propounded to him a while ago by the Speaker; should he be permitted to do so before the adoption of the resolution just offered?

The SPEAKER. That can be done by consent.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Then I ask unanimous consent that the witness be permitted to make further answer to the question propounded, as I am informed by his counsel that he is ready to do so.

Mr. HALE. If the gentleman from Kentucky would modify his resolution so as to provide that the witness shall remain in custody until further order of the House, that would give opportunity for further answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, that one hour be allowed for debate under the terms indicated by him. The gentleman has moved the previous question on the resolution. Is the demand for the previous question seconded?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I have asked for unanimous consent that the witness be allowed to make further answer to the interrogatory propounded to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] asks unanimous consent that the witness at the bar be permitted to make further answer to the interrogatory heretofore propounded to him by the Chair, under the direction of the House.

Mr. KASSON. And that that take precedence of the call for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It will if unanimous consent is given. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following further answer was then made by the witness and read by the Clerk:

I intended my answer to be such as the resolution seemed to me to require. I thought it proper in candor to inform the House as to my present circumstances. I am entirely willing to produce the messages, and will do so if I can.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. As I understand the position of this question and of the witness in relation to this investigation, he is now in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and remains so until he produces those papers. And as I further understand the resolution which we have just adopted, he shall still remain in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until he either positively declines to furnish the papers or until he proceeds to do so to the extent of his ability.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the substance of the last resolution.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Now if the witness answers that he is ready to produce those papers if he can, it appears to me it is all this House can require of him to do, provided he remains in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms; and if he fails to produce them then it is for the House to determine upon his discharge or upon his committal. That appears to me to be the condition of the question.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the reading of the last clause of the resolution. I think the order of the House has been fully executed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, if said Barnes shall answer that he is now willing to produce said telegrams to said committee and shall promise to do so, he be allowed an opportunity to do so without unnecessary delay, and upon his so doing he shall be discharged from custody.

Mr. KASSON. The instruction is there which I suppose will now be executed without further orders of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I desire to hear the first answer of the witness read; for if I understood it correctly he has severed his connection with the telegraph company. If that be the case, if he has been superseded, it gives an entirely different phase to this question.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact on which the Chair has not ruled.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I should like to have the first answer of the witness again read.

The SPEAKER. The first answer of the witness will be again read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

When I left New Orleans I was necessarily superseded, being under heavy bonds and being unwilling to be responsible for the money and business of the office when not personally present. I am therefore not at present in control of any thing or any messages in the New Orleans office. Should I come into possession of the messages again, and should there prove to be any such messages there as are described in the subpœna, I will willingly produce them.

Mr. HUNTON. I am authorized by the counsel for the witness to say that with the explanation contained in his first statement he is now willing to strike out the latter clause of the last answer.

The SPEAKER. The witness at the bar desires still further to modify his second answer. Is there objection?

Mr. GARFIELD. We have no right to strike out anything from the answer of the witness. The witness has.

The SPEAKER. The House has power to give consent to the witness to modify his answer. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The witness may modify his second answer in the manner he may wish.

After a pause,

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the reading of the amended answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it is not yet prepared.

After another pause,

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order. I desire to know what business is before the House.

Mr. RUSK. If there is no business before the House, I think we had better adjourn.

After a further pause,

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order of business. We have a right to know what is the amended answer of the witness and how it has been prepared.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was asked of the House and given by the House that the witness should be allowed to modify his second answer. The Chair is waiting to hear from the witness, and the Chair supposes that a reasonable time should be allowed him to confer with his counsel.

Mr. WATTERSON. The witness desires to know whether he may be allowed through counsel, on returning the amended answer, to make some verbal explanation thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House. The Chair is of the opinion that it would require unanimous consent. There has been a case where a witness was allowed to answer in a written paper prepared by his counsel.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is this case. He has done so.

The SPEAKER. It was also done in the case of Hallet Kilbourn. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kentucky to say that the witness desires to be heard through counsel? The Chair thinks that that question should be submitted to the House, and if the House is disposed to hear the witness by counsel, it can do so.

Mr. WATTERSON. The witness feels himself incompetent to explain his qualifications in his own person, and for that reason he desires to be heard for a moment, merely in explanation of his last amended answer. I move that he be allowed to do so.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. O, no. We want categorical answers and no trifling.

Mr. REAGAN. This is the first time in my life that I ever heard of an unsworn statement of attorney being offered in answer to a question propounded by a judicial tribunal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to submit the question to the House. The Chair recollects that the same request was made in a former case and that the House refused to hear the witness by counsel.

Mr. WATTERSON. The witness does not desire to submit an unsworn statement, but an explanation simply, and it is my desire that the present House of Representatives shall not take its cue from the action of former Houses in matters of this description.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. If the leave were granted the counsel, the witness would have the right to an hour for explanation.

Mr. WATTERSON. He wants only a moment to make a very necessary and proper explanation of his amended answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it competent for the House to hear the witness by counsel. The Chair merely stated that if entitled to be heard, he would be entitled to one hour.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Not by counsel.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise to inquire whether the first resolution adopted by the House does not absolutely require that the answer of the witness shall be in writing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it should be in writing.

Mr. BANKS. The witness, Mr. Speaker, has answered to the House in reply to the inquiry propounded to the Speaker by order of the House, that he will produce these papers if he can. As the Chair has said, that is an answer to the question propounded to him, but it involves a question of fact. It is manifestly impossible for the House to determine whether he can or cannot produce these papers. I think therefore that the witness should be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, in whose custody he now is, and that his answer should be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, to report hereafter what is the proper course to be taken by the House under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The witness can at any time make a communication to the House.

Mr. BANKS. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] will permit me, I will move to amend the resolution so that the answer of the witness shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before that is done I hope the witness will be heard. I cannot bear the idea that a man shall be cut off when he desires to explain his answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated more than once that he is entirely ready and willing to submit the question to the House whether they will hear the witness. If they decide to hear the witness, then the Chair believes that the witness, under the hour rule, will have the right to speak for one hour.

Mr. BANKS No answer the witness can make will help the House, unless he answers directly whether he will produce these papers or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the House by unanimous consent allow the witness an opportunity to modify his second answer.

Mr. BANKS. Let him modify it now.

Mr. RUSK. Let it be read as modified.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It seems to me that the House is drifting away from the question before it. The contempt which this witness committed was in not producing these papers when called on by the committee in New Orleans.

The chairman of that committee has reported to the House, and the Committee on the Judiciary has sustained that report, that when this witness was first called before the committee in New Orleans he said that he had at least a part of the telegrams called for by the committee, and the chairman understood him to say that on a certain day or hour he would furnish copies of these telegrams provided the committee would furnish the necessary clerical force to copy them. When that time arrived, an issue arose between the chairman and the witness, the chairman insisting that he had understood the contract or agreement between them to be that he would produce copies of the telegrams if the necessary clerical force was furnished, and when that time expired the witness said that he did not mean to say that he would produce them, but that he could produce them if the clerical force were furnished. The question is upon his contempt in not producing them at that time.

Unless we hold him for that contempt, this process of contempt under subpœna duces tecum is absurd, because a witness would have nothing to do when he was served with a subpœna but to pass the papers to somebody else or resign his office and say "I am not able to produce them because after receiving the summons I placed them in the hands of somebody else." I think that the case goes back to the beginning, and that the witness should be committed for a contempt in not having produced the papers when it was in his power to produce them, and not fritter away our time here by listening to his statement that he cannot now produce them. Mr. Orton has been subpœnaed to produce certain papers, and since he had notice he has had time to hand those papers over to somebody else, and when he is brought to the bar of the House he will give the same answer that this witness has given, and so it will go on ad infinitum, and the 4th of March will be here and this House will be still listening to dilatory pleas by witnesses. If the House means to act upon these great questions, let them act promptly and commit this witness for his contempt in not producing the papers when required to do so at New Orleans. The questions involved are too momentous and the time too short to listen to evasive answers from recusant witnesses. Let us act, and act at once by confining the witness or abandon this line of seeking evidence. Public justice and the interests of the country demand this. Let us do it. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the galleries will not assume all the judicial functions of this House, but allow us to exercise them.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Are those in the galleries part of the one hundred thousand we have have heard so much of?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] is not in order, not being recognized by the Chair. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is recognized by the Chair to offer a resolution.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, in lieu of the one heretofore offered by me; and upon it I call the previous question.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the answer of E. W. Barnes, the witness, to the questions propounded to him by the Speaker in obedience to the resolution of the House, is not deemed sufficient, and that said Barnes is hereby adjudged to be in contempt of the authority of this House, and to have committed a breach of its privileges, in refusing to produce telegrams to the special committee, of which WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, in obedience to the subpœna served upon him on the 13th of December, 1876, and that he be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to be held in such confinement by him, until said witness shall purge himself of his contempt by producing the telegrams specified in the subpœna which he had not sent to Mobile before the subpœna was served upon him, to said select committee, or until he be discharged from custody by the order of the House.

The question was upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] a question. I propounded an interrogatory to him some time ago as to whether the contempt of the witness in this case was the refusal to obey the subpœna in the first instance, or whether it would rest upon the witness refusing to answer here the question which the Speaker of the House should propound to him. The gentleman replied to me that the answer here would lay the foundation for contempt or otherwise, according to what that answer should be. Now having made that admission, having called upon the witness and he having expressed his willingness to produce the papers; and the witness having also in good faith explained to the House that weeks before this question was propounded to him by the Speaker to-day he was discharged from the place where the papers are, that he is no longer an officer there, and has no longer any possible custody, either manual or legal, of these papers; but that if he shall be re-instated, and shall become the custodian in either sense of the papers, he would produce them, it seems to me that it is not an act of good faith to go back and punish him for not producing the papers before the committee when the subpœna was served upon him.

Mr. KNOTT. I would like to know whereabout the interrogatory comes in. The gentleman said he wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will now put the interrogatory, and ask the gentleman where he can find any justice or equity in the resolution which he has now offered?

Mr. KNOTT. That is your question, is it?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] has called the previous question upon his resolution.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Kentucky——

Many MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALE. My point of order is that the answer of the witness is pending before the House, and has not yet been completed according to the leave given him by the House. In addition to that, I appeal to the gentleman not to press his resolution until we get a full answer from the witness.

The SPEAKER. How long would the gentleman suggest that the House should wait for the answer?

Mr. HALE. I would have a monition given the witness that if he intends to finish his answer he should do so. We certainly should not be called upon to vote upon this resolution until we get the answer of the witness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the answer of the witness has been returned without modification.

Mr. HALE. The members of the House did not know that.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair did not know it until informed by the Clerk.

Mr. HALE. Before we vote upon this resolution let us have the answer read as finally left.

Mr. WATTERSON. I am requested by the witness to state that the different opinions expressed by members on the floor have so confused him that he is unable to make any amendment of his answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOTT. I would express the hope at least that the proceedings here have not so far confused the witness that he has lost sight of the plain duty required of him to produce papers for which a legal demand has been made upon him. I therefore move the previous question on the resolution I have offered, so that we may have some conclusion of this matter.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order—one which embarrasses me at least, if it will not embarrass other gentlemen. The answer made by the witness in execution of the resolution already adopted was a complete execution of the order of the House. A motion to reconsider the first order was made and laid on the table. That order has been executed by the witness; and, as I suggested some time ago, under that order the business before the House is disposed of, unless the Chair should rule that this has become a new question of privilege by virtue of the terms of this new resolution. I submit that this resolution is in conflict with the order of the House already made, and, without rescinding that previous order, is not now properly presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that all this proceeding comes from the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KASSON. This last resolution, however, is an individual one; and in order that we may at least vote intelligently upon it, if the Chair does not consider the point of order well taken that the business is disposed of as a privileged report, I ask that the disposition ordered by the first resolution be now read, and that then this resolution be read if the gentleman from Kentucky insists upon offering it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. The Chair, then, overrules my point of order?

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order? The Chair was unable to see any point of order in the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. KASSON. My point of order is that the previous resolution is to be executed and in the present situation has exhausted the power of the House over the subject; that this second resolution is not in order for that reason, and is not entitled to any privilege until the officer of the House has executed its first order; that the two resolutions are inconsistent.

The SPEAKER. That is somewhat in the nature of an argument why this second resolution should not be offered; but the Chair is unable to see any point of order in it.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was upon the adoption of the resolution submitted by Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 72, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Watterson, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Willard, and Charles G. Williams—87.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The witness is still in the custody and charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

COMMITTEE ON COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. KNOTT. The select committee appointed to inquire into the privileges, powers, and duties of the House in counting the electoral votes have instructed me to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk, and to ask its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas additional duties have been devolved by resolution of the House upon the select committee of seven appointed to inquire and report upon the privileges powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That two additional members be appointed by the Speaker to serve on said committee.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for the previous question on the adoption of this resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. KNOTT. I am instructed by the committee to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, to report in part the following resolutions for the adoption of the House; and I give notice I will call them up for consideration next Wednesday immediately after the morning hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States beg leave to report in part the following resolutions for the adoption of the House:

Resolved, First. That the Constitution of the United States does not confer upon the President of the Senate the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Second. That the only power which the Constitution of the United States confers upon the President of the Senate in respect to the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States is to receive the sealed lists transmitted to him by the several electoral colleges, to keep the same safely, and to open all the certificates or those purporting to be such in the presence of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Third. That the Constitution of the United States does confer upon the Senate and the House of Representatives the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as the electoral votes.

Fourth. That in execution of their power in respect to the counting of the electoral vote the House of Representatives is at least equal with the Senate.

Fifth. That in the counting of the electoral votes, no vote can be counted against the judgment and determination of this House of Representatives.

Sixth. That the committee have leave to sit again and report hereafter further matter for the consideration of the House.

Mr. CONGER. Is not this the same committee to which additional members have just been added?

The SPEAKER. It is the same committee.

Mr. CONGER. Then why should the report be made before those additional members have been added?

Mr. KNOTT. Simply because the committee desired to make this report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the question again.

Mr. CONGER. This committee has been enlarged by the action of the House a few minutes since, and yet the committee have now reported to the House without the concurrence of the committee as it is now organized or rather as it has been re-organized. If objection would lie to the reception to this report then I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's objection would not avail against the reception of the report. The additional members to the committee have not yet been announced. The committee making this report is a committee having full power in the premises.

Mr. CONGER. It is not the fault of the House which has ordered the additional members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he ought to have at least a minute or two of consideration before the appointment of the additional members.

Mr. CONGER. I think it would show courtesy to the House to wait until the Chair could announce the additional members of this committee.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the report be printed and recommitted.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Before disposing of this matter I wish to announce that the minority committee desire also to present their views, and ask that they be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will immediately after disposing of this motion recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] for that purpose.

Mr. KNOTT. I will include that in my motion, that the gentlemen of the minority may present their views; and that those views also be printed and recommitted.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I will also suggest that the minority of the committee have time in which to prepare their views for presentation to the House.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair would suggest that the majority report and the views of the minority be printed separately.

Mr. CONGER. O, no; print them together.

The SPEAKER. That would retard the printing of the majority report, which is now ready to be presented, while the minority ask for time in which to prepare their report.

Mr. CONGER. It will also give the Chair time to appoint the additional members of the committee.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. We should like to have the views of the minority accompany the report of the majority in print.

Mr. KNOTT. My motion is that the report just read be printed and recommitted; and that the gentlemen of the minority, at such time as may suit their convenience, may have their propositions printed also.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. No; their views as well.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Do we understand these reports are to be printed together?

The SPEAKER. That is not the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, but that the minority views shall be presented at such time as may suit their convenience, and be printed and recommitted.

Mr. KNOTT's motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNOTT. I now enter the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BANKS. I should like to know what is the understanding in reference to this matter.

The SPEAKER. The understanding is, so far as the Chair could gather, that the gentleman from Kentucky will call up the motion to reconsider on Wednesday next, after the morning hour.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Is the privilege of the committee to report at any time exhausted by the report made this morning?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is a privileged motion, which the gentleman from Kentucky can call up at any time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Was the privilege accorded to the committee of reporting at any time?

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the notice?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky gave notice in presenting this report that he would call it up for consideration on Wednesday next after the morning hour, which is his right, having made the motion to reconsider.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In reply to a resolution of inquiry dated December 29, 1876, of the House of Representatives respecting the expenditure of certain moneys appropriated by the act of August 14, 1876, for river and harbor improvements, I have the honor to transmit herewith for your information a report and accompanying papers received from the Secretary of War, to whom the resolution was referred.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 12, 1877.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 11, 1877.

MR. PRESIDENT: In reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d ultimo, requesting information concerning the action of the executive branch of the Government under the act making appropriations for river and harbor improvements, I beg leave to state the action of this Department, as follows:

The act was signed on the 14th of August, 1876, and on the same day the President sent a special message to the House of Representatives stating that he did not consider it obligatory upon him to expend all the money appropriated in the bill, and that during his term of office no money should be expended on works not clearly national; and that, owing to a contemplated loss of revenue, it might be unadvisable to expend any money upon new works.

The principles enunciated in this message have governed my action on this subject in every case presented to me. Immediately after receiving the bill, the Chief of Engineers was directed to ask for statements from the engineers in charge of works as to what works could be postponed for the present. The replies from these officers recommended the expenditure of about $4,500,000 of the appropriation.

This reduction was so slight as practically to amount to nothing; and therefore on the 4th of September, having obtained your approval, I directed the Chief of Engineers, whose knowledge of this subject is more extended than that of any other officer of the Government, to make allotments from the sums appropriated for the various works, according to the best of his judgment, and in such manner that the total amount should not exceed $2,000,000, only providing that no new works should be begun and none continued that were not national in character. In making these allotments it was found that the amount designated, $2,000,000, was not quite sufficient for the purpose of carrying on the works absolutely necessary, and, therefore, the Chief of Engineers, after an extended interview with the President, was authorized in October to increase the amount to $2,237,600. Since that date a few cases where small sums were urgently required to prevent damage, or to make important examinations, have been favorably acted upon; and possibly there may be more of them.

A full statement of these allotments up to date is contained in the accompanying report of the Chief of Engineers. The resolution also requests the President "to state under what law or authority these orders and limitations upon said act of Congress were made."

In reply I would suggest that the law and authority are found in the act itself, which appropriates certain sums to be expended for certain purposes under the direction of the Secretary of War, but is in no way mandatory upon him to expend the full amount; and a moment's reflection will show that it is not feasible to so limit his discretion, since change of plan, decrease of cost of material and labor, or any one of many other contingencies, might leave a portion of the appropriation unexpended; there are now three or four such credits in the Treasury, where they have remained for several years, and one or two cases in which appropriations for specific improvements have never been drawn upon at all. The executive officer who is charged with these expenditures is bound by his regard for the interests of the public service, but his discretion is not limited by any express provision of law.

The exercise of this discretion in the present instance has been influenced by the condition of the Treasury and the nature of the appropriations for other public works of quite as much importance as the river and harbor improvements. With the appropriations for the public buildings imperatively required by the War and other Departments of the Government reduced to less than half of the average appropriations for the past five years, it was considered that economy required a similar reduction in the expenditures for the current year upon works for the benefit of commerce and other interests of remote advantage to the Government; and with an estimated deficiency in the surplus revenue of $7,000,000, and every executive department reduced to its very minimum working force, (and in some cases below that necessary for the transaction of business,) it was determined to reduce the expenditures in that branch which could best stand the reduction, and where the least reduction had been made in the appropriations.

It should be borne in mind that these appropriations are of the character of "indefinite appropriations," i. e., they do not lapse into the Treasury if unexpended at the end of two years. Under existing laws they are at any time available for the objects designated, upon the warrant of the Secretary of War. And should the anticipations concerning the revenue prove to be unfounded, or a purpose be indicated of liberally supporting the public works of all kinds throughout the country, it may then be deemed advisable to allot a further portion, or all of the appropriation. If, however, it had been allotted at present and contracts had been entered into, there would have been no means of preventing the expenditure.

In conclusion, I submit with all respect, that while the Legislature, with the approval of the Executive, appropriates the money and specifies the purposes for which it is given, the Executive Departments of the Government are always held responsible for the expenditures, not only as to the manner, but the amount of them; and that they violate no law if they keep the expenditures within the amount appropriated, and apply them to the purposes for which they are designated.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is a brief report I trust it will be read.

The SPEAKER. The report is quite voluminous.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I do not ask for the reading.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise for the purpose of moving that the message be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed; and I desire to submit some remarks at this time on the subject of that communication.

Mr. CONGER. I would suggest to the gentleman that he should make his speech at some other time. I think the House wishes to adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I prefer to go on now. I want to send the antidote with the poison.

The question discussed in the report which comes to us from the Secretary of War is one of no ordinary import. The circumstances connected with it are of a character that should arrest the attention of this House. It will be remembered that during the last session of Congress a bill appropriating money for the improvement of rivers and harbors passed the two Houses and was approved by the President, and his approval was accompanied by a message in which he stated substantially that he would only expend so much of the money appropriated in that bill as it might seem proper should be expended; that he would see to it that no money was spent on works not national, and that no money should be spent on new works. I was struck with surprise when that message came in, and more so when, in his annual message, the President gave us an account of what had been done under that bill. I desire to present very briefly some principles of law which apply to measures of this character, as well as to call attention to the operation of the action of the President as disclosed by the different communications to which I shall refer.

The President's order resulted in an allotment of the sums to be expended under the act of the last session for the improvement of rivers and harbors which was unfair in its distribution to the different parts of the country, and the discrimination was against that part of the Union which has received far the least benefit from such appropriations and which needs those benefits most now.

The number of works for which appropriations were made in that act was		147
Number in northern and Pacific waters	107
Number in southern waters	40
		147
Number to be improved under the order of the President		68
In northern and Pacific waters	52
In southern waters	16
		68

Under this order of the President the money appropriated by law for seventy-nine different works of internal improvement was withheld in the face of the provisions of this law, enacted by Congress and approved by the President, on the assumption that these were proper and necessary, and after the President by approving this law had said the objects of appropriation were proper and the law constitutional.

The aggregate sum appropriated by this law was		$5,015,000
For northern and Pacific waters	$3,355,000
For southern waters	1,660,000
		5,015,000

The proportion of the sum which was to be expended in the improvement of southern waters was $35,000 less than one-third of the whole.

The aggregate sum to be expended under the order of the President was		$2,000,000
In northern and Pacific waters	$1,370,000
In southern waters	630,000
		2,000,000

The proportion of this sum which was to be expended in southern waters was $110,000 less than one-third of the whole.

These figures are submitted in part to show that the lawful action of Congress was more fair and just than this unlawful and arbitrary action of the President.

They also show that the President has sought to deprive the country of the use of $3,015,000, which Congress in the performance of its constitutional duty, with the formal sanction of the President, believed to be necessary for the improvement and enlargement of the commercial facilities of the country and for the development of its vast resources.

The President, in returning the bill in which these appropriations were made to this House with his approval on the 14th of August last, said:

In affixing my signature to the river and harbor bill, No. 3022, I deem it my duty to announce to the House of Representatives my objections to some features of the bill, and the reason I sign it. If it was obligatory on the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress, I should return the river and harbor bill with my objections, notwithstanding the great inconvenience to the public interests resulting therefrom, and the loss of expenditures from previous Congresses upon incompleted works. Without enumerating, many appropriations are made for works of purely private or local interest, in no sense national. I cannot give my sanction to these, and will take care that during my term of office no public money shall be expended upon them.

There is a very great necessity for economy in expenditures at this time growing out of the loss of revenue likely to arise from a deficiency of appropriations to insure a thorough collection of the same. The reduction of revenue districts, diminution of special agents, and total abolition of supervisors may result in great falling off of the revenue. It may be a question to consider whether any expenditure can be authorized under the river and harbor appropriation further than to protect works already done and paid for. Under no circumstances will I allow expenditures upon works not clearly national.

How the President has executed the purposes indicated in the foregoing message will be seen by reference to the following extract from his annual message of December 5, 1876. He says:

The appropriations for river and harbor improvements for the current year were $5,015,000. With my approval, the Secretary of War directed that of this amount $2,000,000 should be expended, and no new work should be begun and none prosecuted which were not of national importance. Subsequently this amount was increased to $2,237,600, and the works are now progressing on this basis.

In further explanation of the action of the President I read the following extracts from the annual report of General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, dated October 21, 1876. He says:

The amounts appropriated for public works on rivers and harbors by the act approved August 14, 1876, certain allotments have been made in compliance with the instructions of the Secretary of War of September 4, limiting the expenditures under the act to $2,000,000, and directing that no new work of improvement should be begun.

After setting out these allotments in his report, he says further:

The officers in charge of the improvements were notified of the amount allotted, and the works are being conducted on this basis. Operations have not been commenced upon the new works of improvement provided for in the last river and harbor act.

I present these extracts, showing the position of the President on this subject in his own language, and to avoid doing injustice to his views. I try to cultivate an habitual respect for the President of the United States, and for all others holding high official position; and I regret to be compelled to say that in my judgment I have seen no communication of equal length with his message of August 14, which I have just read, which contained so many and so material errors. As the practices of the Government and the public acts of its high officials are constantly referred to as establishing the meaning of the Constitution and as guides in its exposition, I feel that we would neglect a great duty if we should allow this matter to pass by in silence. If we were the subjects of an imperial government, whose powers were not limited in this respect, and where the will of the emperor was the law of the land, then such a course would have been allowable. But being citizens of a constitutional republic, in which the powers of Government are carefully specified, and as carefully distributed among different Departments of the Government, and their execution confided to different and distinct classes of officers, it would seem that such a course could not fail to arrest the attention of the country, and to produce the gravest apprehensions for the safety of our free, constitutional system of Government.

And it seems to be a wide departure from the views expressed by the President when entering on the duties of his great office in 1869. In pointing out the manner in which he intended to perform his official duties, in his first inaugural address, he said:

All laws will be faithfully executed, whether they meet my approval or not.

And to make this still more explicit, he added:

I shall on all subjects have a policy to recommend, but none to enforce against the will of the people.

There are various modes of expressing the will of the people in this country, the most solemn and imposing of which is in the form of laws enacted by their constitutionally chosen Representatives and Senators, sanctioned by the President. Such was the will of the people as expressed in this act for the improvement of the rivers and harbors. This lawfully expressed will of the people provided for one hundred and forty-seven different public improvements, to be made under the direction of the proper Department of the Government, and for the expenditure of $5,015,000. The will of the President is that but $2,000,000 shall be expended, and that these expenditures shall be limited to sixty-eight works of improvement.

The act of Congress required that some new works should be begun. The will of the President is that no new work shall be begun.

Congress, in the exercise of its legislative discretion, and with the sanction of the President in approving the law, said that each of the one hundred and forty-seven works provided for was a national work. The will of the President determines that some of these, without naming them, are not national works.

After a little I shall submit some authority as to the relative powers of Congress and the President over these questions. I shall also submit what the courts of the country have determined to be national works which may be provided for by law.

But before I do this I will call attention to some other matters which may be of interest in the examination of this subject.

One of the grounds assigned by the President for limiting the expenditures for this purpose was the necessity for economy. Congress would no doubt listen with great satisfaction to any recommendations of economy in expenditures which the President might make to influence their legislative action. But his open defiance of legislative authority and of a law of the land presents another question.

But the President said:

The reduction of revenue districts, diminution of special agents, and total abolition of supervisors may result in great falling off of revenue.

The only answer I shall now take time to make to this statement will be to quote the following extract from the observations made by the then chairman of the Committee of Appropriations, now the Speaker of this House, when this special message was under consideration. He said:

Now I want to state the fact that more than one-half of the revenue comes by receipts from the customs, which in no wise whatever passes under the control of Congress so far as to make appropriations necessary for their collection.

Further on he said:

There is, however, in the appropriation bill something to do with the collection of internal revenue. In regard to the internal revenue the House recommend that the collection districts should be reduced to one hundred and five; the Senate raised the number to one hundred and thirty-one, but lest the Government should be embarrassed in the collection of internal revenue the House receded from the number they had fixed at one hundred and five, and conceded the number asked by the Department, one hundred and thirty-one, which the Senate insisted upon.

And he adds:

I do not believe any of the conferees—

For the bill had gone to a conference committee—on this or the other side of the House or of the Senate will consider that we have embarrassed in any degree whatever the collection of internal revenue.

From this it will be seen that, if the statement of the President is good for anything, it is to show that his Secretary of the Treasury and a republican Senate had adopted a policy which might cripple the collection of internal revenue.

It is worthy of remembrance, too, that at the very time this special message was sent to the House, and for many months previously, the House of Representatives, under democratic control, was and had been making a most earnest effort to secure economy in the public expenditures by reducing in every way consistent with the good of the public service their amount; and that these efforts were persistently resisted by the great body of the republicans in the House, and by the republican Senate, and by the messages from the President himself sent to this House.

I think it proper, too, in this connection, to call attention to the fact that the President has approved many bills before he was called on to approve this for the improvement of rivers and harbors, four at least of which each appropriated more money than the one of 1876, and for the improvement of as great a variety of waters; and he was not, so far as we can know, beset with the constitutional scruples or the special care for economy which he has manifested in relation to this law. The following are the amounts of appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors which he has approved for the years named:

1869–'70	$3,947,900 00
1870–'71	4,407,500 00
1871–'72	5,588,000 00
1872–'73	6,102,900 00
1873–'74	5,193,000 00
1874–'75	6,643,517 50
Aggregating in six years	31,882,817 50

And averaging for these six years $298,802.91 more than the amount appropriated at the last session for these purposes. While we may not attribute sinister motives to the President, in the light of the foregoing facts it is certainly difficult to determine the real reasons for his action. He had no difficulty in approving a bill appropriating nearly $7,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors in 1875, but could only approve one for about $5,000,000 in 1876 under protest, on both economic and constitutional grounds; and certainly the latter is not more objectionable than the former on either ground.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir. I would prefer, however, if the gentleman would permit me, to finish my remarks before he asks me any questions.

Mr. CONGER. It is just one single question I desire to ask.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. The bill to which the gentleman alludes provides that this expenditure shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War. It therefore leaves a discretion as to the expenditure.

Mr. REAGAN. I am coming to that subject directly.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is criticising very much the President for using the discretion which the law gives him.

Mr. REAGAN. I do so because the President announced in advance what he would do, and subsequently stated in his annual message that the Secretary of War, with his approval, had limited the expenditures under this law.

But this matter presents points of still greater interest.

The President tells us in his last annual message that under his direction the Secretary of War had directed that no new work should be begun under the authority of this law. This is a short, simple statement. And it comes from the President of the United States, who has taken an oath that to the best of his ability he will preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States. What does it mean? Congress is the law-making power. It judges for itself as to the expediency, necessity, and constitutionality of its own action. There are but two ways in which its action can be legally questioned. The President may veto a bill for constitutional reasons. It is not so certain that he can rightfully do so for economic reasons or reasons of expediency. If he does so, the bill fails to become a law unless upon reconsideration two-thirds of each House shall vote for it notwithstanding the veto. Then the courts upon a proper case made may declare a law unconstitutional.

This law is not met in either of these ways. It is simply nullified by the single will of one man, and that man the President of the United States. He has substituted his personal wishes and will for an act of Congress, a law of the land. And one at least of his constitutional advisers, the Secretary of War, has acquiesced in and sanctioned this proceeding. A few years ago it was popular to denounce the Emperor of the French for aspiring to the personal government of France. What now shall we say of the President of this constitutional Republic when he has shown us by a great public example what an act of personal government is? If he can substitute his will for the law in this case, why not in all others? Liberty has been crushed out in other countries, but always by a series of acts—never by a single act; and these acts had a beginning, often disguised, seldom open and bold like this. It begins by striking down the partition and division of powers between the different departments of the Government as provided by the Constitution. On this subject we are told by Mr. Madison, in 1788, in the forty-seventh number of the Federalist, that—

The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny.

Montesquieu has said:

There can be no liberty where the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person or body of magistrates.

Mr. Justice Blackstone has said:

In all tyrannical governments, the supreme magistracy, or the right of both making and enforcing the laws, is vested in the same man, or one and the same body of men.

The Constitution of the United States distributes the great powers of Government into three departments: the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. It confides the power of making the laws to Congress, of construing and interpreting them to the courts, and of executing them to the President.

Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries of the Constitution, says:

Every government must include within its scope, at least if it is to possess suitable stability and energy, the exercise of the three great powers upon which all governments are supposed to rest, viz: the executive, the legislative, and the judicial powers.

He says further, that—

In absolute governments the whole executive, legislative, and judicial powers are, at least in their final result, exclusively confined to a single individual; and such a form of government is denominated a despotism, as the whole sovereignty of the state is vested in him.

And he shows, as is known to us all, that this division of the powers of Government into three departments, and the confiding of the powers and duties of each department to a separate officer or class of officers, and the prohibition of the officers of either from exercising powers or performing duties confided to one of the others, has been adopted in the constitutions of every State in the Union.

Mr. Justice Story says further:

It is no small commendation to the Constitution of the United States, that instead of adopting a new theory it has placed this practical truth as the basis of its organization. It has placed the legislative, executive, and judicial powers in different hands.

President Washington, in his farewell address, said:

Those intrusted with its (the Government's) administration should confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres. * * * The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of the departments in one, and thus creates, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. * * * Let there be no change by usurpation. For though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

If the President was not advised of the existence of these great and well-established constitutional principles when acting on this river and harbor bill, it was unfortunate for the country. If he was advised of them and chose deliberately to violate them, though we may say it with sorrow, it was a great political wrong; and the members of Congress would be unfaithful to their duties and unworthy of the trust confided in them if they were to permit it to pass by without their earnest and solemn protest.

In his special message of August 14, which accompanied his return of this river and harbor bill to the House with his approval, the President says:

> Without enumerating, many appropriations are made for works of purely private or local interest, in no sense national. I cannot give my sanction to these, and will take care that during my term of office no public money shall be expended upon them.

If this statement is true, then the Senate and House of Representatives had exceeded their powers, violated the Constitution, and attempted, under the forms of law, to pervert the public moneys to private and local uses. And if the President so believed, it would have been his plain duty to veto the bill. This would have placed Congress in a position to review its action and recede from it if wrong or justify it if right. Instead of doing this the President chose to approve the bill, make it a law, and then, in plain violation of all law, to nullify it, refuse to obey it, set it aside as no law.

The War Department is charged with the construction of public works and with the making of public improvements of this kind. In that Department this branch of the service is confided to the Bureau and Corps of Engineers. The usual course in proceeding with such works is for Congress to determine what rivers and harbors shall be improved and to direct by law that surveys and estimates be made by the Bureau of Engineers to determine the cost and practicability of such improvements. When these surveys and estimates come to Congress through the War Department, it determines upon this and any other available evidence whether such works are national in their character and whether it is expedient to appropriate money for their construction.

Now I wish to state that I gave a great deal of attention to this bill in committee, and that I do not believe there is a single work provided for in it that had not been surveyed by the United States Engineers, and the cost of the work estimated by them, and these surveys and estimates transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War. So that if there are items of appropriation in that law for works of purely private and local interest they were surveyed and estimated for and the amount and character of the commerce to be accommodated by them shown. And these surveys and estimates come to us I think in every instance without objection from the War Department.

There may have been a very few items of appropriation in this law of questionable propriety, but could not, I think, have been more than a half dozen, and each of these for very small amounts. But I am not aware of one which is not national in its character, under the Constitution, as it is interpreted by the courts and standard law-writers of the country.

In the case of the General Cass, in United States district court for eastern district of Michigan, January term, 1872, Mr. Justice Longyear says:

> Those waters are navigable in law which are navigable in fact, and they are public navigable waters in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their ordinary condition as highways of commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water.

And he adds:

> That the Saginaw River, (in Michigan,) from Saginaw City to its mouth, upon which the towage services are claimed to have been rendered, fully answers the description above given, there can be no dispute. It is, therefore, public navigable water and is clearly within the admiralty jurisdiction of this court.—American Law Times Reports, volume 5, page 13.

This river was navigable about forty miles.

In the case of the Daniel Ball, in the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, (December term 1870,) says:

> The doctrine of the common law as to the navigability of waters has no application in this country. Here the ebb and flow of the tide do not constitute the usual test, as in England, or any test at all of the navigability of waters.

After giving the reasons for this he adds:

> Those rivers must be regarded as public, navigable rivers in law which are navigabel in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. And they constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress, in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the States, when they form in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which commerce is conducted by water.—10 Wallace, 563.

Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, section 1273 of the edition of 1873, in treating the question of the appropriation of money for internal improvements, says:

> The true test is, whether the object be of a local character, and local use; or whether it be of general use to the States. If it be purely local, Congress cannot constitutionally appropriate money for the object. But, if it be general, it matters not whether in point of locality it be in one State or several; whether it be of large or of small extent; its nature and character determine the right, and Congress may appropriate money in aid of it, for it is then, in a just sense, for the general welfare.

Other authorities might be added to the same effect, but these are believed to contain the spirit of the decisions of the courts on the points considered in them. They show:

First. That all rivers are navigable in law which are navigable in fact.

Second. That they are public navigable waters in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways of commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water.

Third. That the doctrine of the common law as to the navigability of waters has no application in this country.

Fourth. That the ebb and flow of the tides do not constitute the test of the navigability of waters in this country.

Fifth. That they constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress, in contradistinction from navigable waters of the States, when they form in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which commerce is conducted by water.

Sixth. That the true test as to whether Congress can appropriate money for such works is, whether the object be of local character and local use, or whether it be of general use to the States.

Seventh. If it be purely local, Congress cannot appropriate money for it; but, if it be general, it matters not whether in point of locality it be in one State or several, or whether it be of large or small extent; its nature and character determine the right.

The President, in his special message of August 14, told us:

> If it was obligatory on the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress, I should return the river and harbor bill with my objections.

It may be technically true that he was not required absolutely to expend the whole of this money; but, if so, it is not because he had the right in advance to determine that he would not expend it, but would result from the fact that it might not be necessary to expend the whole sum appropriated for some particular work or works. This might be the case where more money was appropriated than was necessary to complete the given work or works; not because he has the right to nullify or disregard a law, but because the law would be satisfied when the work or works were completed, and any balance of appropriations should be retained in the Treasury.

So again, if an amount of money should be appropriated for a given work which in the judgment of the engineer would not be sufficient to complete the work, or to put it in a condition to await future appropriations, without danger of losing the work done under it, I would suppose it a proper and allowable exercise of executive discretion to withhold the use of such an appropriation, and to submit the matter to Congress for further appropriation or the abandonment of the work.

There may be other cases in which, from the nature of the business, an expenditure of such an appropriation might properly be suspended by the Executive; but such a course would in no case be allowable on the ground that the President had the right to substitute his will for an act of Congress, and could only be allowable where it grew necessarily out of the exigencies of the service, in some such way as those above mentioned.

The time, and the only time, when the President may rightly pass upon the constitutional question as to whether works appropriated for are or are not national in character is when he is called on to determine whether he will approve or disapprove a bill making such appropriations. And he has no more right to determine in advance that an appropriation shall not be expended on a new work provided for by law than he has to determine that an appropriation for the judicial, or military, or naval service shall not be expended.

It is with regret that, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, which reported the House bill on this subject, I call attention to the great mistake and grievous error into which, it seems to me, the President has fallen on this subject.

In the remarks which I have submitted I have intentionally avoided entering on the broad and long controverted field of discussion as to how far it may be wise for Congress to go in making appropriations for works of this kind. This was not necessary to my present purpose.

And on the question of the true test of what are national works I have simply referred to such authorities as seem to determine that question now, without comparing them with other doctrines held at other times on this subject and without expressing any opinion of my own on the subject.

My only object has been to call attention to what seems to me to be a gross violation of the Constitution, to test the action of the President by the Constitution, in the light of the existing doctrine on this subject, and of his own acts and practices in relation to other laws of the same kind.

Mr. RIDDLE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Does he not understand that the three millions of dollars withheld under the order of the President remain in the Treasury of the United States subject to be expended under the direction of his successor? In other words, does he not understand that the suspension of the expenditure under the river and harbor bill does not involve a liability of its being covered back into the Treasury of the United States by the statute of limitations?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not examined that subject myself. But the Secretary of War in his letter accompanying the message of the President says such appropriations do not lapse into the Treasury in two years.

I ask that the letter of the Secretary of War sent with the message be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is hardly necessary. I understand the report is very voluminous.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not ask for the printing of the whole report in the RECORD, but for the printing of the letter of the Secretary of War, which is comparatively brief, along with the President's message.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the message has been referred.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask unanimous consent that the committee on the election in South Carolina may have printed for their use the testimony taken.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WOODWORTH, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of William H. Nessle.

On motion of Mr. BAGBY, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Ellen A. Ramsey, (H. R. No. 3663.)

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS OF A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER appointed as the additional members ordered for the committee heretofore appointed on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States Mr. FIELD, of New York, and Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio.

And then, on motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: Memorial of B. H. Cheever, for the insertion of a proviso to Senate bill No. 1044, appropriating moneys to pay the claim of A. G. Sloo, that one-half of the amount appropriated be retained in the Treasury until the rights of the assignees and personal representatives of said Sloo thereto are adjusted, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: The petition of A. K. Shurtleff and other citizens of Portland, Maine, for a reduction of the taxes on deposits, circulation, and capital of banks, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CRAPO: The petition of George F. Bartlett, for an American register for the English bark W. A. Farnsworth and for a change of its name, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of C. W. Underwood and other citizens of Massachusetts, for cheap telegraph, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, memorial of Alexander Sutorius, late captain Third United States Cavalry, for re-instatement as captain of cavalry in the United States Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for an appropriation for the improvement of the Youghiogheny water route to the seaboard, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LAPHAM: A letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, relating to the petition of Elizabeth Reese for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MACKEY: The petition of citizens of Elk County, Pennsylvania, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, suggesting that the solution of the presidential question may be harmonious, to the committee on counting the electoral vote.

By Mr. ROBERTS: The petition of Alexander M. Templeton, of Havre de Grace, Maryland, for additional compensation for services rendered and for losses incurred while a spy in the service of the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STRAIT: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the establishment of a post-route and military road from Fort Lincoln to Deadwood City, in the Black Hills, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina: The petition of Alexander Mattison, for pay for services as a United States revenue officer in South Carolina, to the Committee of Claims.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 15, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

DOWER IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. STEVENSON were appointed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from Major-General John M. Schofield, Superintendent of the Military Academy, recommending that a clause be added to the bill making appropriations for the Military Academy which will admit of the assignment of an officer on the retired list to duty as commissary of cadets at the Military Academy; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with law, a copy of the final report of Major William P. Craighill, Corps of Engineers, upon the survey of that portion of the central route designated by the Senate Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard as a connection by canal or freight railway from the Ohio or Kanawha River to tide-water in Virginia; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of all accounts which have been received at that Department from persons charged or intrusted with the disbursement or application of money, goods, or effects of any kind, for the benefit of the Indians, from the 1st of July, 1875, to the 30th of June, 1876, &c.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter of Richard C. Rohner, secretary of the democratic convention at Columbus, Ohio, inclosing a copy of resolutions adopted at said convention January 8, 1877, relative to the late election for President and Vice-President; which was referred to the select committee to devise a mode for counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

He also presented a petition of C. W. Ingalls, W. W. Bowen, and 113 others, of Emmet County, Michigan, praying for an appropriation for the light-house at the harbor at Little Traverse, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SPENCER presented a petition of J. G. Masterson and 30 other citizens of Florence, Alabama, praying that the telegraphic business may be transferred to the superintendence of the Post-Office Department and for cheaper telegraphic facilities; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the resolutions and memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York praying that measures be taken for convening an international monetary congress,—conference it is called here,—to fix the relative values of gold and silver coin. This memorial and the resolutions on which it is based review the silver question in an instructive view. The matter belongs appropriately I suppose to the Committee on Finance. I move its reference to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received and been requested to present a memorial signed by Harvey Mills and very many other citizens, merchants and ship-owners, who represent that they suffered materially during the war by paying extra war premiums and from rebel cruisers, so called, not included in the law which has passed Congress; and I also present another petition of a like nature signed by Isaiah Stetson and many other merchants and ship-owners, each praying for the passage of the bill of the House which has been referred in the Senate to the Judiciary Committee with regard to distributing the Geneva award. I move that these memorials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL presented the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

A joint resolution relative to fisheries in waters within the jurisdiction in part of different States and the British provinces.

Whereas under existing provisions of law and treaty there is no adequate means of preventing or punishing the wrongful destruction of fish in the waters partly within the jurisdiction of the several States and the British provinces of North America, by reason of which great injury is done to an important branch of industry, commerce, and food supply of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That our Senators be instructed, and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to use all proper efforts to the end of preserving and protecting such fisheries, and the interests of citizens of the United States in the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
President of the Senate.
JOHN W. STEWART,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF VERMONT,
Office of Secretary of State:

I, George Nichols, secretary of state of the State of Vermont, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly, at its biennial session, A. D. 1876.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of this office, at Montpelier, this 28th day of November, A. D. 1876.

[SEAL.] GEORGE NICHOLS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hold in my hand a petition signed by M. E. Black and 160 other citizens of Adair County, Iowa, praying for the equalization of the bounties for soldiers. I believe that subject has been reported upon, and that the bill is now upon the Calendar. That is my recollection, and I therefore move that this petition lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I also present the petition of James L. Matthews and 120 other citizens of Daytonville, Washington County, Iowa, stating that injustice and inequality have been done the soldiers in the subject of pensions in that they are not allowed to date back to the time of their disability, but confined to the time of their allowance, and praying that legislation be had to give them pensions from the time the disability occurred. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on Pensions have reported a bill, which is on the Calandar, on that subject, and the petition should lie on the table.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a resolution of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a transallegheny line of water transportation from the Atlantic to the West via the Youghiogheny route; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I present the memorial of Jonathan Bourne and 34 others, merchants and ship-owners of the City of New Bedford, Massachusetts, asking for the passage by the Senate of the House bill known as the Geneva award bill. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary in the hope that these petitioners and others will be gratified by having a report upon the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the petition of William H. Babcock, praying for an increase of pension and for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CRAGIN. I also present a copy of a petition of Edward H. Cobb, late private Company B, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery, praying to be allowed a pension. I present this copy with the understanding that the original petition and accompanying papers have been mislaid. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I present a memorial of citizens of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, without distinction of party, praying for a settlement of the presidential question through legal and amicable means. I will say in presenting this petition that it is largely signed by citizens of both political parties, many of whom are judges of courts, leading lawyers, and business men, and in respect to their views I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection and the memorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and vicinity, realizing that in the political history of our country we have reached the point and now stand face to face with the evil spirit of party, against which we were so plainly warned in the earnest words of Washington's Farewell Address, telling us that—

"The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dispensation, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitor, turns this despotism to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty. It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms, kindles the animosity of one party against another, foments occasional riot and insurrection"—

Fully realizing that at the present moment the evil of party spirit is placing in danger all of the rights, liberties, and privileges of the people, which were secured to us by the wise and patriotic men of the past, and feeling that it is the sacred duty on our part as citizens to use our best endeavors to preserve pure and intact all of the blessings that can be enjoyed under a republican form of government based upon the general education of the people, and under which we have with God's blessing thrived and prospered for the last one hundred years as no other nation has ever thrived or so prospered in the history of the world.

We do appeal to you most earnestly as our representatives in Congress in this hour of danger to place yourselves above all party, and to do all in your power to make the fullest and fairest investigations of the recent election for President, and in deciding between the two candidates, to be governed by the evidence at the polls as to who is honestly the choice of a majority of the people.

None but an honest decision, unaided by party tricks or straining of the law, will restore confidence and prosperity to the country.

And as it is evident that under the present form of the Constitution the same danger may arise in the future, we appeal to you to adopt such measures as may be necessary by amendments to the Constitution.

First. To prevent any interference, direct or indirect, by the Government or administration in power in the elections—making the State officers and State courts the judges of elections in their respective States.

Second. To insure an honest and economical civil service and to deprive partisans of the power to corrupt the people.

We ask that rotation in all of the minor offices of the Government be stopped. The patronage of Congress and of the Executive has now become so large that it is exercising a very evil effect among the people.

With the growth of the country and the natural tendency to increase the number and emoluments of office, the gift of office will soon, if it has not already, become so large as to be a constant source of partisan agitation and excitement on the one hand, and on the other improperly used to influence the elections in its favor by the party in power.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the memorial be referred to the select committee to devise a method for counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of the Sons of Temperance of Wisconsin, officially signed, asking for prohibitory legislation for the District of Columbia and the Territories; the prohibition of the foreign importation of alcoholic liquors; that total abstinence be made a condition of the civil, military, and naval service, and for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the traffic in alcoholic beverages throughout the national domain; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SARGENT. I hold in my hand a petition signed by a considerable number of leading merchants of San Francisco, many of whose signatures I recognize. I know them to be of large business and strong financial standing, who suffered losses during the late rebellion by reason of depredations of confederate cruisers on the high seas. They state that the bill which passed the House of Representatives on the 6th day of July would enable them to present their claims before a competent tribunal and they ask the favorable consideration of the Senate to that bill. It is very seldom that a petition is presented which contains the names of so many men of high character who are directly interested in the subject-matter of the petition. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I trust that the committee will give their earnest attention to the subject and due weight to this important petition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, praying the passage of a law approving the act of the Legislature of said State authorizing the construction of a breakwater in Mobile Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Catharine D. Hunt, of Bristol, Rhode Island, praying compensation for services rendered as nurse in camps and hospitals of sick and wounded Union soldiers during the late war, reported adversely thereon, and moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 822) for the relief of Samuel A. Wilkins, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the late presidential election in Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and the counting of the electoral votes in Oregon, have instructed me to report it with an amendment and recommend its passage. This testimony is not completed and it is impossible to make an estimate of the cost of printing the extra copies. It is thought desirable by the committee that the testimony should be in print as it goes along, and undoubtedly it will be ordered to be printed after it is completed; but it is impossible to present an estimate until the work is finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

The amendment reported was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the late presidential election in the States of Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and to the casting of the electoral votes in the State of Oregon, be printed; 1,500 for the use of the Senate and 3,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1135) to authorize money received by the General Land Office for exemplified copies to be used for the employment of clerical labor; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1136) to remove the political disabilities of Wade H. Gibbes, of South Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1137) to remove the political disabilities of Charles L. Scott, of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1138) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Meyers, of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1139) to change the time of holding the October term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

W. H. WARD.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I offered on Friday a resolution calling on the War Department for information in regard to a certain matter. To make it complete there ought to be a resolution calling for information on the Navy Department, and I therefore offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish the Senate with all the facts and documents, if any, relating to the use by the Government of any machine or machines for making bullets or molding shells, patented by W. H. Ward.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE PAVEMENT.

Mr. INGALLS. Pursuant to the notice that I gave on Friday, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," and the act amendatory thereof.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as I said the other day, I do not feel called upon to oppose this bill; but, probably in consequence of some debate which took place the other day in the Senate, property-holders and others in the city who feel deeply concerned in the subject have made representations to me, all of which I think it would hardly do to pass over quietly and retain in my hand without saying anything to the Senate on the subject. A memorandum has been handed to me stating that on the 12th of August one of these contracts was awarded to the Grahamite Company to pave from Sixth to Fifteenth streets, and on the 16th of August the other was awarded to the Neufchâtel Company; that one of these companies commenced tearing up the Avenue on the 2d of September, and laid some of their concrete base on the 12th of September, but no top-coat until October 16. This paper states further, that there are only 82,000 square yards of pavement on Pennsylvania avenue divided between those contractors, 56,000 yards to one and 26,000 to the other.

This paper states various other things which I do not feel it my duty to bring in detail to the knowledge of the Senate; but it states one thing which it seems to me should be observed, and which seems to be fortified by the report made by the commission appointed by Congress. It contains an allegation that this pavement is and is to be a failure; that if it is to be completed the time here proposed is wholly unnecessary; but that whether completed in that time or any other time, it is to be a disappointment; and these petitioners I cannot call them, because I do not know that these particular men have addressed the Senate, although a memorial is annexed to this memorandum, which I judge has been presented to the Senate, and which, among other things, calls attention to the fact, if it be a fact, to which I now advert.

These petitioners suggest that, in place of such an amendment as is proposed, leaving this work to go on as originally intended and extend the time for its completion until the 1st of June, it should be looked into, and that either by means of having the commissioners of the District take charge of it, or committing it to some other authority, measures should be taken to ascertain, before this goes further, whether the pavement that is described in this report of the commission, and described in this memorandum, shall be laid down, or whether changes shall be made likely to lead to a more permanent and satisfactory pavement.

This memorandum states instances of various streets here in which pavements have been laid in a very short time; here is one instance, K street, one of the best paved streets in this city was paved from Ninth to Fourteenth street, over 27,500 square yards, in thirteen and one-half days; and such pavements it is alleged are not the pavement which is being laid down on the Avenue and that they have approved themselves by wear and experience.

I think, Mr. President, that I have discharged any duty which may be incumbent upon me by bringing so much of these facts to the notice of the Senate. I am not on the Committee on the District and have no special information on the subject; but if the allegations made by the petitioners who say that their petitions have been presented and by the additional persons who have furnished this information, be well founded, I think all will agree that something more is necessary than merely to give a continuation of opportunity to these contractors to go on. If they be ill founded, of course the argument based upon them falls.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, justice to the commission and the contractors and to the District Committee requires me to say but one single word upon the subject of the length of time to which the period for the completion of this pavement is extended. Admitting all the allegations in the document that has been presented by the Senator from New York to be true, the extension of time to the 1st day of June is in the interest of the discovery of those facts. If this pavement is insufficient and imperfect and unsatisfactory, it is the interest of the contractors to have the period within which they may complete their work as short as possible. The object of extending the time until the 1st of June is to enable the commission to ascertain whether these allegations made against the sufficiency of the pavement be correct. It cannot be ascertained now. While the frost is in the ground, and while snow is covering a large portion of the surface, experiments cannot be conducted to ascertain what the sufficiency of the pavement is. The commissioners themselves ask this extension of time for the purpose of being able to ascertain under favorable atmospheric conditions whether the allegations that are made against this pavement are correct or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire whether this bill will have the effect to relieve the contractors from the duty to pay damages, if there be any, occasioned for their non-completion of the work according to their contract?

Mr. INGALLS. It is my understanding and the understanding of the committee that all rights are saved under this bill; that before the extension can be made the sureties upon the bonds are compelled to file their assent, or if they do not do so that the contractors shall file a new undertaking.

Mr. SHERMAN. On my return to Washington this winter, I was very much surprised to see a pavement freshly laid within a few months torn up in places here and there and that this extended over a considerable portion of the pavement. It seemed to me that this was a confession on the part of some one in charge of this work that imperfect work had been done and that we should not secure what we had hoped to secure, a perfect pavement on Pennsylvania avenue. Therefore I inquired of one of the distinguished officers who were placed in charge of this work the explanation of this somewhat extraordinary thing apparently, that a pavement intended to be the best possible should be torn up in so short a time; and his answer was satisfactory to me. I state it in justice to the commissioners who have charge of this work and to the public who do not seem to be informed as to the reason why the work had to be partly done over again. They say that in all pavements of this kind made out of the materials of which this pavement is laid, the success of the work depends entirely on the degree of heat of the materials composing the upper crust or surface of the pavements; that a very slight change in the temperature of the mixture which covers the pavement will make it bad or make it good.

They discovered this; and in many cases within a day or two after the pavement was laid the imperfections were detected; and they thereupon gave the subject careful examination so that within twenty-four or forty-eight hours after a piece of pavement was laid they had to carefully examine in detail to see whether any spots in the pavement showed imperfection, and, if so, they required it to be taken up to the extent of the imperfection and replaced. He says that when it is done it is a complete and perfect pavement, and he is an officer of high standing in the Army. He says that he has no doubt the entire public will be satisfied with this pavement when it is completed, but that in the process of laying down the pavement, especially in a cold season of the year, it is almost impossible to have it all perfect, but when it is repaired in this way it is made as perfect as such pavement can be. That is his opinion, and I know him to be an officer of high standing. He expresses his opinion that the entire pavement when completed under the careful surveillance under which it now is will be a perfect pavement as good as or better than any laid in the city of Washington.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It appears to me that this act, if passed, would relieve the contractors from all liability on account of the non-completion of their work to-day. I do not know but that they ought to be. That depends upon the equity, which the committee no doubt have examined. I do not think after to-day, if this act passes, the contractors or their sureties could be prosecuted or that money could be withheld on account of the non-completion of the work down to this time. But it may be that that would not be very essential. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the circumstances to know whether this delay has been through a fault of theirs that they ought to render compensation for or not.

But there is another part of this provision to which I should like to call the attention of the honorable Senator from Kansas, that it does appear to me may possibly put it in a rather unpleasant attitude respecting the substance of this contract, as to the quality of the thing that the contractors have done and have been in part paid for. This provides that so much of the act as requires the completion of the work by the 15th of January—

Is hereby amended so as to extend the time for the completion of said work to the 1st day of June, 1877: Provided, That the sureties in the contract for doing said work shall file with the said paving commissioners their consent in writing to the extension of time provided for in this act.

If they do that, I do not myself perceive that they would be relieved from any liability in any other respect than that of the non-completion of the work. But supposing the sureties do not assent to this novation, what then? Then the act says:

And, in default thereof, that the contractors shall file a new bond, to the satisfaction of the said paving commissioners, before said contractors shall be entitled to any benefits under the provisions of this act.

Now, if the contractors file a new bond on this novation, the old sureties not having consented to it, are they not absolutely discharged from all liability? We have made a different contract covering a different period of the year and affected by different circumstances; and if, therefore, you provide for this extension without the consent of these sureties and enter into another, I suggest that it would hardly do to say that they may be sued in respect of default upon one part of the contract where they might not have been upon another. The contract itself as to them has become absolutely determined, and they are no longer parties to it in the sense that the law speaks of their being responsible. You have a new contract with the old contractors who are indeed not required to assent to this extension unless the old sureties decline to assent themselves; but you have a new contract to do something, taking up the old one, if you please, by the 1st day of June. What the conditions of suretyship are to be the statute does not say, except that they are to be satisfactory to the paving commissioners.

Now, then, if you make a contract to-day with these people to go on and complete this work by the 1st day of June, and to complete it in a workmanlike manner, a contract in that language would not apply to the work that is already entirely completed and upon which they have got part of their pay. What, then? In order then to hold these contractors liable as they now are for a defect in the quality of the performance of their contract by force of this new suretyship, you have got to have an arrangement which is indemnity for damages that may have occurred from the injury that has happened to the United States and the District through their precedent failure to perform that has already occurred. Still whether these paving commissioners would think of all that and would provide that the new sureties shall stand in exactly the relation that the old ones would had they assented, I do not know. The old law, I believe, required in pretty explicit terms what sort of bonds should be given, both as to quality and as to time. This leaves it, to say the best of it, entirely at the discretion of the paving commission. It appears to me, with all submission to Senators who have this bill in charge, that unless the old sureties do sign their assent to the extension, they will be completely discharged from all liability as sureties upon the old contracts of every description as well as that touching the time within which the work is to be completed.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator suggest any amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. To draw a proper one the old bill should be taken and the provision drawn from it.

Mr. INGALLS. It is my understanding that the subject to which the Senator from Vermont refers is fully protected and will be guarded by the commissioners in the novation of the contract, if one should occur. I believe, however, it will be merely a continuation with the assent of all parties under which the same relations will subsist that have heretofore been created by the contract that has been entered into. The provision of the original contract in regard to the completion of the work is that—

The party of the second part further covenants and agrees that all the pavement hereinbefore described shall be fully completed and ready for use on or before the 15th day of January, 1877, and that no hydraulic concrete shall be laid when in the judgment of the party of the second part the road-bed is not in fit condition to receive it, or the weather is so cold as to injure the cement or prevent or seriously retard its setting.

The facts are in regard to the progress of this work that during the three months that intervened from the time the work was commenced until the 1st day of December there were but thirty-six days in which the work could be carried on. The meteorological records of this station show that there were forty-seven days of inclement weather, when there was precipitation of moisture sufficient to prevent this work from being continued. The parties who are operating under the Grahamite pavement require but twenty-one days of working weather to complete their contract. If they could have one-half of the time which they have been deprived of by the bad weather they would have sufficient to carry out their contract in full, and as the delay has been made necessary by the inclement weather during which, in the judgment of the commissioners, it was impossible for them to proceed, and as the period that is fixed by the commissioners is for the purpose of ascertaining whether the work is satisfactory, whether the pavement is such as ought to be laid, and as payments will not be made until the commissioners have approved it, and as further than this all the legal relations between the parties are to be observed in the contract that is made hereafter, I can conceive of no aspect in which the bill is open to objection.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it is perhaps due to the commissioners that a little further explanation should be made in relation to the imperfections that have been already discovered in the pavement which has been put down. I understand it is necessary that the sand that is used should be perfectly dry. They obtained one ship-load that was not dry; and, therefore, wherever that was put down they have had to take it up and put down other sand. In addition to that, the carts that bring the asphalt and other preparations in proper proportions on to the Avenue are used through the day without scraping out the carts very clean, and at the end of the day they are then cleaned out entirely, and the last remains of the concrete that is taken out of these carts at the close of the day are found to be too much burnt, and therefore little spots wherever they have taken this out and used it, have been found defective.

Mr. ANTHONY. I noticed in the debate on Friday when this subject was up that representations were made of the injuries which abutting proprietors had received on account of the manner in which this work had been performed, and which injuries have been largely increased by this delay. I want to know if this bill will deprive such sufferers from any remedy which they would otherwise have against the contractors for non-performance of the work within the stipulated time?

Mr. INGALLS. I understand the right of action is not affected by the passage of this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose the right of action accrued by reason of the work not being performed within the stipulated time. Now, if Congress extends that time and does not save the rights of persons that have been injured by the delay, does not that deprive them of any legal remedy?

Mr. INGALLS. I should suppose not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not much of a lawyer; but I should think it would. Whether they have any such rights, or whether they have any such just cause of complaint, is a matter which I do not pretend to know. But if they have, I would not like to have this bill deprive them of it; and it seems to me there ought to be a saving clause to that effect in it.

Mr. INGALLS. I am not advised whether any such right of action has accrued; but, if it has, I understand it has already ripened under the action of the commissioners and of the contractors, and nothing we can do can deprive them of their right of action, either against the contractors or their sureties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there ought to be a provision to save any rights which abutting proprietors have against the persons who have caused this delay, if it has been caused from any reasons which make them responsible. There ought to be a saving clause. If their rights have not ripened, and they have no remedy now, then such a saving clause will be inoperative and of no injury; but if they have rights—and certainly it seems to me they have—they ought not to be destroyed by our legislation.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. I think I ought to vote against its passage myself in its present shape, and I want to be on record.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall vote against the bill for the simple reason I have stated. I believe that it invades individual rights, takes from persons who have suffered a legal remedy. If the bill could be so amended as to preserve that remedy, I should vote for the bill, but if not, I shall vote against it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Mitchell, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Wallace, and West—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Bontwell, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Patterson, Price, Ransom, Stevenson, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Blaine, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Morrill, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Windom—36.

So the bill was passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That John S. Friend have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

ROBERT ERWIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business the morning hour has expired, and the Chair will call up the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin. That bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WRIGHT. If I can have the attention of the Senate I wish to make known to the Senate the character of this bill, that we may proceed to its consideration with a full understanding of what is involved. The report from the Committee on the Judiciary was adverse to this claim. I suggest to my friend from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] who called this bill up, that, while in itself the bill does not involve so much, nevertheless there are questions and principles contained in it that are of very great importance; questions that received the very careful consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary; questions in which as members of that committee and as members of the Senate, in view of the principles involved, they feel a very great interest. It is known to the Senator that four members of that committee are necessarily absent, attending to duties that have been devolved upon them by the Senate. I am for myself exceedingly anxious that they should be present at the time when this bill is considered. As I understand, it is possible, to say the least of it, that they can be in their seats after to-day, and be present when this bill shall be considered. I therefore suggest to the Senator and ask of him that the bill shall go over until they can be present.

I have the utmost reluctance to make this request for the reason, as I have said from the beginning, that I do not wish to throw obstacles in the way of the consideration of this bill; but in view of the importance, not of this bill alone but of the questions that are involved, (they being, as has been said here, border questions; questions that run right upon a line that it is very important should be settled after a full understanding on the part of the Senate of the nature of the questions,) I shall ask that we pass the bill over until to-morrow at least, when I believe the Senate will be full, much more so than now, and when my colleagues upon the committee can be present for the purpose of taking a part in the discussion. As I say to the Senator, I make this request with the very greatest reluctance, because I have the most kindly feeling toward the person who is interested in this bill and have very great anxiety that it shall be disposed of, so far as he is concerned. I do not wish to throw anything that can be regarded as possibly captious in the way of its consideration. I make this appeal to my friend, for the members of the committee, who are now engaged otherwise as the Senator knows, will be in their seats, I think, to-morrow, and thus we can have the matter settled, and settled in such a way as will be more satisfactory to us all.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I think I may say to my friend from Iowa that I have shown no disposition to unduly press this bill. I think that no less than twice before I consented to its being postponed in consequence of the absence of certain members of the Senate. It is known to the Senator from Iowa and to other members of the committee that this bill has twice passed the House of Representatives by a unanimous vote, both of the committee which considered it and of the House itself. The petitioner has been before Congress since 1875. This bill has been thoroughly considered by the committee, and two members at least of that committee are now present upon the floor of the Senate. I apprehend that the very presence of Senators whose absence the Senator now makes an objection would, in spite of the good intentions on his part—which I do not doubt in the least and which I appreciate most fully—lead to debate upon graver and more important questions; for when those members of the Judiciary Committee shall have been discharged from the consideration of the grave questions now before them we shall have other matters brought before this body which transcend all questions of a mere personal nature.

I therefore prefer to submit to the Senate the question whether they will now proceed with the consideration of this bill, which is of a very minor character. I must beg leave to differ with the Senator on the ground that it involves any very great questions. It is a case that cannot set any precedent because it is sui generis peculiar in its character; the circumstances are peculiar which attend it. I therefore think we can commit no very serious blunder by considering the bill. I am, however, very willing to resign myself and this bill to the determination of the Senate as to whether they will postpone it. If the Senator will make a motion to that effect, I am ready to abide by the decision of the Senate, althought I must say that I prefer to go on with it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I feel very much disinclined to make a motion to postpone the bill. I appealed to my friend from Georgia, hoping the bill would go over on that request. I had reluctance in doing that because I do not want to be regarded in the attitude of seeming to captiously antagonize this bill. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and three other members are absent; one absent South. I suggested the matter to the chairman of the committee this morning. He himself requested of me that I should make this request. He said that he thought the questions involved were of such a character that it would be better that we should have a full Senate, or at least more present than we have now.

I suggest to the Senator that there are important questions involved in this case. The prime question involved, on which there is no doubt, is that the person who makes this claim was in an attitude where there was no chance for him to have a standing in court under the laws of Congress, and that standing alone, by the construction that has been given to the case by the Supreme Court of the United States, the day of grace, or his right to go into court has been lost to him, as was found by the committee, by reason of the negligence and want of care upon the part of his attorney. The Senate has over and over again decided that unless the claimant could show affirmative loyalty they would not allow his claim. That has been the action of the Committee on Claims in numberless cases. This is a case were the party claims that he failed to go into the Court of Claims by reason of the negligence of his attorney. Under the law of Congress, as construed by Congress itself, he would have no standing to-day in court. The question to be determined, and which the Senate has to determine now, is whether, notwithstanding its repeated action with reference to this class of cases, they will remove this bar in favor of one who under the law of Congress could have no standing there.

I concede that if there is a case to which you can apply the exception and let a person in notwithstanding that positive enactment of Congress, this may be that case. But there have been numberless cases where the same question has arisen, where action has been taken and reports made by the committee here, and where the Senate has concurred in such reports over and over and over again. Now this case is brought up and asked to be made an exception. If the Senate shall decide in favor of this bill, then in my judgment it overturns all the rulings that have been made by the committee on this subject in the Senate and the action of the Senate in affirming those reports. Because it is thus important I appeal to my friend to allow the bill to go over until to-morrow. If this request is not concurred in, I shall feel it to be my duty, in view of my relation to the other members of the committee and because of what I know to be their interest in this question, to move its postponement either to a day certain or to postpone it without day.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask my honorable friend from Iowa, who is more familiar with these questions than I am, whether in the case of Stephen A. Douglas's children, who were residents of one of the seceded States, Congress did not pass a bill touching certain interests that they had in the South? I understood the Senator to say that this case was without precedent. Now if I am not mistaken there are several cases, not half as strong as this, which have received the assent of Congress. Indeed, I think this is the strongest case I have ever known presented to the discretion of Congress since I have had a seat on this floor. Here is a man who was pardoned by the President, whose property was seized under the act of 1863 as abandoned property. The money for it was received and put into the Treasury of the United States, his own hard earnings. He comes exactly within the Padelford case and the Klein case; and unless the Senate intend to repudiate the doctrine of the late Chief-Justice Chase, who said that a pardon covered all past delinquencies and entitled its recipient to all rights after that act as if he had never been in the rebellion, this case cannot be answered unless it shall be upon a question of laches; and that is not individual to him, but is to hold him liable for what his attorney did. He was informed by his attorney that the case was filed; the attorney, through the negligence of one of his clerks, was himself mistaken. Could there be a stronger case?

Has it come to this, that the Government of the United States will under such circumstances take the money of any citizen of the South and hold it, and then plead the statute of limitations? What would be thought of any gentleman who, having borrowed money and given his note, should afterward plead the statute of limitations? Where would he find a footing in society in any State in this land? And yet it seems to me that that is this precise case.

I have no objection to the bill going over, but I rose to correct what I thought was a mistake. I may be mistaken myself, but I think there are cases from the South where relief has been granted which are not as strong as this.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say that the case of the Douglas heirs to which my friend refers is very clearly distinguishable from this. There was no pretense of disloyalty there, but on the contrary the loyalty was established and they had merely lost their day in court and were sent there. The statute of limitations was not insisted on. But here there is no question upon the point to which I now refer. If it be true that a pardon removes all disabilities so that all persons can go into court and recover just precisely the same as if they were never disloyal, then this bill ought to pass, aside from the question of laches to which I may refer if the bill is taken up. But that is the question there is in this case. I say that Congress, as far as I know, never has passed a bill yet where the disloyalty was conceded. When I say "disloyalty" I do not apply that personally; but I mean that the attitude of the person toward the Government was such that there was no question as to what that attitude was. I say this of course in all kindness to Colonel Erwin. He does not disguise, nor does any person for him, his relations to the Government. His disabilities were removed. Can all persons who had their disabilities removed come in and recover precisely as they could if they had been ever so loyal? That is the question that is in this case.

I do not remember that a case has ever passed Congress where the person occupied that relation to the Government who had his disabilities removed; but the decisions have been uniform by the Committee on Claims and the other committees that where the parties came to Congress and asked relief as a matter of grace and favor, then Congress should insist upon its legislation that they should not have a right to recover.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I think that the honorable Senator from Iowa clouds this case a little in his last remark. The peculiar manner in which the disability of Mr. Erwin was removed I think very essential in the consideration of this bill. It was not a case of pardon under general proclamation embracing all or certain classes of citizens, or under any general law of Congress; but the party claiming from the Government had himself accepted, by his own act, amnesty under Mr. Lincoln's proclamation, and accepted at the earliest moment possible. It was in the city of Savannah, when the army of General Sherman reached that point. It is notorious, I believe, and admitted in the report of the committee, that this petitioner immediately on the entrance of the army into Savannah took the oath of allegiance to the United States Government in a public meeting in that city, and advised others to do so. I must be allowed to repeat the language of Mr. Lincoln himself, that if the Government shall repudiate such an action as this on the part of the citizens who in good faith embraced the very first opportunity to accept the terms of that proclamation, it will be bad faith on the part of Congress. I use language much milder than that employed by Mr. Lincoln himself. This petitioner did accept the terms of that proclamation. He isolated himself from his own people, and in the midst of that city, in a public meeting, declared his adhesion to the Government of the United States when the war was yet in progress. More than a month after this act his cotton was seized, not taken as abandoned property, but seized while actually in his personal possession. Not only so, but six months thereafter, although he had accepted the terms of this proclamation in the presence of the United States Army, in the presence of the citizens of his own town, notoriously accepted, another lot of his cotton was seized. Now, I submit that there is not a decision of the Supreme Court rendered upon like cases which would not entitle this gentleman, so far as the principles of law are involved, to recover in the Court of Claims.

This much only at this time upon the question of his loyalty. As to his laches, it is simply a question of whether the United States Government will hold in its possession property which the courts have decided belonged not to the Government but to the individual under such a plea as this. Because, forsooth, an agent of this gentleman has deceived him as to the status he had obtained in the courts of the country will the Government take advantage of such misfortune and refuse possession of his property?

It strikes me, Mr. President, that this is a case, as I remarked a while ago, sui generis. I have known nothing like it. As early as 1867 this gentleman had his case, as he supposed, brought before the Court of Claims. He was notified by his attorney that the case with all the testimony was properly before the court. Suit, as he supposed and was informed, had been brought at the same term of court with other cases of similar character, every one of which has since been decided in favor of the claimants. This gentleman, standing upon precisely the same foundation of law, with precisely the same character of claim, with identical proof of loyalty, is to be defeated because a clerk in the office of his attorney has failed to discharge his duty.

At that time, it must be remembered—and I ask the attention of Senators to this peculiar and striking fact—a case was pending before and was afterward decided by the Supreme Court, involving the question of jurisdiction by the Court of Claims. Suppose Mr. Erwin had come to Congress while that case was pending, what would the Senator from Iowa have said to him? What would the Judiciary Committee have said? What would Congress have said? They would have asked, "Why do you come before Congress? Here is the Court of Claims, why not prosecute your case before that?" Suppose he had replied: "Because I apprehend that the jurisdiction of that court may have expired as to these peculiar cases." The Senator from Iowa and the committee would have said to him: "Wait, sir, until the decision of the Supreme Court is had upon the cases now pending before it." He did wait, rightfully waited; and the very moment the case of Haycroft—I believe that is the case—was decided by the Supreme Court, declaring the jurisdiction of that court extended two years instead of six, Mr. Erwin presented his claim before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I must conclude that any decision by the Senate based upon all these facts, upon the law, and upon the question of laches, must bring to Mr. Erwin the relief he seeks.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I have no intention to enter upon the discussion of the merits of this bill at this time. The report made by the committee sets forth all the facts as we understand them, and discusses the law. My appeal was that this matter might go over for the present. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] says he has no objection to its going over; I do not understand whether the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] insists upon having the bill heard at this time or not. I suggest that if they allow this bill to pass over until Wednesday, I shall make no objection at all to its consideration—shall interpose no obstacle whatever to its consideration at that time. If that is not agreeable to the Senator from Georgia, he must be aware of the condition of the Senate now; it is doubtful if we have a quorum here, and if a vote be taken on the bill we shall be locked, so that it will be impossible for us to do anything.

Mr. GORDON. I have a great deal of respect for the ability of the Senator from Iowa, and I do not doubt that he can present this case to the Senate with all the ability that any member of that committee can. I think we have a quorum, and, as I remarked a while ago, we have business of decidedly more importance to consider when this is over. I beg, therefore, that the Senate will consider this bill and let us have the verdict upon it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I shall then move, if in order, that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Wednesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WITHERS in the chair.) The motion is in order. The Senator from Iowa moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Wednesday next.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORDON. Before the roll-call commences, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, instead of fixing a day I am willing that it shall be laid aside informally to be left as the unfinished business.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have no objection to that—none in the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, then, the roll-call will be dispersed with, and the bill under consideration will be laid aside informally to come up as unfinished business.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 29) extending the time for the making of a report by the Army commission created by the act of July 24, 1876.

WILLIAM S. MORRIS ET AL.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to take up Senate bill No. 405. It was under consideration some time ago and postponed, and it ought to be decided.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 405) for the relief of William S. Morris, William S. Mann, Charles A. Oakman, George W. Hillman, the Union Transfer Company, all of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Union Transfer Company of Baltimore, Maryland; and John R. Graham, late of Philadelphia, now of Washington, District of Columbia; the question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senate will remember that this is a bill which came from the Committee on Claims and was put on its passage and was suspended for want of the decision of the court bearing on the question. One of the cases was made a test case. It was supposed then that there was a decision by the Court of Claims. It was, however, a decision by the circuit court for the southern district of New York, Judge Shipman presiding. I have obtained a specific statement of the facts in that case. There was a judgment against the collector for the amount then in contest. I have also a report of the case which I will ask the Clerk to read to show the point decided. It is not reported in book form.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the New York Herald of January 31, 1874.]

DODD'S EXPRESS COMPANY—EXPRESS COMPANIES NOT LIABLE TO TAX ON GROSS RECEIPTS—IMPORTANT DECISION.

In the United States court yesterday before Judge Nathaniel Shipman an action of a somewhat important character was tried. Alexander Spaulding, collector of the eighth internal revenue district, caused a duty of 3 per cent. on the gross receipts of Dodd's Express Company to be levied. He claimed that his action in this respect was sustained by section 104 of the act of 1864. This law is to the effect that all person doing express business are bound to pay a tax of 3 per cent. on the gross receipts of such business. The company paid the amount claimed under protest and then brought the present suit to recover back the sum thus paid.

Counsel for the express company contended that the business they transacted was merely of a local character; consisting of carrying boxes and parcels around the city; that, under the terms of the law, they could not be regarded as an express company, and that therefore the Government could not legally demand the tax from them. The judge stated that his opinion was that the act had reference only to large express companies.

The United States district attorney advanced the proposition that the act applied to all who did any business as express companies.

The amount claimed in this case is but $200. Judge Shipman directed a verdict for the express company.

The matter thus disposed of was a test case, but other suits in relation to the same point involve an amount of about $40,000. The question had been under the consideration of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the conclusion they arrived at was that it was not within the power of the collector to exact the tax, but pending the result of this suit they had declined making any final decision.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us hear the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, on the 2d of August, 1876, which has been heretofore published in the RECORD.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have examined the internal-revenue laws, and I am perfectly satisfied that by a fair construction of the law Dodd's Express Company and all the express companies of the various characters are embraced within its provisions. It seems to me so plain a case that I do not see how a respectable court could have made a decision to the contrary. That decision is only before us in the form of a newspaper report, very imperfect in its character, which does not give the reason for the decision, but simply very briefly states the case. I believe it is contained in the report of our committee.

Now, will any Senator take up the law and say to me that his opinion is that under the provisions of the law a company like Dodd's Express Company, delivering packages to over a million of the people of the United States, carrying them from one end of Manhattan Island to the other, from railroad to wharf, from wharf to railroad, reaching every private citizen in that island of one million of inhabitants, is not subject to the tax? If that is not an express company within the meaning and language of the law, I do not know what is.

Under the circumstances, unless the Supreme Court of the United States, or some other tribunal whose decisions are binding on us and should control the construction of our laws, should decide in favor of the exemption, I am not willing to surrender a revenue already collected from these express companies. The language of the law is plain. It seems to me that the decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was correct. He ought to have collected this money, as he did; and the mere fact that a court upon a casual hearing of a case, perhaps imperfectly argued or not argued at all, decides that the words "express company" do not include Dodd's Express Company and all the other city express companies, is not sufficient justification to us for taking money out of the Treasury of the United States and paying it back.

After the case was up the other day I took the pains to take up the statutes and read carefully the language of the law. If we were endeavoring to describe Dodd's Express Company and the United States Express Company and Adams Express Company, and all the other express companies of a kindred character, we could not have expressed it in language more general and more specific. The reason given by the court was that it was not the intention of Congress to do anything but tax express companies like the Adams Express and the United States Express, &c., that carried packages all over the United States. That is not founded on any provision of the law, not founded upon any words used in the law, because the language of the law extends to all express companies and companies that carry baggage and goods for hire and who receive pay for carrying goods. When the law has been enforced and money collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States, now to pay it back to the companies, when they have charged it over to their customers, would not be right. Every one of these express companies in consequence of this tax during the war and after the war to some extent raised their charges. Their business was enormously increased by the war and the events that followed; they have levied this tax twice, perhaps many-fold on the business transacted by them, on their customers; and now years afterward, when probably the stockholders of these express companies have changed, to come in and ask the refunding of this tax upon a mere casual expression by a court, it seems to me, is carrying the doctrine of obedience to the courts too far; and therefore I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I will only say, in reply to what the Senator from Ohio states, that if he will take the act of 1864 and the amendment of 1866 and remember the fact that these taxes were assessed after the act of 1866, were collected after the act of 1866, he will see that the Department in its construction of the statute and in the refunding of money and the courts in their decision were correct.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator send up those statutes and let them be read at the desk—the two statutes on which he relies—because I referred to them at once when the report was read, and I thought the language was clear.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir; let section 104 of the act of 1864 be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That any person, firm, company, or corporation carrying on or doing an express business shall be subject to and pay a duty of three per cent. on the gross amount of all the receipts of such express business.

Mr. WALLACE. Now read the act of 1866.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That section 103 be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat, or other vessel, or any stage-coach or other vehicle, except hacks or carriages not running on continuous routes, engaged or employed in the business of transporting passengers for hire, or in transporting the mails of the United States upon contracts made prior to August 1, 1866, shall be subject to and pay a tax of 2½ per cent. of the gross receipts from passengers and mails of such railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat, or other vessel, or such stage-coach or other vehicle: Provided, That the tax hereby imposed shall not be assessed upon receipts for the transportation of persons or mails between the United States and any foreign port; but such tax shall be assessed upon the transportation of persons from a port within the United States through a foreign territory to a port within the United States, and shall be assessed upon and collected from persons, firms, companies, or corporations within the United States, receiving hire or pay for such transportation of persons or mails; and so much of section 109 as requires returns to be made of receipts hereby exempted from tax when derived from transporting property for hire is hereby repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The section last read does not relate to section 104 of the act of 1864. Section 103 is the one that relates to steamboats, railroads, ferry-boats, and bridges, and the amendment to section 103 read now is substantially like section 103 in the other law, but it is section 104 under which the tax was laid.

Mr. WALLACE. I understand. Section 103 had a construction put upon it in the act of 1866, just read, showing that sections 103 and 104 only applied to persons or property carried on continuous routes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the very point. I want the Senator to show me wherein the act of 1866 in redrawing section 103 affects section 104 of the act of 1864.

Mr. WALLACE. I know only that after full argument in the case brought by Dodd's Express Company the circuit court ruled that it did not apply to such cases. I have here a letter from the Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I ask the Senator where was that decision made? Was that the decision that is quoted in the report?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only say that that decision as there stated is so meager that I cannot really tell what the meaning is. The judge expresses the opinion that Congress could not have contemplated express companies that were confined in their delivery, &c. I think the judge must have had under his eye section 103 instead of section 104 of the law of 1864. If the decision had been given fully, we could have told exactly whether the judge was misled by a hurried reading or not.

Mr. WALLACE. The point decided is stated in the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to make one inquiry of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

Mr. WRIGHT. Whatever the grounds upon which the decision was made by the court, I call his attention to the fact that the officers of the Department have followed that decision and have ordered a refund of the taxes in all the cases except this. They, therefore, accept the decision of the court as having construed the law; they abide by that decision; and, as I understand, the reason that these claimants did not bring their suit in time was that they were given to understand that action in the Department would be withheld until the courts decided it, and that the Department would follow the decision of the courts. They have done so and have ordered a refund in all the cases except this, and the reason the Commissioner of Internal Revenue does not order a refund in this is that he stands upon the technical rule that he has no power, or will not undertake to review the decision of his predecessor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WALLACE. It is plain that there is no quorum here, and if the Senator desires the bill to go over, I will consent that it shall lie over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the bill will be laid aside.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that House bill No. 3373, for the relief of Susan E. Willard, widow of Sylvester D. Willard, of New York, which was indefinitely postponed, be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. I have to ask unanimous consent to do that, as the time for reconsidering the motion has passed. The chairman of the committee will testify, I believe, to the correctness of the fact that it was by a misunderstanding that this bill was reported adversely, and before the parties had an opportunity for a hearing. The parties are now present and desire to have an opportunity of hearing; and I understand the chairman of the committee is willing it should be recommitted.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to state in that connection that the bill was before the committee at the last session of Congress. I was appealed to at that time by a member of the House not to take action until the parties had an opportunity to be heard. I advised them that action would not be taken until such opportunity was given. At the present session of Congress, having forgotten that conversation, the bill was taken up and reported back. That matter being brought to my attention, of course, in all fairness, the bill should be recommitted, that the parties may have an opportunity. That being so, I make no objection to the recommittal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked for the reconsideration of the vote postponing the bill which has been mentioned. Unless objection be made, it will be regarded as the order of the Senate, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

H. E. WOODHOUSE & CO.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1071) for the relief of H. E. Woodhouse & Co., of Brownsville, Texas. The bill is to refund the sum of $952, "being the amount demanded of them by the collector of customs and by them paid on account of non-dutiable goods." The order of the collector of customs required that amount to be repaid on non-dutiable goods. The money was paid. The fact was reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. I have his report here in full. The case came before the Committee on Claims, and was reported favorably by the Committee on Claims. The Secretary of the Treasury also recommends the refunding of the money. The bill was examined by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who is present and will vouch for the correctness of my statement.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay H. E. Woodhouse & Co., of Brownsville, Texas, $952, being the amount demanded of them by the collector of customs and by them paid on account of non-dutiable goods, October 30, 1876.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICHOLAS WAX AND OTHERS.

Mr. WEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 907) for the relief of Nicholas Wax, Michael Granary, and Moline Lange.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Nicholas Wax, Michael Granary, and Moline Lange, each, the sum of $500, in refundment of so much money exacted from them as joint obligors on a bond taken by Colonel Don A. Pardee, provost-marshal of the district of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in the year 1863, for the appearance of one B. F. Rhodes, the payment of which was improperly and illegally enforced by the marshal.

Mr. WEST. I will state briefly in regard to the bill that it was reported by the late Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Caperton.] The case is so palpable and plain, the committee, I think, being unanimous on the subject, that I cannot see any objection to its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON DONATION LAND LAW.

Mr. KELLY. I move to take up Senate bill No. 859. It will only take but a minute or two.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850. It provides that the claims of such persons who were duly qualified thereto, and made bona fide settlements upon lands in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," and the legislation supplemental thereto, which have been included, in whole or in part, within the limits of any reservation made by the United States for military purposes subsequent to the date of such settlement and prior to the completion of the period of residence and cultivation required by that act, which reservation has been, or may hereafter be, declared abandoned by the Secretary of War as no longer necessary to the United States for military or other purposes, shall be adjudicated and patented the same as other donation claims arising under that act and supplemental legislation, as though such reservation had never been made; but no claim of any settler coming within the purview of this act shall be validated or confirmed the value of whose improvements at the time such reservation has been made by the United States has been ascertained and paid for by the Secretary of War, as required by the act of September 27, 1850, and the legislation supplemental thereto.

Mr. INGALLS. From what committee is the bill reported?

Mr. KELLY. The bill was reported by the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] from the Committee on Public Lands. There is a very short report, which I will ask to have read. The passage of the bill is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, July 20, 1876:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, report as follows:

The fourteenth section of the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands," authorized the President of the United States to reserve from the operation of said act such portions of the public lands as he might deem necessary for forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful uses. That section contains this proviso:

"Provided, That if it shall be deemed necessary, in the judgment of the President, to include in any such reservation the improvements of any settler made previous to the passage of this act, it shall in such case be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause the value of such improvements to be ascertained, and the amount so ascertained shall be paid to the party entitled thereto out of any money not otherwise appropriated."

Under this law the military officers of the United States, under authority of the President, made quite a number of reservations, including in several instances portions of the claims of settlers upon which improvements had been made before the passage of the act of Congress. Some of these reservations were made merely with the view that possibly they might be needed for military purposes, but were never occupied as such, and were soon afterward abandoned by the military authorities as unsuitable and unnecessary. The Secretary of War never caused the value of the improvements of the settler to be made, as provided by the law, and no compensation was ever made to him. In some such instances, where no compensation was made to the settler for his improvements, he continued to reside upon and cultivate the land, as required by the act of Congress, until the title became perfected in him, excepting so far as he might be precluded from acquiring it by reason of the same having once been reserved but afterward abandoned by the Government.

Under these circumstances, the committee consider it simply an act of justice that where the improvements of any settler under the donation land law were made prior to the reservation of the same for military purposes, and no compensation was made to him for such improvements, that the title should be confirmed to him, if such settler has, in other respects, complied with the provisions of that act of Congress.

The subjoined letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office is in conformity with these views:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 12, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your note of yesterday, accompanied by Senate bill No. 859, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, and asking to be advised whether said bill meets the views of this office, I have the honor to state that said bill fully accords with the views of this office; and I would respectfully recommend its passage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

Hon. NEWTON BOOTH,
United States Senate.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to invest in the bonds of the United States the unexpended balance of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Lake Superior; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District;

A bill (H. R. No. 2300) granting a pension to Margaret C. Bell;

A bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," and the act amendatory thereof;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) in reference to the congratulations from the republic of Pretoria, South Africa; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) relating to congratulations from the Argentine Republic.

THE SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Mr. President, a committee was authorized at the last session of Congress to inquire into the change that has taken place in the relative value of gold and silver, the cause thereof, the policy of restoring the double standard in this country, and of continuing greenbacks concurrently with the metallic standards, and the best means for the resumption of specie payments.

These questions, Mr. President, are so comprehensive in their character, so broad in their scope, and, should any legislation be had upon them influenced by the report of this commission, so far-reaching in their effects that the commission have thought it better not to make a hasty report, but to avail themselves of all the facts necessary to an enlightened discussion and a correct solution of them. To this end they have examined a large number of witnesses in this country and have propounded interrogatories to correspondents, to distinguished financiers and business men abroad. They also through the State Department have sent interrogatories touching these various propositions to the representatives of the United States in the different countries of the world. To these interrogatories they are but now receiving responses, responses which are voluminous, and many of them in foreign languages. The committee have not had time yet to digest, classify, and arrange them, and harmonize in many instances apparent contradictions. This they desire to do; and to this end they offer the resolution which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WITHERS in the chair.) The resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the commission to inquire into the change which has taken place in the relative value of gold and silver, and the causes thereof, the policy of restoring the double standard in this country, and of continuing greenbacks concurrently with the metallic standards, may report on or before the 15th day of February, 1877, instead of on or before the 15th day of January, 1877.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that had better lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I simply ask that the resolution shall pass giving us more time, as this is the day on which the report should be made. I supposed the Senate would not hesitate for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears no objection, and assent is given to the present consideration of the resolution. The resolution is agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—CHARGES AGAINST MR. WINDOM.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the Secretary read the article in this morning's Union which I have marked in the copy I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Last summer charges were preferred against William McMicken, surveyor-general of Washington Territory, of alleged malfeasance in office, but it is said, through the influence of Senator WINDOM, the charges were "pigeon-holed," although there was the most positive proof of McMicken's peculations. Within the last week charges have again been made both to the President and Secretary Chandler against McMicken of corruption in office and with having paid money to Senator WINDOM for his (McMicken's) appointment and retention in office. No action has been taken in the matter, and there is thought to be a disposition to keep the charges quiet until after WINDOM'S re-election to the Senate. The election will take place to-morrow.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I regret to have to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a personal matter of this kind. I believe this is the first personal explanation I have ever made during seventeen years of congressional service. But the circumstances under which this charge is made and the respectability of the paper in which it appears seem to justify me in doing so.

I called this morning on the responsible editor of the Union—Hon. Montgomery Blair—and made a statement of the facts. He expressed regrets that the article just quoted should have appeared in his paper, and handed me this note or telegram, which I am authorized to publish, and which I now request the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, January 15, 1877.

The charge made in the Union of this date against Senator WINDOM on the authority of H. I. Chapman would not have been published if my attention had been called to it, for I do not believe it to be true.

MONTGOMERY BLAIR.

J. A. WHEELOCK,
Saint Paul, Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. In addition to that, Mr. President, the honorable gentleman who has editorial charge of the Union assured me that he would take great pleasure in making the correction to-morrow morning. I am not willing, however, to let the matter drop here; for it is true that charges of the character mentioned in the Union have been made against myself in the Interior Department. They were made by one H. I. Chapman, of Washington Territory, or Oregon—I am not quite certain which. I think neither that State nor the Territory is ambitious to claim him. Last summer there was a controversy with reference to the removal of William McMicken, surveyor-general of Washington Territory. This man Chapman came here for the purpose of getting the appointment to that office. He charged McMicken with certain peculations and corrupt practices in office. Having known General McMicken for many years I did not believe them to be true. I went to the Interior Department and demanded an investigation of those charges. They were thoroughly investigated; witnesses were called and examined and affidavits taken; and upon this investigation General McMicken was triumphantly vindicated. Indeed the man in Washington Territory who fathered Chapman's charges has since admitted that they were false. I heard nothing more of it until last Saturday morning, when I received a letter which I will hand to the Secretary to be read. This letter is dated January 11—last Thursday—but was not mailed until Saturday, the 13th. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., January 11, 1877.

SIR: Prompted by a strong desire to serve the republican party and to prevent its humiliation by the publication of frauds practiced upon the Government of so flagrant a nature as to bring the whole Administration into disrepute, I am forced to address to you this letter, hoping that it may be received in the same spirit in which it is written.

The offender against the dignity of the Government to whom I refer is no other than William McMicken, surveyor-general of Washington Territory. Mr. McMicken would have been removed from office last year had not you prostituted the influence of your office to have him retained. His corruption in office has been of so notorious a character that suspicion has pointed to you as the partner of his peculations, and proof is not wanting to change this suspicion into a reality. Now, I am fully determined that Mr. McMicken shall be removed at once from office, or I shall give to the public the facts and let it judge who is the greater offender, the man guilty of peculation in office, or the Senator who is his apologist, champion, and shearer of the spoils.

I care not who is appointed, but I do most emphatically insist on Mr. McMicken's removal. A man who was ostracized from Minnesota as being unworthy public confidence is certainly not a fit person to hold the principal office in Washington Territory.

If your answer disclaiming all intention of opposing the removal of Mr. McMicken shall not have been received by five p. m. to-morrow, I shall "loose the dogs of war," let the consequences be what they may. I write this letter not as a threat but in hopes that you will assist in having honest men appointed to office.

Yours, very respectfully,

H. I. CHAPMAN,
457 Missouri avenue.

Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM,
United States Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, my first impulse on the receipt of that letter was to write a note to the author telling him that if he had any "dogs of war" to let loose the entire kennel; but knowing something of the low and despicable character of its author, I thought it not worth while to notice it, and I made no answer. I did however on Saturday say to Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, that I wished he would be good enough to convey to the creature Chapman the assurance from myself that if he had any expectation of ever becoming surveyor-general of Washington Territory or of holding any other office that required the confirmation of the Senate, I thought he might safely dismiss it from his mind so long as that letter remained in existence, for I should take occasion to use it hereafter. Saturday evening an individual came to my residence to assure me that this letter had been written; he did not find me there but found my friend Mr. M. C. Fosnes, of Minnesota, to whom he unbosomed himself, stating that this charge would be published this morning in the Union, that it had been postponed until the day before the senatorial election in Minnesota so that there would be no opportunity for me to answer it at home, that he had come as my friend to notify me so that I might take measures to prevent its publication in the Union, or telegraph home in order to weaken the force of the blow which was impending. I neither telegraphed home nor called on any person connected with that journal. I preferred, if there was anything of the kind to be published, that it should be done at once.

This morning on further inquiry I find that this same H. I. Chapman has filed certain other charges against Surveyor-General McMicken, of Washington Territory, a gentleman who instead of having been "ostracized in the State of Minnesota" is respected by everybody; a gentleman of the very highest character, an honest man, a brave soldier, and in every respect worthy of confidence. Among the charges filed against him is the following:

Fifth. That the said McMicken did pay and is paying to Senator WINDOM a money consideration for his (WINDOM's) influence in retaining him (McMicken) in the office of surveyor-general.

Finding, Mr. President, that this matter had gone so far, I thought it was about time to stop it, and I called this morning upon the grand jury, now in session, and presented the case, and the individual will have an opportunity to prove before the courts the truth of these charges, for he will doubtless be indicted.

But as I wish to place one other item on record, I beg for the information of the Senate to state the character of this creature who proposes to black-mail Senators, and for this purpose I submit a letter from General James Tilton, civil engineer, who was many years surveyor-general of Washington Territory, who does not belong to my party, but is a good, sound democrat. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., January 15, 1877.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to my knowledge of the character and antecedents of H. I. Chapman, of Washington Territory, I beg to leave to state:

Having resided in Washington Territory for many years, and during at least ten or twelve years of that time having been well acquainted with H. I. Chapman, I am constrained by truth to say upon any question in which his interest or revenge was concerned I would not believe H. I. Chapman upon oath. His reputation for truth and honor at Puget Sound, and wherever known in Oregon and Washington Territory, is bad. In all places where he has lived there I have uniformly heard him spoken of as entirely unscrupulous in the pursuit of either his interests or his enemies.

From the year 1854 to 1861 I was United States surveyor-general for the Territory of Washington, after that period till 1866 was a resident of the Territory, and was territorial treasurer for several of those years; was a civil engineer in the service of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for four or five years in Washington Territory, till 1873; as H. I. Chapman's father was surveyor-general of Oregon during a part of the period during which I was a similar functionary in Washington Territory, and as H. I. Chapman himself was a land surveyor, and as such a competent one, I had ample opportunities to know him well and thoroughly, and I can only say he is, as a man of truth and honor, so totally devoid of standing that no charges or denunciations of any one in either Washington Territory or Oregon would affect the public estimation of the person charged, nor, in my opinion, would it be regarded by any gentleman resident in Oregon or Washington Territory as worth while to answer any published denunciations or charges made and signed by H. I. Chapman.

In conclusion, I deem it proper to say I have never had any quarrel or variance whatever with Chapman, but, on the contrary, procured him employment as surveyor for the Northern Pacific Railroad, chiefly from regard and old friendship for his father, who like myself is an old and life-long democrat.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES TILTON,
Civil Engineer.

Senator WINDOM.

Mr. WINDOM. The writer of that letter is known by nearly everybody in Oregon and Washington Territory as a gentleman of high standing. In addition to his testimony, I will state that the Hon. O. Jacobs, Delegate in Congress from Washington Territory, formerly chief-justice of that Territory, who is now seated at my right, authorizes me to say that this letter of General Tilton's is none too strong; that it is simply what he would say himself. I was unable to find him before making the statement.

All I want to say further, Mr. President, is that the charge that I have ever received any consideration in money or otherwise, directly or indirectly, from General McMicken for appointing him or keeping him in office, or in any manner or form connected with or growing out of his official position, is wholly, wickedly, and absolutely false, and without a shadow of foundation in fact. But as this charge is made and on file in the Department, I move that a committee of three be appointed for the purpose of investigating it, and that that committee be composed entirely of gentlemen on the democratic side of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that a special committee of three be appointed to investigate the matter which he has just ventilated to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly think it is necessary to pass a resolution of that kind. I do not think there is a single member of the Senate who would have any other opinion than he at present entertains, after the most searching investigation.

Mr. GORDON. I rose when the Senator from Vermont did, to make a similar remark. I have no doubt that there is not a gentleman on this floor who does not know that the charge is false. The whole country knows it; and it is dignifying this assault upon the Senator from Minnesota to make any investigation about it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I concur most cordially in what the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Georgia have said. We here, who know the Senator from Minnesota, who have associated with him for long years and know that high character to which he is entitled, are fully justified in saying that it would be an error to undertake to prosecute such a dirty character as this any further; and I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. CRAGIN. I concur fully in what has just been said by the Senator from Maine and other Senators who have preceded me. But I rose mainly to say that during the last session of the present Congress this same Chapman made charges against the present governor of Washington Territory, when his name was before the Committee on Territories for confirmation or for recommendation for confirmation. Being upon that committee, I listened to those charges. The governor came before the committee and refuted them, and the committee were unanimously of the opinion that this Chapman had lied to the committee; and we recommended the confirmation of the man who was nominated for governor of that Territory.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, it is hardly worth while to add anything to what has been said, and so truthfully; but my knowledge of the Senator from Minnesota and official connection with him goes back ten years before he became a member of this body, and that, as much as anything that could be said by those who have known him here, strengthens me in urging that the Senator from Minnesota do not press this motion.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not withdraw the resolution, and I trust the Senate will show its appreciation of the Senator and its indignation at such an attack upon him by voting unanimously against the appointment of such a committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. If I thought there was the least shadow of foundation for the charge I would gladly vote for the resolution; but I do not think it would be possible for the report of any committee of investigation on that subject to add anything to the vindication of the Senator from Minnesota. I think he already stands fully vindicated before this Senate and before the country; and, believing so, I shall vote against the resolution for the appointment of a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was rejected unanimously.

RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate take from the table and proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules. I think it lies on the table at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I will state for the information of Senators that the print shows the rules as now adopted and in force by the Senate upon the left-hand side of the pamphlet which lies upon their tables; and on the right-hand side, at page 27, commences the report of the committee with the portions of the old rules omitted in brackets and the new portions advised by the committee in italics. With that explanation, and with the print before them and the attention that has already been given, as this print has been before Senators three or four weeks, I think the Senate is prepared to go on with the report, and the first rule may be read.

Mr. MORRILL. Had we not better begin at the point where we left off?

Mr. FERRY. The Senator at my right suggests that we continue where we left off on a previous occasion when the matter was considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that course will be pursued.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire that we shall begin at the beginning of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri objects. The report will be considered from the beginning.

Mr. WHYTE. I would suggest to the Senator from Michigan that the Senators who objected the last time we had this subject under consideration are now absent from the Senate engaged in business connected with their duties as members of a committee which has had leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate. They are absent, and I think the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] a member of the Committee on Rules, proposed or did offer some minority report.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator is mistaken in that respect. The Senator from North Carolina, a member of the committee, concurs with this report, and authorized me to make it and have it considered, if it could be done, in his absence.

Mr. WHYTE. I may be mistaken in regard to the last statement; but I am not mistaken, because I was personally present, in regard to the first statement which I made, that the very inquiry made of the Senator from Michigan when we had this subject up before, in regard to the changes that had taken place and the desire that a report should be made of the rules in the form in which it has now been made, was made by Senators who are now absent from the Senate Chamber; and unless they have given some assent to taking up this report in their absence, I think it would be probably more courteous to give them an opportunity of being heard before we adopt these rules.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Maryland is substantially correct in what he states, as I recollect. My object is not to press the rules to adoption entirely to-day, but to pass the report through the Committee of the Whole, which we can as well do to-day. I am aware that when the rules were up before it was felt by some Senators that my explanation of the rules as we progressed was not sufficiently clear; in other words, that it could not be made so apparent, so palpable to other Senators who were watching the progress of the consideration. Therefore the report was recommitted for the purpose of a new print. It now appears in the form which the committee have recommended, and I think it is so plain that he who runs may read. My purpose now is to go through the report in Committee of the Whole, which we can as well do with those Senators who are present and save that much time; but when the report reaches the Senate I will move, if no other Senator does, that it be laid aside temporarily, so that those Senators can be present when it is finally considered. I was aware that they are not present. I was also aware that the Senator from North Carolina, a member of the committee, was not present, and I had his consent and his desire that I should call up the report so that the rules might be adopted. I would state that the report is the unanimous report of the committee. I now ask that Rule 1 be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the first rule reported by the Committee on Rules, the rules being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Quorum—reading the Journal.

1. The presiding officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall then be read, and any mistake made in the entries may be corrected. The reading of the Journal shall not be suspended unless by unanimous consent; and when any motion shall be made to amend or correct the same, it shall be deemed a privileged question, and proceeded with until disposed of by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule is now open to amendment. No amendment being offered, unless objection be made it will be regarded as obtaining the assent of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. No objection being made to it, the next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When a quorum is not present.

2. If either at the commencement of any daily session of the Senate, or at any time during its daily sessions, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the presiding officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll of Senators, and shall announce the result to the Senate; and these proceedings shall be without debate.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest, if there be no amendments offered to the rules as they are read as reported by the committee, that they be considered as agreed to, which course will save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent that suggestion will be regarded as the wish of the Senate. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Absent Senators sent for to make a quorum.

3. No Senator shall absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave first obtained. Whenever it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel, the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and, pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no motion, except a motion to adjourn, nor debate, shall be in order; and all proceedings under this rule shall cease upon an adjournment.

Mr. WHYTE. It is well for us to understand at this time from whom a Senator has to obtain leave of absence. The powers of the President of the Senate may again be involved in this inquiry hereafter, and perhaps it had better be ascertained before any question arises. The words "of the Senate" after "leave" are proposed to be stricken out of the old rule. Then from whom are we to obtain leave if we desire to be absent? That ought not to be left open to question hereafter.

Mr. FERRY. The committee thought that was tautology. No such permission can be granted by the presiding officer. The permission comes from the Senate. Leave of absence can only be granted by the Senate, and as it was a mere repetition of words the committee deemed it best to strike it out, as their object was to make the rules as terse as possible, combining the idea and force of the rules in as simple language as possible.

Mr. WHYTE. I should prefer to see the words "of the Senate" remain. It certainly does no harm to the rule to retain them, and it relieves it of all embarrassment whatever. That is one objection that I have to this proposed amendment. Now, I object to the other amendment which authorizes a majority of the Senate to compel members of the Senate to attend. Under the rule heretofore a request through the Sergeant-at-Arms has been quite sufficient to induce Senators to return to the Senate Chamber in order to make up a quorum. That rule has prevailed in the Senate for years, and I think the honor of a Senator ought to be sufficient to guarantee his presence when the Sergeant-at-Arms notifies him that the Senate is without a quorum. I shall, therefore, vote against striking out the words "of the Senate" and against the substitute proposed by the committee for that part of the old rule which is in brackets.

Mr. FERRY. I have no particular objection to retaining the words "of the Senate" if they make it clearer in the judgment of the Senator from Maryland. I make no point there. I on my part make no special point in regard to the second amendment, to which he has called attention; but, there being as the committee found on every such occasion a desire and in many cases an attempt to move the compulsory attendance of Senators, it was thought best by the committee that this should be included in the rule, leaving the power in hands of the Senate or in the minority at the time to say which they wanted, whether a simple request or a compulsory attendance. We have found ourselves in difficulty at several sessions of the Senate on account of a minority not being able to secure the attendance of a majority of the Senate. For that reason it is left by the report of the committee optional with the minority to determine which course they will pursue. It is not mandatory: it gives them the opportunity, the privilege, and the power to do so at the time. We well know by the force of the rules it is impossible to change a rule at that time without giving a day's notice. In such cases we find ourselves in a predicament, without the possibility of relieving ourselves. For that purpose these words were ingrafted in the report, to enable the Senate to relieve itself at the time when it found the necessity arise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Maryland is moving an amendment to that portion of the rule.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir; I ask that the words "of the Senate" be restored.

Mr. WEST. I am inclined to concur with the views expressed by the Senator from Maryland as to the impropriety of changing what has been the standing order of the Senate since its establishment. If the inclination of the Senate should be to change it, let it be done when there is such a representation here as will command the respect of the entire body. We are quite a minority here at present, and I would suggest to the Senator having charge of these rules that he let that particular question lie over until an ampler attendance here can determine it. In the mean time the attention of Senators will be called to it. For one I shall agree with the Senator from Maryland, and object to its being made compulsory to require the attendance of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That rule will be reserved, if there be no objection.

Mr. FERRY. I appreciate the observation of the Senator from Louisiana in regard to the fewness of the number of Senators present, and have no objection to this rule being passed over. I suggest to the Senator that it might be reported as it is to the Senate, and when we come to concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, an amendment might be made and thus the question reached when there is a full Senate. Several Senators have expressed a desire that that power should be included in the rules. The committee considered the matter very carefully and were unanimous in the view that the Senate ought to have the privilege of compelling attendance. As is seen by the language it is a choice, and the minority present can either request or compel. If the words are left out they can simply request, and we shall find ourselves frequently without a quorum when it is impossible to make a quorum.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to this clause of the rule being passed over, but I am unwilling that it shall be omitted at this time under the impression that has been produced by the Senators from Maryland and Louisiana, that this interpolation is in any sense an innovation or the result of any improper action on the part of the committee. If those Senators will refer to section 5 of the first article of the Constitution they will observe that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide." That is, therefore, a provision that is older than the rules of the Senate and it rests upon a constitutional requisition.

Mr. WEST. A Constitutional permission.

Mr. INGALLS. If the committee omitted this provision entirely there would still exist a power under the Constitution to compel the attendance of absent members of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding of the Chair is that the amendment of the Senator from Maryland suggesting the addition of the words "of the Senate," which were stricken out by the committee, has been adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. FERRY. I interpose no objection to that. That will be the understanding.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the understanding?

Mr. FERRY. That the words "of the Senate" after "without leave" be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the second line of the rule in the report as printed.

Mr. FERRY. I trust the Senator from Louisiana will allow this rule to be concurred in as in Committee of the Whole, and when we come into the Senate and the question is upon concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole an amendment can then be offered. We shall in this way go through with the rules and make such amendments as we can while in committee, and when the Senate is full and the report is in the Senate proper, we can then conclude the consideration of the report.

Mr. STEVENSON. Did the Senator from Maryland offer an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that the Senator from Maryland wishes further to amend the rule.

Mr. STEVENSON. Why can we not vote on that amendment?

Mr. WEST. It has not been presented.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to strike out in the fourth line of the amendment to the rule printed in italics the words "and, where necessary, to compel;" so as to read:

> Whenever it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of the absent Senators, &c.

Mr. WEST. I have the same objection to voting upon that amendment that I have to voting upon the original proposition, that that would define a rule for the whole body when few Senators are present, and I think of very great consequence and importance. Therefore we had better adopt the suggestion of the Senator who has charge of the report and let the matter go over with the understanding that it will not be voted on finally until there shall be a full Senate or at least a quorum here. I do not want to decide it now according to my view of the case for or against it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Louisiana. I think the amendments of the committee ought not to be voted upon finally until we have a full Senate.

And now I have a word to say to the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] Although the Constitution does confer the power, let me tell that Senator that for eighty-odd years that power has never been asserted. I recall a historical incident in the history of the Senate which is somewhat remarkable. At the meeting of the First Congress they were a month without a quorum. I think not less than three or four steps were offered by distinguished members of the Senate to compel absent Senators to come from the separate States; but our fathers had so great a respect for this body that they refused to exercise the constitutional power by resorting to any compulsion. If those wise men could wait for a quorum for a month, and I think it was fully that time, and if from that time to this no necessity has been found to use any disrespectful term by putting in this word "compulsion," I hope it will not be done now. I do not think there is any necessity for it. For eighty-odd years a mere request has been sufficient, and I hope the same respect will be shown the Senate hereafter, and that we shall exercise no such compulsory power.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky inform the Senate when it was that those Senators were so clement, when the Senate was in session so long without any quorum?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not understand the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. At what time was it?

Mr. STEVENSON. At the first session of Congress.

Mr. WEST. From March 4 to April 6.

Mr. STEVENSON. At the beginning of the Government, as shown from the archives of the Government, at the first session after the Constitution was adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. In 1789.

Mr. STEVENSON. My recollection is that they were in session nearly a month without a quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. From March 4 to April 6.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; over a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. This Government did not have all the machinery of the Constitution at that time. It was at a time when we were passing from the Congress of the confederation to the government under the Constitution of the United States. The President had not been inaugurated; the Senate never had organized and was not a body under the Constitution of the United States at that time. There had never been an organization of the Senate under the Constitution at that time; the President had not been declared elected; and a minority of those pretending to be the Senate then, as a matter of course, could not have exercised the power which afterward was exercised.

Mr. STEVENSON. No; but the argument is against the Senator. If there ever was a time in history when Senators should have been present, that was the occasion, and there was no such effort attempted; and from that day to this no such attempt has been made. The Senator says, at least that is the inference, that we are wiser than our fathers; that there are greater men here now than there were then. I differ with him. I would to God we had some of them now, men of enlarged intellect, of the highest patriotism, of the soundest judgment, who were willing to meet every exigency and to pass such rules as the safety of the country demanded and the honor of the Senate suggested.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am exceedingly gratified at the patriotic burst of eloquence coming from the Senator from Kentucky and at the noble tribute which he has paid to our fathers; but I believe that those worthy fathers still have illustrious and worthy children; that we have not degenerated to the extent which his speech would indicate; and that in this body to-day there are as much patriotism and as much devotion to the Constitution and constitutional liberty as there were from the 4th day of March to the 6th day of April, 1789, when the Senate first organized under the Constitution. I believe that we are just as patriotic and will do justice just as fairly and even-handedly as they did then. I cast no aspersion upon those characters and I cast no reflection upon those who are living to-day. I think if the Senate had been in session and organized under the Constitution, then the very patriotic citizens referred to by the Senator from Kentucky would have exercised their constitutional power in bringing absentees here. If States send Senators to this body to transact the business of this country and we cannot keep a quorum of them here, I am in favor of putting forth the power of the Constitution to bring them here, or I am in favor of a constitutional amendment which would authorize each State to appoint substitutes for its Senators, which substitutes should take the place of absent Senators and draw their pay. If such a provision were adopted, I think it would be a most excellent thing.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that this rule be temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless objection be made, the rule under consideration will be passed by informally.

Mr. COCKRELL. The whole rule?

Mr. FERRY. The whole rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to ask a question in regard to one point, and that is as to these proceedings ceasing, determining, upon an adjournment?

Mr. FERRY. That is the practice. It has been the uniform practice of the Senate that in case of finding the Senate without a quorum, at the adjournment all the proceedings connected with it shall cease.

Mr. COCKRELL. For example, if process issue to compel the presence of absent Senators, and they are not here in the city, but are absent, and that process cannot be executed within two or three days, shall the Senators who are here be kept in session all that time? If they adjourn, the process which has been started out fails according to the rule and the Sergeant-at-Arms or officer would have no authority to go on and execute the order of the Senate after its adjournment. Cannot provision be made and the rules so amended that in case the Sergeant-at-Arms should be sent for absent Senators, the power to bring those absent Senators would remain after the adjournment of the Senate?

Mr. FERRY. The object of the clause was to secure the attendance of Senators and a quorum of the Senate. If the Senate adjourns without compelling the attendance of the Senators, they fail to secure their object. That being done by the vote of the majority of those present in their judgment, it is thought best that no further proceedings shall be had when they adjourn. For that reason the committee thought it was best to terminate all proceedings with the adjournment in a case of that kind.

Mr. WEST. The rule is to be passed over, I understand?

Mr. FERRY. It is to be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule will be passed by, and the next rule will be reported.

Mr. INGALLS. I am not willing that this subject shall be finally concluded without some better reason having been given than has been yet assigned by the Committee on Rules for the omission of the definition of a quorum. The Constitution provides that "a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business." The standing rules as they exist at the present time declare that "a quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn." The Constitution further provides that the Senate "shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote." It certainly is exceedingly important for the Senate to determine, and it never was more important than now, whether a quorum to do business shall be a quorum of the number of Senators which the Senate is entitled under the Constitution to have, or whether it shall be a majority of those persons who are chosen and sworn, or whether it shall be a majority of a majority who may be present at the time in the Chamber. There are three different views which may be taken of this question. At the present time I believe thirty-eight Senators constitute a majority of those duly sworn. Therefore a quorum to do business in one view of the case may consist of a majority of thirty-eight Senators. In another view a quorum would consist of a majority of those who are actually present and sworn in excess of thirty-eight. I believe there are at this time vacancies in one of the States and perhaps more.

Mr. FERRY. One; Louisiana.

Mr. INGALLS. There is one vacancy in Louisiana. It is possible that hereafter there may be vacancies in more than one State. Therefore it seems to me that it is exceedingly important that the Senate should determine in its rules what shall be a quorum sufficient for the transaction of business. When this matter was before the Senate on a previous day, the Senator from Michigan who has charge of this subject said that they omitted the definition of a quorum simply because it was defined in the Constitution; but that does not do, because while that has always existed the Senator knows that there have been occasions heretofore when it was exceedingly necessary to have a definition outside of the Constitution, and that definition was made in May, 1864, and March, 1868. It seems to me very important that this definition should be continued.

Mr. FERRY. The committee thought that by following the Constitution they were explicit enough. I do not exactly understand the point made by the Senator from Kansas. The Constitution says that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum. Certainly no person is entitled to a seat in this body until he has been duly sworn. He does not become a member of this body until then. He may be a member-elect, but he is not entitled to participate in the proceedings of the Senate until he has been duly sworn. He cannot constitute a portion of the body without being sworn; and if a quorum be a majority of the Senate, then certainly if he be sworn he is a part of that membership and enters into the number that shall constitute a quorum; and if he has not been sworn in he is not entitled to a seat. I cite the case of the State of Louisiana where the State is now represented by but one Senator. There may be a Senator-elect from that State and yet not sworn into this body. Therefore he is not a member of the body, so that thirty-eight members to-day constitute a quorum of the Senate, when, if the Senate were full and the State of Louisiana represented fully by two Senators, it would require thirty-nine Senators to constitute a quorum. The committee deemed it sufficient to follow the language of the Constitution.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Michigan will observe that under the Constitution the Senate is a definite body, of fixed membership. It is not like the House of Representatives, that may vary from time to time according to the population of the country; but the Senate of the United States, under the Constitution, "shall be composed of two Senators from each State." Therefore, at the present time there being thirty-eight States in the Union, under the Constitution there should be seventy-six members of this body. As the number of members in this body is expressly defined by the Constitution, and as the Constitution further provides that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business, the question arises whether if there is anything less than the number of Senators defined by the Constitution the number necessary to constitute a quorum is changed. It seems that the Committee on Rules previously acting, in 1864 and 1868, thought differently, and they said that a majority of those members chosen and sworn shall constitute a quorum. There has evidently been a difference of opinion on this subject, and it seems to me we ought to determine now whether a majority of the entire number of two from each State shall be a quorum, or whether a majority of those chosen and sworn shall be a quorum.

Mr. FERRY. The fact that it requires but thirty-eight to-day to constitute a quorum of this body is a sufficient answer to the remark of the Senator from Kansas. It settles the question what this Senate is. To-day the Senate is not full, although every State is entitled and has the right by the Constitution to be represented here by two Senators. Each State has that right, but the State of Louisiana is represented by but one Senator. In that event but thirty-eight Senators are required to constitute a quorum. I therefore repeat that, if the State of Louisiana were fully represented and all the States of the Union were fully represented to-day on this floor, we should require thirty-nine Senators instead of thirty-eight to constitute a quorum. Now the committee deemed that in following the language of the Constitution which says that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum, they were strictly within the injunction of the Constitution, and could not properly travel beyond it.

The Senator cites attention to the old rule, the present rule now in force, which says that "a quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn." No Senator can be sworn until he is chosen. There would be no need of inserting in a rule that a Senator shall be duly chosen and sworn when he cannot participate in the proceedings of the Senate until he is sworn. The fact that the language of the Constitution is that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum does not settle what a House is. The fact that a Senator is sworn in entitles him to his place, and the number of Senators sworn into this body compose this body, this House. I cannot see how there can be any difference of opinion upon that point or any doubt upon the question. The language of the present rule is perhaps more explicit, though it is not needed; but the rule might say, as the old rule, that "a quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn." As I said, no Senator can participate here or become a member of this body until he is sworn. If that be the case, if I am correct in that statement, then certainly a majority of each House would be as to-day a majority of those who have been sworn. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas again to the fact that we are to-day practicing upon that view; that we consider to-day thirty-eight a majority of the Senate, when in fact, if the other Senator from Louisiana were here and a member of this body, it would require thirty-nine to be a quorum.

Mr. INGALLS. I believe, under the Constitution, that thirty-nine Senators form to-day a legal quorum of the Senate, and that thirty-eight are not a quorum.

Mr. ANTHONY. For a long time after I first came into this body the rule prevailed which the Senator from Kansas thinks to be the constitutional law. A quorum consisted of a majority of the number, equal to two Senators from every State; and for a long time after the southern Senators had withdrawn it was necessary for a quorum to consist of the same number as though they were here. The present rule was then introduced, providing that a quorum should consist of a majority of the Senators elected and sworn. That rule, I believe, had always prevailed in the House. The debate here was very long, and the subject was very thoroughly discussed when the present rule was adopted, I think by a pretty considerable majority.

Mr. GORDON. When was that?

Mr. ANTHONY. That must have been about 1864. I voted against that rule, but I think I voted wrong. I think that the rule was perfectly right.

Mr. DAWES. The language of the Constitution in reference to what constitutes a quorum is the same in its application to both Houses. The House of Representatives is as much fixed by statute in its number as the Senate is fixed by the Constitution; and it has long been the practice of the House that a majority of the qualified members shall constitute a quorum. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan whether the term "qualified members" does not express the whole idea; and whether it is not better than the phrase "chosen and sworn." Never since I have known the House of Representatives has any other rule prevailed there, and the language of the Constitution is the same in respect to both.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will excuse me, there is no qualifying phrase in the rule at all, neither the words "qualified members" nor "members chosen and sworn." There is an entire omission of a definition of a quorum, and it is my opinion that if the definition is dropped, from the time the rules now proposed are adopted it will require thirty-nine members to be a quorum instead of thirty-eight, the whole number of Senators remaining as at present.

Mr. DAWES. I must be allowed to say that it seems to me that no other rule can possibly prevail than that a quorum shall consist of a majority of the qualified members. Nothing else constitutes the Senate; not the majority of possible members but the majority of those who are authorized to transact business. That number constitutes the Senate. Why should the fact that it may be possible hereafter to increase that number have any effect upon what constitutes a quorum to-day? A quorum to-day in the language of the Constitution is a majority of the members, and no person can possibly be a member who is not also a qualified member.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator from Rhode Island says that the contrary rule prevailed from the foundation of the Government down to 1864.

Mr. DAWES. I know that the Senator from Rhode Island said that, and the Senator from Kansas said that he was of the opinion that that was the true rule. With great deference to the Senator from Rhode Island, and with some hesitancy after his expression of opinion, I venture to suggest that I do not see how it is possible that any person not authorized to act at all, not qualified to act, whose vote cannot be taken if he offers it, could be counted upon the question of a quorum to determine whether there are sufficient members here to transact business, and that you should go outside and count in the number any individual who had no more right or voice here than a stranger. I do not see, in the absence of any words that would compel me to such a conclusion, that it would be reasonable.

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not say as my friend from Kansas reports me that the former rule went back to the beginning of the Government. My memory goes back a good while in this Chamber but not quite so far back as that. It was the rule when I first came into this Chamber now nearly eighteen years ago. How long it had been the rule previous to that time, I do not know, and although I believe I voted against the modification of the rule I am satisfied now that I voted wrong. I think the present rule is the only one that is consistent in the transaction of the business of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Then ought it not to be retained?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the rule ought to be retained as it is now. I think in voting for the old conservative rule of making a quorum consist of the whole number of possible Senators, I voted wrong. I think I had very great authority with me however. I think Mr. Foster and Mr. Foot voted that way.

Mr. MAXEY. The Constitution declares that no State shall be deprived of equal representation in the Senate; but suppose a State, from any cause over which the Senate has no control, fails to secure its equal representation in the Senate, then such a rule would require the Senate to be composed of a quorum of men who were never appointed or of a majority of men who never had position in the body. The case as put by the Senator from Michigan is undoubtedly true. If the entire body to-day were filled there would be seventy-six members and consequently thirty-nine would be a quorum; but this body is not filled. There is but one Senator from Louisiana. Hence seventy-five comprise all who are legally chosen and qualified, and thirty-eight constitute a quorum. It seems to me that the correct view is to have a majority of those duly chosen and qualified to constitute a quorum. That is the only correct view that can be taken, it seems to me.

Mr. FERRY. As we have already passed over the rule, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas who has raised the point that we pass on, and when we come into the Senate, if he be so disposed when the Senate shall be fuller than it is now, he suggest an amendment to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. That is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule will be regarded as passed over. The Clerk will report the next rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

President pro tempore to be chosen.

4. In the absence of the Vice-President, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore, and the presiding officer shall have the right to name a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

Mr. FERRY. That substantially is the old rule. We have prefixed "in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore," which is in the Constitution. We have used, substantially, the language of the Constitution. We changed the phraseology, but the substance is the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made the rule will be regarded as adopted and the next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Making up the Journal.

5. The proceedings of the Senate shall briefly and accurately be stated on the Journal; messages of the President in full; titles of bills and joint resolutions, and such parts as shall be affected by proposed amendments; every vote, and a brief statement of the contents of each petition, memorial, or paper presented to the Senate shall be entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Separate journals to be kept.

6. The legislative proceedings, the executive proceedings, the confidential legislative proceedings, and the proceedings when sitting as a court of impeachment of the Senate, shall each be recorded in a separate book.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as adopted. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS.

7. The presentation of credentials of Senators-elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection be made, this rule will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

[Morning business, petitions, reports, &c.] Morning hour.

8. One hour next after and including the reading of the Journal shall be designated as the morning hour, during which the order of business shall be as follows:

First. The presiding officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the Senate; and such bills, joint resolutions, and other messages from the House of Representatives as may remain upon his table from any previous day's session undisposed of.

Second. The presiding officer shall then call for, in the following order:

The presentation of petitions and memorials.

Reports of the standing and select committees.

The introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Concurrent and other resolutions.

Until the business of the morning hour shall have been concluded and so announced from the Chair, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar shall be entertained by the Chair, unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given, the motion shall not be open to amendment, and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up; nor shall the consideration of any subject taken up during the morning hour, except a motion to amend the Journal, or a motion pertaining to the credentials of a Senator-elect, or his admission to his seat, be extended, unless by unanimous consent, beyond the expiration of the morning hour.

If any portion of the morning hour shall remain after the call for resolutions, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate, in their order, resolutions and concurrent resolutions introduced on any prior day, and the same shall be proceeded with, but not beyond the expiration of the morning hour, unless by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. "One hour next after and including." Is not that a singular expression?

Mr. FERRY. The object of that, as the Senator will see, is this: If the reading of the Journal is not included, the hour will fluctuate and the close of the morning hour will not be at one o'clock but at a varying time afterward, whereas by including the reading of the Journal the morning hour will expire at one o'clock when we meet at twelve o'clock. If the reading of the Journal should take ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes, the morning hour would be extended that time, unless some such language as this were employed and its expiration would be indefinite. Now we are to be guided by the hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I supposed. But it reads:

One hour next after and including the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FERRY. "And including;" the conjunction "and" is used.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is "one hour next after," it cannot include the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FERRY. If it ended there, it would not; but as the conjunction "and" is there, of course the sentence is not closed nor is it completed until it includes the reading of the Journal.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is whether you can make anything "next after and including." Can you make "one hour next after and including the reading of the Journal?"

Mr. FERRY. It is a mere question of language. The idea is the same. If the Senator will suggest any amendment, very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point is, "one hour after the meeting of the session, including the reading of the Journal."

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will suggest any modification which will convey more clearly to his mind the object, I shall be glad.

Mr. COCKRELL. "One hour after the convening of the Senate, and including the reading of the Journal," or say "one hour, including the reading of the Journal."

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope not; let it stand as it is.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will perceive that the rule now does not fix exactly when the hour shall be. Putting in "one hour next after and including the reading of the Journal" makes the hour expire independent of the time consumed in the reading of the Journal. The time when the hour shall commence is to be at the commencement of the reading of the Journal.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the first business in order.

Mr. FERRY. That is the first business in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not say "one hour after the convening of the Senate shall be designated as the morning hour;" the first hour of time from the moment the Senate convenes?

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will see the difficulty in framing language that will cover both ideas; and perhaps if he dwells a little longer upon the real idea conveyed by the language, he will see that it perhaps is as well as it can be framed for that purpose. "Next, after and including" is the phrase. Of course "next after" and "including" something must go together; the two go together; it is one hour next after and including the reading of the Journal. It means, in other words, that there shall be more time than is occupied by the reading of the Journal; that it shall cover the reading of the Journal not only but as much more time as that reading does not occupy of one hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it should be "one hour next after the convening of the Senate, and including the reading of the Journal." But you have "next after" following the reading of the Journal; it makes them conflict entirely, I think. If it was "one hour next after the opening of the Senate, and including the reading of the Journal," it would be plain.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that we pass along, and meanwhile the Senator from Missouri may frame some language that will express it more explicitly. The committee will be perfectly satisfied with anything that will carry the idea.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it the understanding of the committee that the Journal shall be read in the morning hour?

Mr. FERRY. Yes, in the morning hour.

Mr. INGALLS. Then let the language be that "one hour next after the opening of the Senate shall be designated as the morning hour," during which the order of business shall be as follows:

"First, the Journal shall be read," &c.

Mr. FERRY. We have already governed the question of the opening of the session by Rule 1. The object of this new draught of the rules is to make them as terse as possible, conveying no multiplication of ideas, and keeping but one leading idea in a rule. That has been the purpose; and if there is any force and merit in the report of the committee, it is the accomplishment of that object. And that is why Senators will see considerable modification in the rules, because the committee have attempted to change the phraseology and narrow it down so as to convey the idea intended by each rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be passed over in accordance with the suggestion made, if there be no objection. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Unfinished business.

9. Immediately upon the expiration of the morning hour, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate the unfinished business at its last adjournment, which shall take precedence of the special orders, and shall be proceeded with until disposed of by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, this rule will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Special orders.

10. Any subject or matter may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the hour fixed for the consideration of a special order shall arrive, it shall be the duty of the presiding officer to lay such special order before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, in which case the unfinished business shall have precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this rule? There being none, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Precedence in special orders.

11. When two or more subjects shall have been made special orders for the same day and hour, they shall have precedence according to the order of time at which they severally were assigned; which order shall not be changed, unless by direction of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule reported? There being none, it will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Special order of the day.

12. Every special order shall, unless superseded by the unfinished business, be called upon the day and at the hour to which it was assigned; and if not disposed of on that day, it shall then take its place upon the Calendar of Special Orders, in the order of time at which it was made a special order, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Mr. INGALLS. If it is superseded by any unfinished business, what becomes of it?

Mr. FERRY. It goes back to the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Will it remain a special order?

Mr. FERRY. It will remain a special order.

Mr. INGALLS. When to be taken up?

Mr. FERRY. According to its order, whenever there is no unfinished business. It is not supplanted in relation to other special orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made to the rule reported it will be regarded as agreed to. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Calendar of General Orders.

13. At the expiration of the morning hour, if there shall be neither unfinished business nor special order, the Senate shall proceed with the Calendar of General Orders, unless it shall otherwise determine; and the subjects upon the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up in the order in which they stand, and, if not finally disposed of, shall retain their respective positions on said Calendar until such final disposition. And in all cases where the Senate shall take up the Calendar of General Orders, and shall not have gone through therewith when the same shall be resumed, it shall be at the point which was reached when last under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PETITIONS.

Presentation and reference.

14. Before any petition or memorial shall be received or read at the table, it shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist and a brief statement of its contents shall be made by the Senator or presiding officer presenting it. But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power, unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President, shall be received.

Every petition or memorial shall be referred of course, without putting the question, unless objection be made by a Senator; in which case all motions for the reception or reference of such petition, memorial, or other paper shall be put in the order in which the same shall be made, and shall not be open to amendment, except to add instructions; but a motion to refer to a standing committee shall take precedence of a motion to refer to a select committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this rule? There being none made, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Reading Papers.

15. When the reading of a paper is called for, and the same is objected to by any Senator, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate, and without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this rule objected to? No objection being made, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

VOTING.

Calling yeas and nays.

16. When the yeas and nays shall be called for by one-fifth of the Senators present, each Senator, when his name is called, shall, unless for special reasons he be excused by the Senate, declare openly and without debate his assent or dissent to the question; and in taking the yeas and nays upon any question the names of the Senators shall be called alphabetically.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being suggested, the rule will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Assigning reasons for not voting.

17. When a Senator, being present and declining to vote when his name is called, shall be required to assign his reasons therefor, and shall so assign them, the presiding officer shall thereupon submit the question to the Senate, "Shall the Senator, for the reasons assigned by him, be excused from voting?" which shall be decided without debate. And these proceedings shall be had after the roll shall have been called and before the result of the vote is announced; and any further proceedings by the Senate in reference thereto shall be after such announcement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose that rule is to bring the horse to the water and make him drink. I see that it is an entirely new rule.

Mr. FERRY. It is simply the practice of the Senate reduced to form. Each Senator is required to vote unless excused by the Senate; and this is merely putting into form that practice; simply that and nothing else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection be made, the rule will be regarded as adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. Is not that an unnecessary addition to Rule 16?

Mr. COCKRELL. This Rule 17 may be the practice of the Senate, but according to the theory of the committee reporting these rules it is entirely new, because it is so reported and printed as a new rule.

Mr. FERRY. Certainly the Senator is correct. So, also, Rule 7 as to the presentation of credentials is a new rule, but it is simply formulating the practice of the Senate. So this rule is; but it only provides and defines that there shall be no other interruption of a roll-call of the Senate except the excuse of a Senator who desires to withhold his vote and the Senate sees fit not to allow him to withhold his vote, that it shall be done then, and if there are any other proceedings that the call shall not be further interrupted, but that they shall be afterward. It is simply to facilitate and make certain the practice of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Cannot vote after decision announced.

18. When the yeas and nays shall be taken upon any question, no Senator shall, under any circumstances whatever, be permitted to vote after the decision shall have been announced from the Chair; but a Senator may, for special reasons assigned by him, with the unanimous consent of the Senate, change or withdraw his vote after such announcement. No motion to suspend this rule shall be in order.

Mr. FERRY. That is the practice now.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the announcement of the result, may a man change his vote then?

Mr. HAMLIN. By unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. By unanimous consent. There may have been a mistake. There have been such cases. It only allows him to do it by unanimous consent, not without.

Mr. INGALLS. Ought there not to be some limitation of time within which that can be done? It seems to me that opens a very wide field. There is absolutely no limitation then in the rule to the time when a Senator can change his vote. It seems to me there certainly ought to be some period fixed within which that change should be made.

Mr. HAMLIN. The remedy there is in the fact that it will require at any time, whether it be immediate or remote, the unanimous consent of the body. I vote under a misapprehension and I call the attention of the Senate to it immediately. We do sometimes, not very frequently, mistake a question when it is put, and we correct it within the time when we can do it under the rule. Now, the correction in this matter is with the Senate. If there be a case made where the unanimous consent of the Senate, the unanimous judgment of the Senate would say the Senator ought to have the right to change his vote, it would be done; not otherwise.

Mr. INGALLS. The rules do not allow a Senator to record his vote after the result has been announced; and I can see no reason why, if he is to be permitted to change it after the result is announced, there should not be some very brief limitation of time.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Kansas will remember how often it is that Senators who are paired, the fact of the pair having slipped their mind, vote, and after the announcement it occurs to them by some little circumstance and then they are allowed by unanimous consent to withdraw the vote. According to the strict construction of the rule, that would be prohibited. The modification of the rule is based upon "special reasons assigned by him." It would be unjust to the Senator away, who has left with the idea that he is paired with another Senator, so that the vote shall be recognized on subjects which he has designated—it would be hardly fair to him to require a Senator who has voted by misapprehension to keep his vote recorded. It is only in such instances, simply to protect the rights of Senators, that unanimous assent of the body may allow a vote to be changed or withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported?

Mr. INGALLS. I think it had better be reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule under consideration will be reserved. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Vice-President shall give casting vote.

19. When the Senate shall equally be divided, the Vice-President shall, by his vote, determine the question.

Mr. FERRY. I call the attention of the Senate to the change here in which "shall" and "may" occur. One is permissive and the other is imperative. The committee thought that the permanent presiding officer, in case of a tie, should be required to vote. The present rule does not require him.

Mr. INGALLS. What does the Constitution say?

Mr. ANTHONY. Can we do that? The Constitution does not require the Vice-President to vote.

Mr. FERRY. The Constitution says:

The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

Mr. ANTHONY. That does not require him to vote.

Mr. FERRY. It does not require him to vote.

Mr. ANTHONY. This rule requires him to vote.

Mr. FERRY. This rule requires him to vote.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can we impose by rule any duty on the Vice-President? I think not.

Mr. FERRY. It is for the Senate to determine its own rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule reported?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is open to amendment.

Mr. FERRY. Let it be passed over, then, until we reach the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed by informally, if there be no objection. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Reconsideration.

20. When a question has once been decided by a vote of the Senate, whether that vote be determined by a majority or by two-thirds of the Senate, any Senator voting on that side which prevailed may move for a reconsideration thereof, at any time, on the same day on which the vote was taken, or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter; and all motions to reconsider shall be decided by a majority of the Senate. When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider such vote shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same to the Senate; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Reconsideration—how limited.

21. If the Senate shall refuse to reconsider a vote, or if, upon the reconsideration of a vote, it shall re-affirm it first decision of the question, no further motion to reconsider shall be in order, unless by unanimous consent. And every motion to reconsider a vote taken upon any amendment or other question connected with a subject under consideration shall be decided at once, and a motion to reconsider may be laid on the table without affecting the question in reference to which the same may be made; and, if carried, shall be held to be a final disposition of such motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BILLS.

Bills—notice given for leave to bring in.

22. One day's notice at least shall be given of an intended motion for leave to bring in a bill or joint resolution; but in the introduction of bills or joint resolutions on leave, such notice may be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the use of retaining that provision?

Mr. FERRY. The question was up once before and several Senators, I think, objected to this being dispensed with.

Mr. INGALLS. It is never enforced.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator is correct; it is never enforced. It is always done by unanimous consent, and the committee thought it best that it should be ingrafted in the rule.

Mr. HAMLIN. I beg to dissent from the declaration that it is never enforced. I have seen it enforced in this body on several occasions. There have been bills, there may be again bills, introduced here which Senators believe to be improper subjects to be brought before the body. Such being the case, a Senator wants the right, and in this case the rule will give it to him of asking the judgment of the Senate whether the bill shall be received or not. It can do no harm. It will afford that protection if a case shall ever arise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being none it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Bills—three readings on three different days.

23. Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings previous to its being passed; and the presiding officer shall give notice at each reading whether it be the first, second, or third; which readings shall be on three different days, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection suggested, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Bills—first and second reading for reference.

24. No bill or joint resolution shall be committed or amended until it shall have been read twice; bills and joint resolutions introduced on leave, and bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives, shall be read once, and may be read twice, on the same day, if not objected to, for reference; but shall not be considered on that day, as in Committee of the Whole, nor debated, except for such reference, unless by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Bills—placed on Calendar.

25. Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice, if not objected to, on the same day, and be placed on the Calendar in the order in which the same may be reported; and every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave, and every bill and joint resolution of the House of Representatives which shall have received a first and second reading without being referred to a committee, shall, if objection be made to further proceeding thereon, also be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Bills—Committee of the Whole.

26. All bills and joint resolutions which shall have received two readings shall first be considered by the Senate in the same manner as if the Senate were in Committee of the Whole, after which they shall be reported to the Senate; and any amendments made in Committee of the Whole shall again be considered by the Senate, after which further amendment may be proposed. When a bill or resolution shall have been ordered to be read a third time, it shall not be in order to propose amendments, unless by unanimous consent, but it shall at all times be in order, before the final passage of any bill or resolution to move its commitment; and when the bill or resolution shall again be reported from the committee, it shall be placed on the Calendar, and when again considered by the Senate, it shall be as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENTS.

Amendments—general appropriation bills.

27. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported?

Mr. HAMLIN. My impression is that the rule is well enough as it is, but I am not quite sure but that it would be wise to add the words "or treaty." A treaty, it is true, is the law. I had the impression that the old rule did contain that word.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think so.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will see on the left-hand page the old rule.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the word "treaty" ought to be in there. If there is a treaty obligation, I say the same power ought to exist as if it were in a law.

Mr. INGALLS. The language of the old rule is "treaty stipulation."

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to add the words "treaty stipulation" after the word "law;" so as to read: "unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation, or resolution previously passed," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as amended? The Chair hears none, and it will be regarded as agreed to. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendments—referred one day before proposed.

28. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce; also, amendments to the bill establishing post-roads, proposing new post-roads, shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. INGALLS. I observe that the committee have left out the proviso in the present Rule 30, which prohibits amendments whose object is to provide for private claims. Was the omission intentional?

Mr. FERRY. It is provided for in another rule. The Senator will see it as we approach it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection to the rule as reported, it will be regarded as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendments—general legislation—relevancy—may be laid on the table.

29. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendments—private claims.

30. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. One objection strikes me to the twenty-ninth rule:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That is a sound principle in legislation. There ought not be any legislation upon an appropriation bill; but I submit that that should be a joint rule. Now the other House sends us legislation on appropriation bills. If we are not allowed to put legislation on appropriation bills then we should also make a rule that we would not consider legislation upon an appropriation bill when it comes here. The House has the right to put legislation upon appropriation bills and we must act upon it; but we cannot put any legislation on appropriation bills, and so we restrict ourselves from a privilege which the House does not restrict itself in. Therefore I think this rule should be a joint rule. I agree to the soundness of the proposition and have several times called the attention of the Senate to it, and I think that it was on my motion the subject was referred to the Committee on Rules; but surely it seems to me, we ought not to restrict ourselves in a respect in which the House is not restricted.

Mr. SHERMAN. The rules of the House are more restrictive in this respect than the rules of the Senate, much more, and now they can only put on these provisions by a suspension of the rules and a two-thirds vote.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the appropriation bills come to us loaded with legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that; but only during the present Congress. They are generally put on by a two-thirds vote. We are now very good about these things, but formerly it was the Senate that loaded down the appropriation bills, and not the House.

Mr. FERRY. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if it would not be an excellent way for the Senate to fortify itself by setting a good example to the House in this case. If the position is a sound one, as the Senator has happily remarked, then ought we not to include it in our rules, and, when such a bill comes here from the House with legislation, strike it out? The Senator from Ohio has stated that the House is more restricted than the Senate. If so, then we have not traveled as far as the House; but if they should overleap the barrier and send us legislation on appropriation bills we shall by our rule be inhibited from doing that and can send it back to the House stricken out, and the House will appreciate the force of the rule of the Senate and yield to it doubtless.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand, of course, that if an appropriation bill comes to us from the House with legislation upon it we must consider that legislation because it is in the bill. We can reject the legislation, it is true; but I think if we restrict ourselves from putting legislation on an appropriation bill we should also restrict ourselves from considering legislation that comes to us on appropriation bills. If the House has the privilege I think we ought to have it. I should be very glad to see it taken from both.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see how that is possible. Here an appropriation bill comes from the House with legislation in it. That bill must be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and they must consider the legislation. They must either recommend its rejection in this body or its adoption, because it is there; it is put on there by a two-thirds vote of the House of Representatives. That is the only way the slightest legislation can be placed upon an appropriation bill in the House, as I understand, except under the new rule of last session which is a rule of economy, or was intended to be. It seems to me that this rule is about as it ought to be now.

Mr. FERRY. This is simply prohibiting the reception of a general amendment to an appropriation bill. That is all. It does not interfere with what appears in the bill as it comes from the House; it is only prohibitory to the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then would it not be advisable for us to adopt the same rule as is adopted in the House? The House puts on legislation by a two-thirds vote. Why not let us do it by a two-thirds vote? I do not propose any amendment. I only wished to call the attention of the committee to this, which seems to me to be restricting the privilege of the Senate; and although it is taking from us a privilege which I think we ought not to have, still I think that one House ought to have it if the other has, and that therefore this restriction should be by a joint rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule having already been declared adopted, unless a motion to reconsider be made for the purpose of amendment the Clerk will report the next rule.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not mean to make any motion.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendments—division of a question.

31. If the question in debate contain several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert, which shall not be divided; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition; nor shall it prevent a motion simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion to strike out prevent a motion to strike out and insert. But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being none, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendments—filling blanks.

32. In filling blanks the largest sum and the longest time shall first be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this rule? There is none, and it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTIONS.

Shall lie over one day.

33. All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to this rule? It is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions—treated as bills.

34. Resolutions to which the approbation and signature of the President may be requisite, or which may grant money out of the contingent or any other fund, shall be treated in all respects in their introduction and form of proceeding in like manner with bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of this rule? The Chair hears none. It is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution.

35. Joint resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution shall be treated in all respects, in their introduction and form of proceeding in like manner with bills; but the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present shall not be requisite to decide any question on amendments nor extending to the merits, being short of the final question on the passage of the resolution, except a motion to postpone indefinitely, which shall be decided by a vote of two-thirds; but upon a question of insisting upon or receding from an amendment of the Senate to a resolution of the House of Representatives, or upon the final question of agreeing to an amendment of the House to a resolution of the Senate, and also upon agreeing to the report of a committee of conference upon any joint resolution proposing amendments to the Constitution, the vote shall be determined by two-thirds of the Senators present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported?

Mr. INGALLS. The word "joint" seems to be superfluous in that rule. There is no such thing under the Constitution as a joint resolution, as I understand.

Mr. FERRY. That word may be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend by striking out the word "joint." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is agreed to. The rule, as amended, is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEBATE.

A Senator may be called to order.

36. If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate the presiding officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be so called to order he shall sit down, and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate, which leave, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order; which motion shall then be in order and be determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Exceptionable words in debate taken down.

37. If a Senator be called to order for words spoken in debate, upon the demand of the Senator so called to order, or of any other Senator, the exceptionable words shall be taken down in writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, the rule is adopted.

The Chief Clerk read the next rule, as follows:

Senators not to be interrupted in debate.

38. The presiding officer shall name the Senator who is to speak, and in all cases the Senator who shall first rise and address the Chair shall speak first. No Senator shall speak to or interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent; and to obtain such consent he shall first address the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Limit in debate.

39. Every Senator, when he speaks, shall address the Chair, standing in his place; and no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate, which shall be determined without debate.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the committee mean by the words "on the same day without leave of the Senate?" I know Senators who rise here a dozen times a day and speak on questions, without asking leave.

Mr. FERRY. By unanimous consent. "Silence gives consent" is a common maxim. It is a very thoroughly practiced maxim in this Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wanted to know what the committee understood by asking leave.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the rule will be considered as adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ORDER.

Questions of order.

40. A question of order may be raised at any state of the business, and, when raised, shall be decided by the presiding officer, without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate; or he may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Appeals on questions of order.

41. When an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair, any subsequent question of order which may arise before that appeal shall be determined, likewise any appeal therefrom, shall be decided without debate. All appeals taken when a proposition not debatable is pending shall also be decided without debate; and any appeal may be laid on the table without prejudice to the pending proposition, and thereupon shall be held as affirming the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being no objection, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MOTIONS.

Motions seconded and when to be reduced to writing.

42. All questions shall be put by the presiding officer of the Senate, and before a motion be debated it shall be seconded, and if desired by the presiding officer, or any Senator, it shall also be reduced to writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being none, it is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Precedence of motions.

43. When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain,
To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business,
To lay on the table,
To postpone indefinitely,
To postpone to a day certain,
To commit,
To amend;
which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they stand arranged; and the motions relating to adjournment, to take a recess, to proceed to executive business, and to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the rule as reported? There being none, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Motion may be withdrawn or modified.

44. Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays, except a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being none, the rule is adopted. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Preamble may be withdrawn or laid on the table.

45. When a bill or resolution is accompanied by a preamble, the question shall first be put on the bill or resolution, and then on the preamble, which may be withdrawn by the mover before an amendment of the same or ordering of the yeas and nays; or it may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill or resolution, and shall be a final disposition of such preamble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as reported? There being none, the rule as reported is adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FERRY. Can we not go on with the rules?

Mr. ALLISON. We cannot finish them to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After six minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 15, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition signed by 8,000 citizens of the State of Vermont.

Mr. HALE. I must insist on the regular order. The gentleman from New York will have an opportunity to present it when his State is called.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. But it is not from my own State; it comes from another State.

Mr. HALE. That makes no difference, the gentleman from New York can present a paper from any State when his State is called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that upon the 19th day of January this House directed, by resolution, the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring to the bar of the House William Orton. The Chair understands that the Sergeant-at-Arms is not now present.

After a pause,

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri; and

An act (H. R. No. 2300) granting a pension to Margaret C. Bell.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) in reference to the congratulations from the republic of Pretoria, South Africa; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) relating to congratulations from the Argentine Republic.

NATIONAL MEDICAL LIBRARY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the memorial of the International Medical Congress, held at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1876, to the Congress of the United States, in behalf of the National Medical Library, for the completion and publication of its catalogue; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House resolutions relative to the National Medical Library, passed by the International Medical Congress, at Philadelphia, in September, 1876; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MEXICAN OUTRAGES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from certain United States soldiers and citizens of Galveston, Texas, relative to outrages committed by the Mexican authorities; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FOURTH ARKANSAS MOUNTED VOLUNTEERS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the bill for the relief of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RESERVATION IN COLORADO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report relative to the establishment of the agency on the south part of the reservation in Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRINTING OF THE PATENT OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to appropriations for the printing in the Patent Office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RECUSANT WITNESS—WILLIAM ORTON.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody William Orton, and said:

In obedience to the order of the House, I have arrested and now have at its bar the witness William Orton.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Orton, it is the duty of the Chair to ask you what excuse you have to offer for your failure to appear before a committee of this House sitting at New Orleans, Louisiana, to testify, and further, to produce before said committee, in compliance with a subpœna duces tecum, duly served on you and dated December 18, 1876, certain telegrams therein called for?

Mr. ORTON, (the recusant witness.) My answer is in writing and sworn to. I respectfully ask that it be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The witness submits an answer in writing and asks that the same be read by the Clerk. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will read the answer.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives:

I understand that I am arraigned before this honorable House to answer for a breach of its privileges and contempt of its authority, supposed and alleged to have been committed by me—

First. By failing to appear and testify at New Orleans on the 26th day of December, 1876, as a witness before the select committee, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman; and

Second. In not bringing before said committee certain papers as required by a certain subpœna served on me the 19th day of December, 1876, as follows:

By authority of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America.

To JOHN G. THOMPSON, Esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special messenger:

You are hereby commanded to summon William Orton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to be and appear before the select committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, to investigate the recent elections in Louisiana, and to bring with you all telegrams in your possession or under your control received or sent by William E. Chandler, Zachariah Chandler, J. Don Cameron, J. M. Edmunds, James Casey, William Pitt Kellogg, S. B. Packard, John F. Casey, J. R. G. Pitkin, Henry C. Dibbell, H. C. Warmoth, George W. Carter, and General Augur, from and at New Orleans, Louisiana, Washington City, District of Columbia, New York City, New York, since the 1st day of September last, in their chamber, in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, on 26th day of December, 1876, at the hour of twelve o'clock m., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee.

Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 18th day of December, 1876.

[SEAL.] SAM. J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Attest:

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

At the time of the service of said subpœna upon me, and for a long time before, I was and had been suffering from ailments of a character which then and at all times since rendered it impossible for me to take any long journey.

I am advised by my attending physician, Dr. William J. Baner, of New York, who has been my family physician for many years, and under whose treatment I then was and still am, and also by Drs. William Tod Helmuth and William Bodenhamer, surgeons of the city of New York, both of whom in conjunction with Dr. Baner have had me under treatment during the past two months, that I could not at the time required by said subpœna, or at any time since, have made such or any similar journey without suffering serious injury to my health.

As soon as possible after receiving the subpœna above referred to and consulting my medical adviser, I addressed to the honorable Speaker of this House a letter, from which the following is an extract, and to the contents of which letter I made oath, as appears upon the foot of said extract:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, December 23, 1876.

SIR: * * * I beg leave respectfully to inform you that, if any such messages have ever existed, (of which I have no knowledge,) I have never had, either personally or officially, any possession of them; that I have never had any control over them except as an agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, through and by the co-operation of subordinate agents; that the Western Union Telegraph Company has, without any knowledge or participation on my part, taken from me all power and control over all messages now in the possession of the company. I beg leave, therefore, respectfully, to be excused from compliance with the above-mentioned requirement, it never having been at any time since the service of the subpœna and being not now in my power to comply with the same.

Very respectfully, &c.,

WILLIAM ORTON.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the 23d day of December, 1876, William Orton, to me personally known, who, being duly sworn, deposed that the annexed statement, addressed to Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker of the House of Representatives, is true, and that the same is made as and for his return to the certain paper purporting to be a subpœna referred to therein.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM ARNOUX,
Notary Public, City and County of New York.

I also at the same time addressed to Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON a letter, of which the following is a copy:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, December 23, 1876.

SIR: Accompanying this I send you a communication made by me this day to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in respect to a paper served upon me, and which requires the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to summon me to appear before your committee at New Orleans on the 26th of December. I do not suppose it is thought I possess any personal knowledge concerning any of the matters to be investigated by that committee.

I am but now recovering from a long and serious illness, and my health is in such a state that I could not, without great inconvenience and risk as well as unnecessary expense to the Government, make so long a journey as that to New Orleans. I trust, therefore, that I may be relieved from personal attendance, and that such report as you may think proper to make to the Speaker of the House may not involve me in a contempt for a failure to appear personally. I possess no knowledge in respect to any matter confided to you for investigation or in respect to the papers which you seek, which would be of any value to you if I were there.

I am, very respectfully,

WILLIAM ORTON.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman, New Orleans, Louisiana.

All the statements contained in those letters were and are true.

I have obtained and caused to be placed in the hands of the honorable the Speaker, on the 12th of January, the respective certificates of the three medical men named above, in order that there might be full opportunity to examine them and verify their contents previous to my arraignment, preferring that course to spreading upon the records of this House matters of this personal character. The said certificates are, of course, at the service of the House, to be treated as a part of my answer, if the House shall see fit.

After the writing of the letter above set forth to the Speaker of this House, I was served with another and different subpœna, as follows:

By authority of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America.

To John G. THOMPSON, Esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special messenger:

You are hereby commanded to summon William Orton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to be and appear before the select committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, to investigate the recent election in Louisiana; and said William Orton is hereby commanded to bring with him all telegrams in his possession, or under his control, received or sent by William E. Chandler, Zach. Chandler, J. Don Cameron, J. M. Edmunds, James Casey, William Pitt Kellogg, S. B. Packard, John F. Casey, J. R. G. Pitkin, Henry C. Dibbell, H. C. Warmoth, George W. Carter, and General Augur, from and at New Orleans, Louisiana, Washington City, District of Columbia, New York City, New York, since the 1st day of September last, and to produce the same to said committee, in their chamber, in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, forthwith, and then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee. Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 26th day of December, 1876.

[SEAL.] SAM. J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Attest:

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk."

Upon the service of that paper I addressed to the honorable the Speaker the following, which I have his permission to embody in this answer:

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, January 2, 1877.

SIR: In my sworn return to the paper served upon me December 19, 1876, purporting to require me to appear at New Orleans on the 26th of December, 1876, I stated as to certain telegraphic messages described there in that, if such messages ever existed, (of which I had no knowledge,) they had never been in my possession, and that I had no power to comply with any demand to produce them. At the same time, I communicated to Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON the personal reasons affecting my health, which rendered it impracticable for me to go to New Orleans at this time, and informing him of the official return made to you. Knowing that no person could suppose that I possessed knowledge upon any of the subjects confided to the committee, I assumed that my personal attendance without the papers in question was not wanted and would be excused, and so informed Mr. MORRISON.

On the 27th of December I was served with another paper requiring me to appear at New Orleans forthwith, bringing the papers before described. As to these papers, I repeat my former return, the facts concerning them having in no wise changed.

As to the required journey to New Orleans, I beg respectfully to state that I am not yet recovered from a painful illness and am still under surgical advice and treatment. I am, therefore, reluctantly compelled to choose between the consequences of traveling fifteen hundred miles at this inclement season, under the warning of my physician that I should incur great risk by so doing, and such other consequences as the justice and magnanimity of the House of Representatives may think suitable under the circumstances for an immaterial disobedience of its process involving a merely technical contempt, if any.

I anticipate a compulsory journey to Washington at the command of the House or of the Senate, (by whom I am summoned to be in Washington at the same time that your subpœna requires me to be in New Orleans, and to whose demand for messages I have made a similar answer.) If at that, or any time, I am called to answer any supposed contempt for this decision, I must, after pleading such matters of legal defense as I may be advised and showing the facts above stated, take all such consequences as the law inflicts.

Both official and personal respect to you seem to require me to notify you as soon as, after consultation with my physician, I had arrived at the determination expressed above. But this letter is not written with any view to publication, unless subsequent events should make it necessary.

I shall make oath to the statement herein to serve as my formal return to the paper served upon me.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM ORTON.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the 2d day of January, 1877, William Orton, to me personally known, who, being duly sworn, deposed that the annexed statement, addressed to Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker of the House of Representatives, is true, and that the same is made as and for his return to the certain paper purporting to be a subpœna referred to therein.

[SEAL.] WM. ARNOUX,
Notary Public City and County of New York.

Prior to the service of any subpœna upon me, I had, being then in Washington, addressed to Hon. J. PROCTOR KNOTT, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the following letter:

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1876.

SIR: On Saturday last the House of Representatives referred to the Judiciary Committee a communication from Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, New Orleans, chairman of the House committee for the investigation of the election and canvass in the State of Louisiana and elsewhere, to which was appended a communication which I had addressed to Mr. MORRISON, giving reasons why the Western Union Telegraph Company should not be required to furnish the messages of sundry persons named in subpœnas which had been served upon certain employés of the company.

I regret that the motive of my action in this matter has been misunderstood, and that an impression appears to prevail in some quarters that, for political reasons, I desire to delay and embarrass the investigation which the House has ordered.

I think it due to your committee, no less than to myself, to make to you the following statement:

While the canvass of the presidential vote was in progress in several of the States, Dr. Norvin Green, a vice-president of the company, and my chief assistant, had a consultation with me at my house, to which I had been confined several weeks by illness, at which it was decided that the political messages of both parties sent from and received at stations nearest the headquarters of the two national committees, to and from Washington, Columbia, (South Carolina,) Tallahassee, New Orleans, San Francisco, Portland and Salem, (Oregon,) and several other cities, including relay copies at repeating stations, should be removed from such offices and forwarded to places of greater security, and with a view to their destruction. Instructions were issued to have this plan promptly carried out, and before any of the subpœnas were issued much of the work had been accomplished. Dr. Green is a well-known citizen of Kentucky, who has held prominent positions in that State, and is esteemed wherever known for his high character. The fact that he is and has always been in politics a democrat should relieve him at least from the imputation that he is seeking to cover up the acts of his political opponents by thwarting an investigation carried on by his political friends. Dr. Green has had the whole charge of this business at all stations south of New York, while I have given the directions at the western cities and the Pacific coast.

To what extent it would be possible to produce the messages covered by the subpœnas heretofore issued, I am unable to say, but that the majority have been removed from the sending and receiving stations is undoubtedly true, and equally so that their production would be attended with serious difficulty.

The sole motive for taking the course above described was the protection of the affairs of our customers from public exposure. I distinctly disclaim, in my own behalf, as well as on behalf of my business associates, any desire or intention to thwart the work of the committee of the House or in any way to show disrespect for its authority. Nor am I disposed to raise the question that telegrams are, under existing laws, privileged communications, nor that the House has not the power to compel their production. But I submit that the senders of twenty-five millions of messages a year, representing as they do the capital, the enterprise, and the intelligence of the country in every department of human affairs, have peculiar claims upon Congress for protection from the seizure and search of their private communications, and especially from any use of them which would be liable to intensify political excitement.

It may not be out of place to say, in this connection, that no person of either political party has directly or indirectly advised or requested the withholding of messages in this case, and it follows necessarily that no "protection" has been offered or asked for so doing.

I am, with high regard, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM ORTON.

Hon. J. PROCTOR KNOTT,
Chairman Judiciary Committee House of Representatives.

I am the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, but as such I possess no powers except such as are conferred upon me by the by-laws of the company, a copy of which will be deposited with the Speaker, or from time to time by the board of directors or executive committee exercising their power ad interim. These powers have never included any charge, custody, possession, or knowledge of messages delivered to the company for transmission. The powers and duties of the president are, in his absence from the executive office in New York, devolved by the by-laws upon one of the vice-presidents of the company. The subpœna in this case was served upon me in Washington on the 19th of December.

I have made inquiry from Mr. Whitney, manager of the company's office in Washington, who informs me, and I believe the same to be true, that there were no messages of the description named in the subpœna in any Washington office at that date, and that in response to a similar subpœna he had some time before that date made oath to that effect.

I returned to New York on the 20th of December, and found, as stated to the Speaker in my letter of December 23, that the company had deprived me of any power which I might otherwise have possessed over any messages in the possession of the company. This was done by a resolution of the executive committee at its regular weekly meeting, passed during my absence and without knowledge or participation on my part, as follows:

"Resolved, That all messages, whether originals or copies, in the offices of this company are hereby declared to be in the exclusive custody and under the control of the executive committee, acting by resolution, and that no officer of the company shall have authority to take or remove them from the actual possession in which they at present are without the consent and direction of this committee or of the board of directors."

Subsequently the board of directors passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the Western Union Telegraph Company regards itself as the confidential agent of such of the people of the United States as may wish to employ its agencies for the transmission of communications by telegraph, and bound to resist by every lawful means all publications or examination of its records.

"Resolved, That, excepting such messages as may be directed by the sender to be preserved for a period not exceeding six months, the executive committee is hereby directed to provide in the future for such speedy destruction of all written messages as the necessary keeping of accounts between the respective offices of the company will allow.

"Resolved, That the board of directors hereby approve the action of the executive committee in removing all messages now on hand from the control or possession of any of its officers."

I was not present at and did not participate in these proceedings.

I do not know and have no reason to believe that any such messages as those described have ever been in possession of the Western Union Telegraph Company, except that I recognize among the names mentioned those of several persons of prominence who may fairly be presumed to have used the telegraph. I have never at any time since the removal of the messages from New Orleans (under the decision arrived at in October last, as stated in my letter to Mr. KNOTT) had, nor have I now, any possession, custody, or control of said messages or any of them.

I do not deny that in failing to appear to testify I have subjected myself to a charge of technical contempt. I distinctly disavow any such intention; and respectfully submit that the circumstances stated above ought to excuse me for not making a journey to New Orleans merely to inform the special committee, as I had already under oath informed this House through the Speaker, that I had no messages to produce.

Being informed that the House have in the case of Mr. Barnes passed upon various other matters of defense adversely to my views, I shall not detain the House by a repetition of them at this time, and now respectfully ask to be discharged from custody.

It is perhaps proper to add that I have never had any objection, except the long journey necessarily involved, to appear before the special committee to testify; and that I shall be ready and willing to appear before that committee on its return, or to appear now before any other committee for any examination which the House may think proper.

WILLIAM ORTON.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 15th day of January, A. D. 1877.
[SEAL.] HENRY R. ELLIOTT,
United States Commissioner for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair gathers from the reading of the answer of the witness that reference is made in it to a letter dated January, 1877, addressed to the Chair, and the writer states that a portion of that letter was not intended for publication. The Chair did not gather from the reading whether his reply was also embraced with that letter. The Chair will therefore ask permission to lay before the House the reply which he made by telegraph to Mr. Orton, in order that the record of the facts may be complete.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3, 1877.

WILLIAM ORTON, Esq.,
President Western Union Telegraph Company:

Yours of the 2d instant received. As I have before stated, I have no power to release you from your duty to appear in person at the time and place and before the committee, as directed by the subpœnas heretofore served upon you, nor have I authority to pass upon the validity of your excuse.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Mr. HUNTON. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and upon it I call for the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the committee of which WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, the answer just read to the House, and all other papers relating to a breach of the privileges of this House and contempt of its authority, alleged to have been committed by William Orton, now in custody and at the bar of the House, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report as early as practicable what action in their judgment should be taken by the House in relation thereto, and that the said William Orton be kept in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House until discharged by order of the House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," and the act amendatory thereof.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. STEVENSON.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to the late presidential election in the States of Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and to the casting of the electoral votes in the State of Oregon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President was communicated to the House by Mr. GRANT, his Private Secretary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCHRANE. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration and adoption at this time a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HENDEE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour commences at one o'clock, and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call, memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

COURTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4396) to re-organize the courts of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the reading of the bill in full.

The bill was read.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

Mr. HENDEE. I think this bill should go to the Committee for the District of Columbia, unless the gentleman who introduced it has a preference for the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee for the District of Columbia has now and has had this matter under consideration, and it seems to me that it ought not to be taken away from it.

Mr. FRYE. It is a matter in which I have no pride of opinion.

The motion of Mr. HENDEE was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS M. STRONG AND THOMAS ROSS.

Mr. HENDEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4397) for the relief of Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

FISHERIES.

Mr. HENDEE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, relative to fisheries in waters within the jurisdiction in part of different States and the British provinces; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF THE BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. HENDEE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, asking for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS COLLIER.

Mr. DENISON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4398) for the relief of Lewis Collier; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SIOUX, ARAPAHOE, AND CHEYENNE INDIANS.

Mr. SEELYE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4399) to ratify an agreement with certain bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians, and also with the Northern Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill be read in full.

The bill was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SOPHIA VINCENT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4400) granting arrears of pension to Sophia Vincent, widow of Martin Vincent, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry; which was read a first and second time, (the first reading being in full upon the call of Mr. KELLEY,) referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF WATCHMEN, ETC.

Mr. NORTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4401) allowing pay to certain watchmen and others therein named; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. WELSH.

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4402) for the relief of George W. Welsh, of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, (the first reading being in full on the call of Mr. KELLEY,) referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CASUALTIES IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. MAISH introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 183) to authorize and require the Public Printer to print and bind 5,000 copies of the surgical report of casualties in the United States Navy from 1860 to 1870; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. STENGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4403) granting a pension to Catharine Chamberlain, widow of David Chamberlain, late first sergeant Company D, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANN MARIA BISCOE.

Mr. HENKLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4404) granting a pension to Ann Maria Biscoe, widow of General George W. Biscoe, late major of the Nineteenth Regiment of Maryland Volunteers of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT COURT, EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. GOODE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4405) to amend section 571 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to confer circuit-court jurisdiction upon the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, (the first reading being in full on the call of Mr. HALE,) referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

J. HENRY POLLARD.

Mr. CABELL (for Mr. HUNTON) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4406) for the relief of J. Henry Pollard and wife; which was read a first and second time, (the first reading being in full on the call of Mr. HUBBELL,) referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF COOSA RIVER.

Mr. FELTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4407) to appropriate money for the improvement of the Coosa River from Rome, Georgia, to the crossing of the Rome and Selma Railroad bridge in Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAVANNAH HARBOR.

Mr. HARTRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4408) making an appropriation to continue the improvement of the harbor at Savannah, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BREAKWATER IN MOBILE HARBOR.

Mr. BRADFORD presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, asking for the passage of an act of Congress approving the act of the General Assembly of Alabama, authorizing the construction of a breakwater in the bay and harbor of Mobile; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF COOSA RIVER.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4409) authorizing an appropriation to remove obstructions in the Coosa River between Rome, Georgia, and the bridge of the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad across said river in Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4410) providing for the count of the electoral vote; which was read a first and second time, referred to the select committee on counting the electoral vote, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. SKILES.

Mr. LAWRENCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4411) for the relief of John W. Skiles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RAND GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. NEAL (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4412) to incorporate the Rand Gas-light Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

J. B. CORNELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. BANNING (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4413) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE TRAPNALL.

Mr. DURHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4414) for the relief of George Trapnall, of Harrodsburgh, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

ALDERSON T. KEAN.

Mr. DURHAM also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4415) for the benefit of Alderson T. Kean, late first lieutenant Company I, First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

B. F. RONEY.

JAMES H. COOK.

Mr. KIMBALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4428) granting a pension to James H. Cook; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT GREEN BAY.

Mr. KIMBALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4429) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Green Bay, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT AHNAPEE.

Mr. KIMBALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4430) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Ahnapee, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVERS.

Mr. KIMBALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4431) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the hour of two o'clock having arrived, the regular order is the reception of reports from the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent that the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia may be postponed until this day two weeks, with the same privileges as those to which it is entitled to-day.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia asks unanimous consent that the Committee for the District of Columbia, which, under the rules, is entitled to the floor to-day at two o'clock, be entitled, instead of reporting to-day, to the same privilege on this day two weeks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

USE OF THE ARMY IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 8th of December, 1876, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by this House:

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to this House copies of any and all orders or directions emanating from him or from either of the Executive Departments of the Government to any military commander or civil officer, with reference to the service of the Army, or any portion thereof, in the States of Virginia, South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida, since the 1st of August last, together with reports by telegraph or otherwise from either or any of said military commanders or civil officers;"

And whereas the President has omitted to comply with this request: Therefore, Resolved, That the attention of the President be respectfully called to the resolution referred to, and that he communicate the information asked for at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] allow me to make a single remark? I have no objection to the resolution. But I will state that I am aware of the fact that the preparation of this information is being sought from the different Departments, and that only a few days ago it had not all reached the President; but that there is the expectation of an answer to the resolution being sent in at the earliest day possible. If upon that statement the gentleman from New York——

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If the gentleman from Maine will give us his personal assurance that it is the intention of the President to reply to the resolution of the 8th of December within a few days, I will withdraw this resolution.

Mr. HALE. I give my personal assurance that it is my belief that an answer to the resolution will be sent within a week.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Upon that assurance, I withdraw the resolution.

THE LATE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas fears are entertained by a large number of American citizens lest there shall not be a peaceful settlement of the questions arising from the late election for President of the United States;

And whereas it pleased the founders of the Republic in ordaining and establishing the Constitution of the United States to make provision for the election of a President of the United States of America;

And whereas the Constitution provides for the counting of the electoral votes and the determining of who is elected President of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That any attempt, come from whatever source it may, to prejudice or excite the public mind in advance of the decision of the authority known to and provided for in the Constitution of the United States is unwise, unpatriotic, and full of danger to our free institutions; and that we deprecate all efforts to excite public passions as tending to increase the embarrassment and depression of the business interests of the country, and declare it to be the duty of all good citizens to peaceably and faithfully abide by the results reached in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. That we deem all such declarations as "Tilden or fight" to be only worthy of the fanatics, fools, and traitors who would rend the fair fabric of our National Government, spread ruin and destruction throughout the country, or plunge a great and prosperous people into civil war; and that whoever by wink or word lends his influence to arouse warlike passions, breed strife or stir up sedition by enkindling a vicious party feeling among the masses of our people, should be regarded as an incendiary freebooter and an enemy to the best interests of the whole country.

Mr. WHITE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which has been read, with the exception of the last part. I withdraw that portion of the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. Let the resolution be read as it will be when thus amended.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to know what portion of the resolution is withdrawn.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. As I understand, the gentleman from Kentucky modifies his own resolution. The House would like to know how it now stands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kentucky has a right to withdraw a portion of the resolution as originally read.

Mr. STEVENSON. We have no objection to that, but wish to know what part is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be now read as the gentleman from Kentucky desires it to be voted upon.

The resolution, as modified by the omission of the last clause beginning with the words "that we deem all such declarations," was read.

The question was taken upon Mr. WHITE'S motion to suspend the rules and adopt the preamble and resolution; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the preamble and resolution were adopted.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. COCHRANE. I move that the rules be suspended and the preamble and resolution I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted, and on which I call for the yeas and nays.

The Clerk read the preamble and resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Western Union Telegraph Company, through their officers who have been summoned before committees of this House to answer questions in respect to telegrams passing over their line, and to produce the same, have refused to produce them, and the said company have also failed to produce the same, and said officers are now in contempt of the authority of the House;

And whereas under acts of Congress the said company have had valuable privileges conferred upon them in connection with their corporate rights: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any and what concessions and privileges heretofore granted by Congress and now enjoyed by the Western Union Telegraph Company are revocable by Congress; and, if said committee shall determine that said concessions and privileges are revocable, then to further inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill revoking the same, and repealing the acts of Congress under which they were conferred, leave being hereby granted to said committee to report at any time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 85, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the preamble and resolution were not adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. LEAVENWORTH. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. HATHORN, is detained at his house by sickness.

Mr. STRAIT. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. DUNNELL, is sick at his room.

TAX ON TOBACCO.

Mr. HATCHER. I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk be passed.

The Clerk read the bill. It provides that the growers or producers of tobacco, from and after the passage of this act, shall have the right to sell the same in leaf to any person and any person shall have the right to purchase the same free from any tax, fine, or other restriction whatever.

Mr. GARFIELD. That bill ought to go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. KASSON. It should certainly be referred to that committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. It certainly ought to go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCHER] that this question is now before the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I merely suggest to the gentleman the reference of his bill to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill as it stands.

The question was taken on Mr. HATCHER's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 73, noes 72.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 100, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Carr, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Walker, Walling, Ward, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wigginton, Willard, Charles G. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Benjamin Wilson—87.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the call of the roll, the following announcement was made:

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WIGGINTON is detained at home on account of illness; if present, he would vote "ay." I would further state that Mr. LANE, of Oregon, is detained from the House by sickness, and if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, as the bill is not now before the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum, for the use of the District; and

An act (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," and the act amendatory thereof.

TROOPS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I move that the rules be suspended so that the House shall pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas serious apprehension exists in the minds of the people that the deliberations of their representatives in Congress may be controlled or in some way interfered with by the presence of any considerable portion of the Army of the United States in Washington during the sessions of Congress;

And whereas it is of the highest importance that all the deliberations of Congress shall not only be free from extraneous influences, but that no reasonable ground of fear or suspicion should exist in the popular mind that any act has been the product or result of any other cause than the unbiased sense of the Representative's duty to his constituents: Therefore

Be it enacted, &c, That it shall be unlawful for more than one regiment or battalion of infantry of not more than five hundred men, one company of infantry and one battery of artillery not exceeding six guns, to be stationed or kept for any purpose whatsoever during the session of Congress within the limits of the District of Columbia; and the troops so stationed in said District shall be so disposed as only to guard and protect the public property. That no more than one company shall be stationed at any one point, nor shall they be drilled or reviewed in greater number than one company at a time; and no part thereof shall be brought for any purpose within a half mile of the Capitol during said session without request of Congress: Provided, however, That, in time of war or invasion during said session of Congress, Congress shall have power to call on the President for such increase of troops in said District as to it shall seem necessary. Any officer of the United States, in the civil or military service, who brings together, or issues any order for bringing together, a larger body of troops than is above provided, or for keeping or maintaining them except as provided in this act, shall be guilty of high misdemeanor, and shall be subject to all the penalties by which such misdemeanors on the part of such officers are now punished.

Mr. KASSON. That is a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. PLAISTED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. KASSON. My point of order is that the Constitution of the United States is a rule of this House which cannot be suspended; that the Constitution says that the President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and this bill proposes to take away that power from him and to transfer it to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that that is not a point of order. The long service of the gentleman from Iowa certainly should prompt him not to ask the Chair to sustain such a point of order. The Chair desires further to say that he cannot but condemn the frequent efforts on the part of members, by rising to points of order, to subsequently inject arguments out of order into the proceedings of this House.

Mr. KASSON. The Chair will allow me to say in reply that I make this point of order in the interest of the House and in good faith, believing that this bill proposes to overrule a provision of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. Would it be in order to move to refer this bill to the editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 97, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cook, Cowan, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Ellis, Felton, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Vance, Wait, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walsh, Warner, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Andrew Williams Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Ashe, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bliss, Samuel D. Burchard, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Caswell, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Darrall, Dunnell, Durand, Eden, Egbert, Faulkner, Freeman, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Harrison, Hathorn, Hays, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Holman, Hooker, Hunton, Hurlbut, Jenks, Thomas L. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wigginton, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, and Jeremiah N. Williams—94

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution (in which the concurrence of the House was requested) extending the time for the reporting of the commission appointed to inquire into the change which has taken place in the relative value of gold and silver.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask leave to offer a resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on the motion to adjourn?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield that the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] may be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot yield conditionally, because the regular order is demanded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I yield unconditionally.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn being withdrawn, the resolution may be read.

Mr. HUBBELL. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at half past three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CANDLER: The petition of citizens of Perry County, Georgia, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DENISON: The petition of Andrew Burgess, William Roundtree, and John Y. Hall, of Washington, District of Columbia, for compensation for services rendered as firemen in the new United States jail in the District of Columbia during the months of December, 1875, and January, 1876, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of citizens of Kentucky, for a post-route from Monticello to Mount Pisgah, Kentucky, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GAUSE: The petition of citizens of Springfield, Arkansas, for cheap telegraphy, to the same committee.

By Mr. KIDDER: The petition of Alexander Griggs and 99 others, to build a bridge on the military road in Grand Forks County, Dakota Territory, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: The petition of D. Whitmore, Owen Elleman, and 44 other citizens of Ohio, for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, and purchase the telegraph lines of the United States and put them under the control of the Post-Office Department, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of William Scott and 100 business men of Piqua, Ohio, for the repeal of all war taxes on banks, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of John W. Skiles, for re-imbursement of $1,938.38, paid clerks at Tod Barracks, Columbus, Ohio, while he was acting as city provost-marshal and commandant of the draft rendezvous for the State of Ohio, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of J. B. Alvord and others, of California, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAISH: The petition of Joseph Beale, jr., late a cadet midshipman at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, to be restored to his former position, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McDILL: The petition of Horace Everett and 13 other citizens of Council Bluffs, Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill known as the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad prorate bill, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MUTCHLER: The petition of citizens of Allentown, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the tax upon the capital, deposits, and circulation of banks, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. NORTON: The petition of 45 citizens of Chautauqua County, New York, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas: The petition of citizens of Kansas, for a post-route from Smith Center, Kansas, to Riverton, Nebraska, to the same committee.

By Mr. PIPER: The petition of C. E. Pickett, of California, upon the subject of a competing transcontinental railway, protesting against the formation by legislation of a triumvirate to control transportation across the continent, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. PLAISTED: The petition of Zenas Herrick, a soldier of the war of 1812, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. JOHN REILLY: The petition of citizens of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SEELYE: The petition of citizens of Clinton, Massachusetts, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Southbridge, Massachusetts, for a national commission of inquiry into the results of the traffic in alcoholic liquors, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. STENGER: The petition of citizens of Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, asking Congress to enforce the provisions of the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, with reference to the purchase of the telegraph lines in the United States by the General Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WARNER: The petition of Harriet E. Edwards, widow of David S. Edwards, late surgeon United States Navy, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route between Jonesville and Beloit, Wisconsin, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia: The petition of Charles H. Day, late a private in the Second Virginia Regiment, United States Army, and colonel of the Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Infantry, for an increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 16, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to invest in the bonds of the United States the unexpended balance of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Lake Superior was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of House Executive Document No. 126, Forty-third Congress, first session, which contains all the information in the possession of the Department, called for by the resolution of the Senate of January 12, touching the use by the Government of a patented machine or machines of W. H. Ward for making bullets or molding shells; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask for an order in reference to the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, an amendment of said first-named act, which was made the special order for to-day. We have received a telegram from the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] whose constituents are very much interested in the bill, asking that it may be laid over for a week in order that he may be present; and the Judiciary Committee, by whom the bill was reported, think, for the reasons stated by him, that his request is reasonable. I ask, therefore, that it may be postponed to this day a week, and made the special order for that day at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this bill, the special order for to-day, being postponed for one week at the same hour of one o'clock? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ELECTION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PATTERSON. I present the memorial of D. H. Chamberlain and R. H. Gleaves, and other officers of the State government of South Carolina, addressed to the Congress of the United States. This document is very long. I would ask to have it read, but if there be no objection I desire to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to hear the nature of the memorial stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina will state the nature of the memorial.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is a memorial of Governor Chamberlain and other State officers, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives. If the Senator from West Virginia desires to hear it read I will have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the memorial being printed in the RECORD without being read?

Mr. ALCORN. I wish to say that I think it is not proper to print matter in the RECORD unless we know what it is. Anything that goes in the RECORD should be read, I think, to the Senate, and I insist upon that being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi objects.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I ask to have it read.

Mr. ALCORN. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading? The Chair hears none, and the memorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the memorial and was interrupted by——

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that it is not important to have the document read. I think it had better be printed at once. We cannot hear it very well. It is a reply to a document read here the other day, I understand.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; it is a reply to the memorial presented by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest, therefore, that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. ALCORN. I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I asked to have the memorial printed in the RECORD without being read at the desk.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; let it be printed in the RECORD, as the other paper was.

Mr. ALCORN. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi objects and the reading will proceed.

Mr. ALCORN. I make the point that the Senate should not permit anything to go into the RECORD that has not been reviewed by the Senate, read in its presence. I have no idea that there is anything improper in this memorial, for I do not know what it is. When I objected I did not know to what subject it pertained; but I do insist that the Senate, being responsible for whatever goes into the RECORD as part of its proceedings, should know at least the contents of any document ordered to be printed there. Something might be in the memorial disrespectful to the Senate; there might be something there disrespectful to the Government. A man could introduce here a biography, if you please, a work upon medicine, or law, or anything else, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I insist on knowing what goes into the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there cannot be any doubt on that subject, for when a Senator produces a document and asks to have it printed he probably has read it himself and he is a guarantor that there is nothing disrespectful in the paper. However, it is the right of any Senator to have it read, and I have nothing further to say.

Mr. ALCORN. If the document should be referred to a committee of the Senate who would examine it and say that there was nothing improper in it, I would be willing for that to be done; but I insist on its being read under present circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi withdraw his objection?

Mr. ALCORN. No, sir, I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the memorial and (at twelve o'clock and forty-five minutes) was interrupted by—

Mr. SHERMAN. It is manifest that this is a mere statement about the election in the State of South Carolina, of which we have heard a good deal more from other sources. The Senator from Mississippi must be satisfied now that there is nothing disrespectful to the Senate in the document.

Mr. ALCORN. Having made my point, now I am entirely willing, if it is the sense of the Senate, to withdraw any opposition to the memorial going into the RECORD without further reading. I think it is not proper that a document should go into the RECORD without being read. I think it is a rule that should be adhered to that nothing should be put into the RECORD that is not read, or at least well vouched for.

Mr. DAVIS. I listened to the Senator from South Carolina who presented the memorial, and if I had heard him say that he had read it and that there was nothing disrespectful in it, I should have joined with other Senators in saying that it was hardly worth while to read it; but unless that Senator thinks it is a proper document and says there is nothing disrespectful in it and knows that fact, I shall insist upon its being read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to be frank with the Senator. I will tell the Senator very frankly that I have not read the paper. I only received it this morning and did not have time to read it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It merely relates to the election in South Carolina.

Mr. PATTERSON. It relates to the election there and the transactions connected with it. I did not read it; I had not time to read it. It was sent to me by Governor Chamberlain, and I took it for granted that there was nothing that a Senator could object to in it, for I know he would not put in anything but what was true; but I did not read it.

Mr. DAVIS. As to the printing, of course no Senator will object to that as all the memorials and evidence that have come from the three disputed States have been printed, I believe, without objection. This is different, as I understand it; it is desired to have it printed in the RECORD as well as printed otherwise.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that the reason I did not object, for otherwise I would have objected to the reading of it, was that the other paper to which this is a reply was printed in the RECORD. It was read in full, and it was printed in the RECORD on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator if that was not a very short paper?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was about two columns, according to my recollection of it. It was a shorter document than this.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator from West Virginia will allow me, I will state that the Senator from Georgia presented a paper from Wade Hampton, claiming to be governor of South Carolina, which was printed in the RECORD. This paper is an answer to that; and I therefore asked that it be printed in the RECORD also.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will state that he believes that there is nothing improper or disrespectful in the paper, I will not ask that it be read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will state that I have no doubt about that. I have full confidence in Governor Chamberlain that he would not present anything here that is not true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless some Senator insists on the further reading, it will be dispensed with, and the memorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

The memorial of Daniel H. Chamberlain, governor; of Richard H. Gleaves, lieutenant-governor; Francis L. Cardozo, State treasurer; Thomas C. Dunn, comptroller-general; Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state; Robert B. Elliott, attorney-general; John R. Tolbert, superintendent of education; James Kennedy, adjutant and inspector general of the State of South Carolina; of the house of representatives and of the senate, composing the General Assembly of said State, respectfully showeth to your honorable bodies:

That they have seen and read a certain document entitled "the memorial of Wade Hampton," &c., and addressed and heretofore presented to your honorable bodies;

That in said memorial are set forth various matters and things affecting the undersigned as public officers and the government and other public interests of said State;

That many of the statements contained in said memorial are untrue in fact, that many others are so presented as to mislead your honorable bodies unless otherwise informed, and many other statements requisite to a correct knowledge of the affairs in question are omitted and suppressed.

Your memorialists, therefore, pray your honorable bodies to accept from the undersigned a full and correct statement of said affairs, all of which the undersigned stand ready to make good by proper proof whenever required.

I.

General character of the recent election.

A general election for State and county officers, for members of the house of representatives, and for a part of the senators of this State was held on the 7th day of November, 1876.

During the canvass which preceded the said election, the republican voters in many counties of the State were subjected to such illegal constraint and fear as to render the duty of voting dangerous to their lives. Violence, taking the form of murder, whipping, shooting, and maiming; threats of violence, consisting of public and private declarations of the intention of the persons uttering said threats to do violence to the persons of republican voters; constraint and fear, arising from the denial of employment and homes, as well as the ordinary social rights of citizens, overspread the State. The domestic violence caused by this effort to abridge and deny the right of suffrage in this State became so great and wide-spread as to require the governor of the State to apply to the President of the United States for protection against the same pending the said election. Although this protection was granted so far as practicable by the President of the United States, it was wholly impossible to so guard the voters from the violence and its effects already referred to as to insure to all the people of the State the right of suffrage guaranteed to them by the Constitution and laws of the country.

II.

The canvass and result of the election.

Under the general circumstances now stated the said election was held, and, in accordance with the laws of the State, the returns thereof were forwarded to the several officers of the State authorized by law to receive the same.

The duty of canvassing all returns of election for county and State officers, except the governor and lieutenant-governor, as well as members of each branch of the General Assembly, is by the laws of the State imposed upon the board of State canvassers, consisting of certain executive officers of the State. Obedient to the laws of the State, the board of State canvassers met on the 10th day of November, 1876, and entered upon the work of canvassing the returns of said election, as to all officers voted for at the said election, except the governor and lieutenant-governor, and continued in session from day to day until the 22d day of November, 1876, on which day by the terms of the laws creating said board the time allowed for the canvass of the election expired. In conducting said canvass the said board, under the power conferred on them by the laws, were called upon to decide many cases of contested elections, and particularly to decide upon protests against the validity of the entire election in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens.

III.

The rejection of the returns of Edgefield and Laurens Counties.

Upon abundant proof submitted to said board and in accordance with the laws of the State, the board of State canvassers declared your memorialists, Francis L. Cardozo, Thomas C. Dunn, Henry E. Hayne, Robert B. Elliott, John R. Tolbert, and

James Kennedy duly elected respectively to the several offices hereinbefore named, and further declared that, upon the evidence presented to them, the said board was unable to declare any persons elected in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, owing to the violence and frauds which attended the election in said counties.

The result of the canvass of the election for members of the house of representatives showed the due election of one hundred and sixteen members only, and in accordance with the laws the board of State canvassers so declared and the secretary of state so certified to each of the persons declared elected by the said board.

IV.

Proceedings in the supreme court.

Your memorialists further show that while the board of State canvassers were in the discharge of the aforesaid duties imposed upon them by law, on the 14th of November, 1876, proceedings were instituted in the supreme court of the State with the view to limit and control their action.

These proceedings were of a dual character, and were instituted by R. M. Sims, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Connor, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise, as citizens of the State, and as candidates for the offices of secretary of state, comptroller-general, state treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector general. Two petitions were filed by them; one praying for a writ of mandamus against the board, and the other praying for a writ of prohibition.

The two petitions were substantially the same, except in the character of the relief prayed.

They stated in substance:

1. That a general election was held in the State on the 7th of November, 1876, for the following offices: Electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, members of the Congress of the United States, governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, comptroller-general, treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector general, members of the General Assembly of the State, sheriffs, clerks of court, judges of probate, school commissioners, county commissioners, and coroners in the several counties, and solicitors in the several circuits of the State.

2. That the boards of managers of said election had duly counted the votes cast, and made return thereof to their county boards of canvassers, and the said county boards having made their statements of the votes cast as required by law, made return thereof, with all protests and papers appertaining to said election, to the board of State canvassers.

3. That the statements transmitted by the boards of county canvassers to the board of State canvassers were in a large number of instances accompanied by protests and contests of said election, upon the part of certain candidates for office, and that the relators [petitioners] on the 11th day of November, 1876, appeared before the said board of State canvassers and insisted that so far as pertained to the election of ——, members of the General Assembly, said board should do no more than to state the votes of the counties as certified to it by the boards of county canvassers, and thereupon declare what persons had received the highest number of votes for the senate and house of representatives and declare the election accordingly. That said board of State canvassers refused the demand of the relators, and resolved to consider and determine matters of contest and protest in such cases, and said board is now proceeding to hear and determine all cases of protest or contest accordingly.

4. That so far as pertains to the election of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States and members of Congress of the United States, the relators demanded that the board of State canvassers should limit itself to aggregating the managers' returns from the several counties as certified to said board by the county canvassers of the several counties, and so declare who had received the highest number of votes cast, and declare their election accordingly, and should not hear or decide any question of protest or contest. That the said board of State canvassers refused the said demand and resolved to hear protests and contests and are now proceeding to do so.

5. That the relators further say that for the offices of treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector general contests or protests have been made before the board of State canvassers; and that said board as organized consists, among others, of Hon. F. L. Cardozo, as treasurer, who is a candidate for re-election; of Hon. T. C. Dunn, as comptroller-general, who is a candidate for re-election; and of Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, who is a candidate for re-election, and that at said general election the said members of the board of State canvassers, together with all the candidates for the several offices, on one side, were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the relators with all candidates for the said offices on the other side were voted for on one same opposition ticket; and the offices of each and every one of them depend on one and the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, and the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest or protest in regard to any of said offices, is for them to make themselves judges in their own cases and enable them to declare the election in their own favor; that the board of State canvassers have resolved that said treasurer, comptroller-general, and secretary of state shall sit as members of said board to hear and determine all questions that shall come before them, except only that the said officers shall not vote upon their own election, and that said board is so proceeding.

6. That the board of State canvassers have assumed to exercise and discharge duties and functions which are clearly judicial. That said board consists of the State treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, and the adjutant and inspector general of the State, and all belong to the executive department of the State.

That said executive officers have no power to exercise judicial functions, as article 1, section 26 of the constitution of the State provides that "in the government of this Commonwealth the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other."

7. That the only power or duty of the board of State canvassers is to certify to the secretary of state the persons who have received the highest number of votes as appears by the managers' returns and the statements of the board of canvassers of the respective counties, without regard to, or consideration of, any protest or contest.

Prayer.

Wherefore your relators pray that a writ of prohibition may issue from this honorable court to the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, as chairman; F. L. Cardozo, as State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, members of the said board of State canvassers, prohibiting and forbidding them, the said board of State canvassers, from exercising any judicial functions or duties whatever in regard to any protests or contests which have been, or may be, submitted to them touching the said election held on the 7th day of November instant, and from hearing or determining any such contests or protests, and from doing anything other or further than the ministerial acts of ascertaining from the managers' returns and statements forwarded by the boards of county canvassers for the respective counties, the persons who have received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they are candidates, and declaring the same and certifying such statements to the secretary of state.

Prayer to petition for mandamus.

The petition for mandamus prayed that a writ of mandamus may issue from this honorable court to the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, as chairman, and the said F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer, T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general, William Stone, attorney-general, H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, members of the said board of State canvassers, commanding and compelling them to ascertain from the managers' returns and statements forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers the persons who, at the general election on the 7th day of November, instant, received the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates respectively, and to declare the same, and certify such declaration, and none other, to the secretary of state, and commanding and compelling them to perform all ministerial acts devolved upon them by the acts of the General Assembly; and commanding and compelling them to revoke and annul all illegal and unauthorized acts by them committed, and to revoke and annul any determination or decision which they have made in any case of contest or protest, if any such there be.

Order of court.

Upon the filing of the two petitions the court made the following order in each case, varying only in the word "mandamus" or "prohibition," as the case might be.

Ordered, That a rule do issue requiring the said chairman and members of the board of State canvassers and the said secretary of state to show cause on Thursday next, November 16, 1876, at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., why a writ of prohibition should not issue in accordance with the prayer of the suggestion.

To each of these petitions and rules the board of State canvassers, on November 16, 1876, made the same return, as follows:

That their duties and powers as a board of State canvassers are defined in chapter 8, title 2 of the general statutes of the State of South Carolina, as follows:

"SEC. 21. The secretary of state shall appoint a meeting of State canvassers, to be held at his office or some convenient place, on or before the 10th day of November next, after such general election, for the purpose of canvassing the votes of all officers voted for at such election.

"SEC. 22. The secretary of state, comptroller-general, attorney-general, State auditor, State treasurer, adjutant and inspector general, and the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections of the house of representatives, shall constitute the State canvassers, four of whom shall be a sufficient number to form a board.

"SEC. 23. If a majority of these officers shall be unable or shall fail to attend, the president of the senate, being notified by the secretary of state, shall attend without delay, and with the officers attending shall form a board.

"SEC. 24. The board when thus formed shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe on the proper statement a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state.

"SEC. 26. Upon such statements they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been by the greatest number of votes duly elected to such offices or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise, when the power to do so does not by the constitution reside in some other body.

"SEC. 27. The board shall have power to adjourn from day to day for a term not exceeding ten days.

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 29. The secretary of state shall record in his office, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, each certified statement and determination which shall be delivered to him by the board of State canvassers, and every dissent or protest that shall have been delivered to him by a canvasser.

"SEC. 30. He shall, without delay, transmit a copy, under the seal of his office, of such certified determination to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor.

"SEC. 31. He shall cause a copy of such certified statements and determinations to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State.

"SEC. 32. He shall prepare a general certificate, under the seal of the State and attested by him as secretary thereof, addressed to the House of Representatives of the United States, in that Congress for which any person shall have been chosen, of the due election of the person so chosen at such election as Representative of this State in Congress, and shall transmit the same to said House of Representatives at their first meeting."

That, as to the duty of the board of State canvassers in relation to the election of electors of President and Vice-President, section 7, chapter 9, general statutes, page 35, provides as follows:

"The board of State canvassers shall proceed in making a statement of all the votes, and in determining and certifying the person elected, in the manner prescribed by law in relation to the election of other officers."

The duty of the secretary of state in connection with this election is defined as follows by section 8, chapter 9, general statutes:

"The secretary of state shall, without delay, cause a copy, under the seal of his office, of the certified determination of the board of State canvassers, to be delivered to each of the persons therein declared to be elected, and for that purpose he may employ such and so many messengers as he shall deem necessary."

And these respondents further say, as to the matters of fact set out and alleged in the suggestion of the relators, that they admit the same to be true, except as follows:

That as to whether the several boards of managers of said election have duly counted the votes cast of said election and have duly returned the same in their respective counties to the board of canvassers of said counties respectively, and whether the board of county canvassers have made their statements of the votes cast in the manner required by law, and the same, together with all the protests and papers appertaining to said election, have been forwarded by said boards of county canvassers, or are in course of transmission, these respondents are not informed, and as yet have not sufficient information to found a belief relating thereto. They admit that a portion of the returns of the managers of election and of the board of county canvassers have been received, but as yet they have not proceeded to examine and certify the same. That the returns of the managers of election and the board of county canvassers for several counties in the State have not as yet been received by these respondents, and no opportunity, therefore, as yet has been had to pass upon the same as required by law.

As to the suggestion on the part of the relators, that, as Hon. F. L. Cardozo, treasurer; Hon. T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general, and Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, members of the State board of canvassers, are candidates for re-election, and were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the relators, with all candidates for said offices on the other side, were voted for on one and the same opposing ticket, and the offices of each and every one of them depended upon the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, and the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest or protest in regard to any one of said offices is for them to make themselves judges in their own cases, these repondents say they deny the same, and say that when the said board passes upon the election or right of any one of these persons to the office for which he was a candidate and for which he was voted at the election, that person must and will retire from the board for the time being and until the other members of the board shall determine whether he or his opponent is entitled to a certificate of election.

This mode of procedure does not in any proper sense make any member of the board a judge in his own case, but expressly excludes him from such position.

These respondents say, as to the matters of law set out in the suggestion of the relators, the same are erroneous and contravene the statute law of the State hereinbefore recited and the practice of the board of State canvassers of the State.

These respondents say that they are ready and willing, as soon as the returns of the managers of election and the returns of the board of county canvassers, and all papers connected therewith, of the election held on the 7th of November instant are received, to proceed and discharge their whole duty according to the constitution and laws of the State, keeping strictly within the same; and this they are, under heavy penalty, bound to do.

The issues between the relators and the board of State canvassers being thus made up, on the 16th day of November, A. D. 1876, the board of State canvassers came into court and prayed the advice of the court as to whether it was intended by said court by the rules to show cause on the suggestions for writ of mandamus and prohibition, made on the 14th day of November, 1876, to restrain said board from proceeding to exercise the functions imposed upon said board by law; and said board, by their attorneys, submitted an order, if so intended, to permit said board to proceed to perform the merely ministerial duties imposed by law, to wit, to aggregate the returns of the boards of county canvassers and ascertain the number of votes apparently cast for the several persons voted for as candidates for office in said election; but that as to the exercise of any judicial functions, hearing protests and contests, said board should be enjoined and restrained until the court should pass upon and determine their right to do so. This prayer by the board, and order suggested, were refused of the court.

The cases made by the relators and the board of State canvassers in the petitions and returns were then fully argued by counsel.

On the 17th day of November, 1876, the court, not yet having made any decision in the cause, made the following order:

The State of South Carolina, in the supreme court.

THE STATE EX REL. R. M. SIMS ET AL. }
vs. } Mandamus.
H. E. HAYNE ET AL., STATE CANVASSERS. }

It is ordered, in the above-entitled cause, that the board of State canvassers, consisting of H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, as chairman; and F. L. Cardozo, treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general, and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, do forthwith proceed to aggregate the statements forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, and ascertain the persons who have received the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates respectively at the general election held in the State on the 7th instant, and certify their action in the premises under this order to the court. This order to apply to all officers voted for at said general election, except the office of governor and lieutenant-governor, which are not in question by the pleadings.

F. J. MOSES.

COLUMBIA, November 17, 1876.

I dissent from so much of this order as requires that the board of State canvassers certify their action in the premises to this court.

J. J. WRIGHT,
A. J., South Carolina.

The board of State canvassers objected to this order, and, even after it had been granted, moved by their counsel to have the same set aside as improvidently granted, as the same was contrary to law and practice in mandamus, which writ could only be used to compel the board to go forward and make a decision, and not to compel a particular decision, and further, that the writ could not be used to bring before the court the decision of the State canvassers for the purpose of review.

These objections were overruled by the court, and Justice Willard, speaking from the bench, said that "he only justified the order on the ground that the suggestion in mandamus might be treated as an informal application for a writ of certiorari." He said further, that "the court only desired from the board such information as any clerk could give with the election returns before him."

The board of State canvassers thereupon, on the 21st of November, 1876, certified to the court as follows: "The board of State canvassers, respondents herein, hereby certify that it appears by the statements of the several boards of county canvassers laid before the board, that the following-named persons have received the number of votes set opposite their respective names for the several offices designated, namely:

The board further certifies that: "This statement is made to the court in obedience to its order of November 17, 1876, but it is respectfully submitted that under the present proceedings in this court this board is not by law compelled to report any of its actions to the court."

* * * * * *

"This board further shows to this court that allegations and evidence of fraud have been filed with this board as to the election held in Edgefield County by many of the managers of election in said county; that similar allegations have been made and filed as to one or more precincts in Barnwell County; that the statements of the commissioners of election for Laurens County laid before this board are signed by two commissioners only, one of whom signed, as he certifies, under protest. Said commissioner has also filed an affidavit that the reason he signed said statements was because he was in fear of bodily injury if he refused to do so; that various protests and notices of contest have been filed from many other counties of the State, alleging irregularities on the part of the election officers, illegal voting, &c.

"That in view of the said allegations, protests, and notices of contests, none of which has been heard or passed upon by this board because of the pendency of these proceedings, this board cannot in their opinion properly ascertain and certify who have actually received the greater number of legal votes in said counties for the several officers voted for, unless they have the opportunity of investigating these allegations and hearing evidence upon these protests."

NOTE.—All persons voted for, and the votes received by each at said election for any office, except those voted for for the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor, are set out in said report, but as no question was made except as to the election in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens the vote is omitted.

This certified statement having been made to the court on November 21, 1876, the next morning, November 22, 1876, the said court made the following order in the cause, to wit:

"It is ordered, That a writ of peremptory mandamus do issue, directed to the chairman and members of the board of State canvassers and the secretary of state, commanding the said board forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senators and members of the house of representatives the persons who by said certificate of the said board to this court have received the greatest number of votes therefor, and to forthwith deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state; and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State."

In accordance with this order a peremptory writ of mandamus was on the same day issued, and late on the evening of that day, to wit, between ten and eleven o'clock p. m., and the next morning at 9.30 o'clock, served upon the individual members of the board. No member of the said board was in the court-room at the time the foregoing order was made or knew anything of it, directly or indirectly, until after the board had adjourned, as hereinafter stated. That before said writ was issued and served on the board of State canvassers said board had sat out the ten days allowed by law, excluding two Sundays, (having met on the 16th day of November and sat till November 22, 1876,) canvassed the election returns, declared the election, and adjourned sine die. As to the election of senators and representatives in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens the board declined to declare any persons elected, and for the reasons stated in their report to the court of November 21, 1876, viz, "on account of the allegations and evidences of fraud filed with the board." Attention is called here in passing to the facts that the supreme court did not, although the cases of mandamus and prohibition were argued before it on November 16, make any decision in either of said causes upon any question involved till November 22, the last day of the legal existence of the board, and the same was not then brought to the knowledge of the board or any of its members till after, by law, the board must and did determine and declare the election and had adjourned sine die.

Attention is further called to the fact that the board did not certify to the court who had "actually received the greater number of legal votes" in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, but expressly declined to do so, on account of the "evidences of fraud filed with them."

And attention is further called to the fact that the supreme court, instead of directing the board of State canvassers to proceed and determine and declare the election, as it might have done, if the board neglected or refused to make a decision, drew from them not their determination of the vote, but a mere statement of what the face of the returns showed it to be, and then, without asking them what the evidence of fraud relative thereto showed, ordered them to declare the election according to the statement certified and in a particular manner, viz: that those having the apparent majority should be declared elected.

And attention is further called to the fact that the court without warrant of law usurped the functions of the board and undertook in effect to determine and declare the election. That in doing this the court violated every principle of law and practice in the use of the writ of mandamus in the case made before it. That in drawing to itself the record, or a portion of it, of the board of State canvassers, and then reviewing and passing judgment on the same, the court did precisely what it solemnly decided it could not do in the case of Ex parte Carson, 5 S. C. Reports, (new series,) 117.

Attention is further called to the fact that the board of State canvassers applied to the court November 16, 1876, to know if it was intended by the proceedings to restrain the board from exercising any of its functions, and the court expressly declined to make any order restraining the action of the board.

Finally, attention is called to the fact that, right or wrong, the board of State canvassers had for itself determined that no certificates of election could be given to any persons claiming to be elected in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and had adjourned sine die and was functus officio when a decision of the supreme court directing it to do differently was made and brought to its attention. That no law existed by which the board could reconvene and perform any function.

Proceedings for contempt.

The relators came into court on November 24, 1876, and informed the court in substance that the board of State canvassers, on November 22, 1876, "refused to certify as elected the persons who, in Edgefield and Laurens Counties, had received the greatest number of votes for members of the General Assembly, as appears by the certified report of the said board submitted to this court, as required to do by the order (heretofore recited) of the court of November 22, 1876; and that the said board adjourned sine die between twelve and one o'clock p. m. of November 22, 1876."

The court thereupon made the following order against each member of the late board of State canvassers:

Rule to show cause.

"It is ordered, That the respondent (naming him) show cause before this court at four o'clock p. m. this day why he should not be attached for contempt of this court, as shown by the record of the proceedings of the board of State canvassers, taken on the 22d day of November, 1876, after the judgment of this court had been filed, and by his failure to obey the mandate of this court.

"F. J. MOSES.

"NOVEMBER 24, 1876."

This order was served on the several members of the late board of State canvassers between one and half past one o'clock p. m.; and that day at four o'clock p. m. they came into court and asked further time to answer; and for that purpose filed the following affidavit, namely:

STATE EX REL. R. M. SIMS ET AL. }
vs. }
H. E. HAYNE ET AL. }

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Richland County:

Personally appeared Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state; Thomas C. Dunn, comptroller-general; F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, late adjutant and inspector general, who, on oath, says, each for himself, as follows: That he, H. E. Hayne, was served at 1.30 o'clock p. m.; he, Thomas C. Dunn, was served at 1.30 o'clock p. m.; he, F. L. Cardozo, was served at one o'clock p. m.; he, William Stone, was served at 1.15 o'clock p. m.; and he, H. W. Purvis, was served at 1.15 o'clock p. m. with a certified copy of a rule to show cause before this court at four o'clock p. m. of this day (November 24, 1876) why he and they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying the mandate of this court in this case.

That these deponents have received no copy of any suggestions upon which said rule was issued, and are not informed with particularity as to what they are required to make answer to; that one mandate was served upon them as a board, which they conceive they have obeyed, and do not know in what way they have violated it or can be charged with having violated it; that the leading counsel for the deponents, D. T. Corbin, esq., has also been served with a rule to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt of court; which rule is also made returnable at four o'clock p. m. this day; that in the interval of only three hours allowed them by the court these deponents have had no sufficient opportunity to consult with counsel as to what sort of a return they should make to said rule; that these deponents, and each for them, have endeavored to follow out the provisions of the statute regulating them in the discharge of their duties, and they respectfully submit that a reasonable time ought to be permitted to them in which to make their defense; and they believe that if time is allowed them they can fully and satisfactorily answer the said rule.

To obtain such necessary time, and not for the purpose of delay, this affidavit is made.

H. E. HAYNE, Secretary of State.
WILLIAM STONE, Attorney-General.
F. L. CARDOZO, Treasurer South Carolina.
THOMAS C. DUNN, Comptroller-General.
H. W. PURVIS.

Sworn to before me the 24th day of November, 1876.

HENRY B. JOHNSON,
Notary Public, South Carolina.

Upon the reading of this affidavit the court refused to grant further time to answer, and at once proceeded to adjudge each and every of said officers, members of the late board of State canvassers, guilty of contempt, and the following morning ordered that each pay a fine of $1,500, and that the sheriff of Richland County do take them into custody and confine them in the common jail of said county until they be discharged by the order of the court.

Comments.

And your memorialists show that in reference to this proceeding for contempt the court acted hastily, passionately, and oppressively.

The supreme court, the highest court of the State, proceeded in a criminal cause against five executive officers of the executive department of the State, tried and found them guilty on two and a half hours' notice, and without giving them the indictment against them, or giving them a chance to make their defense by counsel. It is submitted that the proceeding was in gross violation of section 13, article 1, of the constitution, which provides that "no person shall be held to answer for any crime or offense until the same is fully, fairly, plainly, substantially, and formally described to him, * * * and be fully heard in his defense by himself or by his counsel, or by both, as he may elect."

It is further submitted that the members of the board of State canvassers were convicted of a contempt of court in that they had refused to obey the peremptory writ of mandamus of November 22, 1876, when in fact said writ was not served upon them until after the board had completed the canvass of the election returns and finally adjourned according to law, and after the members of said board, as such, were incapable in law of performing any further official functions. (See Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 622; Clark vs. Buchanan, 2 Minn., 346; also 33 N. Y. Rep., 603.)

Writ of habeas corpus issued by Hon. Hugh L. Bond, circuit judge United States.

The members of the board of State canvassers, finding themselves suddenly seized and confined in jail wrongfully (as they were advised and believed) by order of the supreme court of the State, from which there was no appeal, petitioned Hon. Hugh L. Bond, circuit judge of the United States, for a writ of habeas corpus. The petition and the proceedings thereupon, together with the learned opinion of Judge Bond, discharging the prisoners, are hereto appended in full. It is submitted that these proceedings show that the supreme court of South Carolina, in its attempt to control and coerce the board of State canvassers into making a particular declaration of the election, and a declaration different from what, in their judgment, they ought to make, proceeded wholly without jurisdiction or authority of law, and its acts were simply void.

V.

Organization of the senate on the 28th day of November, 1876.

Agreeably to the constitution of the State, the senators holding over from a previous election, as well as those declared elected on the 7th day of November, 1876, and to whom the secretary of state had issued lawful certificates of election, met in the senate chamber in the capitol of the State at Columbia, and forthwith proceeded to organize by the election of a president pro tempore (the lieutenant-governor under the constitution being the president of the senate) and other officers. No question of the legality of the organization or constitution of the senate has ever been raised.

VI.

Organization of the house of representatives.

On the said 28th day of November, 1876, the clerk of the former house of representatives, agreeably to precedent, as well as general parliamentary law and the rules of the said house, proceeded to organize the said house of representatives. The said clerk placed upon the roll of members all persons who had been declared elected to said house by the board of State canvassers and who had received certificates of said election from the secretary of state, numbering one hundred and sixteen in all. By the order of the said clerk all persons were directed to be excluded from the floor of the house except those holding certificates of election signed by the secretary of state. Sixty persons holding such certificates entered the hall of the house of representatives and were present at the organization thereof. Sixty-four other persons, of whom fifty-six held certificates of the secretary of state, presented themselves at the door of the hall of said house and requested admission.

Under the orders of the said clerk all of said fifty-six persons were freely allowed to enter the hall. The remaining eight persons were denied admission. In consequence of this denial of admission to persons holding no certificates of election, the sixty-four persons above referred to retired from the State-house, and subsequently one other person, W. H. Wallace, withdrew and joined the said sixty-four persons, making sixty-five in all.

Your memorialists here specially affirm that all of said sixty-five persons were admitted to the State-house, and were not, as is alleged in the memorial of Wade Hampton and others, and have not at any time been, excluded therefrom by the officers or forces of the United States or of the State of South Carolina. Eight persons claiming to be elected as members of the house of representatives from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens were excluded, not from the State-house, but from the hall of the house of representatives. These eight persons, as has already been stated, held no certificates of election from the secretary of state, and were not entitled to be admitted to the said hall except by the favor of the house of representatives when duly organized.

A majority of all the persons elected to said house, to wit, sixty, a lawful and constitutional quorum of said house, being present, the clerk proceeded with the organization of the house. Your memorialist, E. W. M. Mackey, was by a majority of all the members present duly elected as speaker, and the house was in all other respects duly and completely organized.

Your memorialists here affirm that at no time since the said day of organization has the number of members of said house been reduced below a legal and constitutional quorum, but, on the contrary, the number has been increased by the decision of cases of contested elections to the number of seventy-three, of whom sixty-nine remain at this time lawful and regular members thereof.

VII.

Case of William H. Wallace vs. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey.

And your memorialists further show that the said William H. Wallace thereafter demanded of Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, the election returns for governor and lieutenant-governor. The secretary of state declined to deliver said returns to said Wallace, at the same time informing him that said returns had been delivered to Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, speaker of the house of representatives assembled at the State-house.

Thereupon, said William H. Wallace, styling himself speaker of the house of representatives, filed a petition in the supreme court and prayed that a writ of mandamus might be issued against Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey, claiming to be speaker of the house of representatives, commanding them forthwith to deliver to the said William H. Wallace, as the speaker of the house of representatives, the returns of the managers of election for governor and lieutenant-governor.

This petition was filed December 2, 1876, and a rule was thereupon issued by the supreme court, requiring H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey, to show cause, on Monday, December 5, 1876, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

On Monday, December 5, 1876, Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, made return to the rule that he had delivered the election returns to Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, speaker of the house of representatives, before the service of said rule upon him, and that said returns were out of his custody and control.

On the same day Hon. E. W. M. Mackey made return to the rule that he was duly elected speaker of the house of representatives, which body was duly organized and sitting in the hall of the house of representatives in the State-house, and as such speaker he had received the returns of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor, under the provisions of act 4, article 3, of the constitution, and now held said returns for the purposes indicated in the constitution. That the supreme court had no power or jurisdiction in the matter. The trial then proceeded and evidence was produced to show that the house of representatives, presided over by E. W. M. Mackey, was organized with fifty-nine members, and no more, holding certificates of election from the secretary of state; and that at the time of the organization of said house only one hundred and sixteen members of the house had been by the board of State canvassers declared elected and had received certificates of election. Evidence was further introduced showing that of the members constituting the house of representatives which organized by the election of William H. Wallace only fifty-seven had certificates of election from the secretary of state and eight (five from Edgefield and three from Laurens) had certificates from the clerk of the supreme court, showing that from the records of that court it appeared that they had received the highest number of votes at the recent election.

[NOTE.—This was obtained from the report of the board of State canvassers to the supreme court above cited, in which they expressly declined to certify the election of those counties on account of fraud.]

Decision of the court.

The court upon the case thus made announced its opinion, the conclusion of which was as follows:

"That W. H. Wallace is the speaker of the lawfully constituted house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, and as such officer was and is entitled to the possession of the returns of the elections for governor and lieutenant-governor held on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, and which were transmitted to H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, but it appearing that the said election returns had been unlawfully delivered by said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, to E. W. M. Mackey, one of the respondents, the question is reserved for future argument and consideration whether the writ of mandamus should now issue to said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state. It is further ordered and adjudged that the petition be dismissed as to E. W. M. Mackey."

In coming to this conclusion the court said "that sixty-three members were in their seats when Mr. Wallace was elected. * * * That the house of representatives consisted of one hundred and twenty-four members, and sixty-three were necessary for a quorum to do business. * * * That all the members had certificates (of election) from the secretary of state except eight, and the qualification of these eight was established by the proceedings in this court. * * * The only matter what was the character of the certificates they had, the return of the board of State canvassers to the court showing that they had received the greatest number of votes in their particular counties entitled them to access to the floor for the purpose of organization."

Comments.

Your memorialists call attention to the fact—

1. The court expressly counts in the eight members from Edgefield and Laurens to make up a quorum of the Wallace house, and these are the counties the election in which the board of State canvassers expressly refused to certify at all on account of the evidence of fraud before them.

2. That the court having been unable to compel the board of State canvassers to decide the election according to its own view of their duty and not their view, it decides that its own declarations of the election in Edgefield and Laurens Counties shall stand and be taken instead of the decision and declaration of the board of State canvassers and the certificates of the secretary of state.

3. That this was simply usurpation of power on the part of the court, not given to it directly or indirectly by the constitution or statute laws of the State.

4. That as to sixty-three members being necessary to a quorum of the house of representatives, it is undoubtedly true, assuming that the whole number, one hundred and twenty-four, are elected; but when only one hundred and sixteen members are elected, as found by the board of State canvassers, then a majority of that whole number, fifty-nine, constitute a quorum to do business. This has been expressly so decided by each House of the Congress of the United States, shown in another part of this memorial. But the court expressly avoided this question, saying, "We do not feel it incumbent upon us either to inquire or determine if Mr. Mackey, one of the respondents in this case, is the speaker of a legally constituted house of representatives of the State of South Carolina." It is therefore fair to presume that the court, had it not overstepped its jurisdiction, (see opinion of Judge Bond,) and assumed the function of the board of State canvassers and decided one hundred and twenty-four members of the house of representatives elected instead of one hundred and sixteen, would have had a case before it in which it would have "felt it incumbent upon it to determine and decide if Mr. Mackey was the speaker of a legally constituted house of representatives of South Carolina," the same being composed of fifty-nine members, and decided the matter precisely as the Congress of the United States decided it, that that number was a majority of those duly elected, and therefore was a quorum.

5. This opinion of the court is obiter dictum. It could not grant the relief prayed, or any relief at all, and did not, but expressly refused to do so. It dismissed the petition as to E. W. M. Mackey, and should have dismissed it as to Hon. Henry E. Hayne, but did not, but retained it for further argument. It should have dismissed it as to him, as no principle of law is better settled than that an officer cannot be compelled by mandamus to do an act which is out of his power to do. But the court may require very grave argument on this question.

It is submitted that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter at all, and its own conclusion showed it had none; and all therefore said by it about the legality of the Wallace house was unnecessary to the judgment rendered, and therefore obiter dictum and of binding force on nobody. A single statement will show that the court had no jurisdiction in any event to grant the relief prayed; and it should have decided the petition with saying more, namely: If Mackey was the speaker of the lawfully organized house of representatives, then he was rightfully in possession of the returns and Wallace was not entitled to them, and the court could not order them delivered to him; and if he was not the speaker of the lawfully organized house of representatives, then, as the court said, he was not such an official person as could be compelled by mandamus to deliver the returns.

It is therefore plain from the first that the court had no power to grant any relief in the cause and should have simply dismissed the petition. That it did not do so shows that it sought to express an opinion when it could not render a judgment. (Carroll vs. Lessee of Carroll, 16 Howard Reports United States Supreme Court, 287.)

VIII.

Declaration of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor.

Your memorialists further show that, with respect to the election of governor and lieutenant-governor, the constitution of the State requires that the returns thereof shall be transmitted by the managers of the election to the secretary of state, who is required to transmit the same to the speaker of the house of representatives, who is required thereafter, in the presence of both houses, to open and publish the said returns. In accordance with these constitutional provisions the secretary of state did transmit the returns of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor to your memorialist, E. W. M. Mackey, as speaker, and thereafter, on the 5th day of December, 1876, the speaker did, in the presence of both houses, open and publish the said returns. Whereupon, with regard to the returns of the election in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, both houses, upon objection being made thereto, voted in separate session, to exclude the said returns. The canvass of the returns being completed, the result was announced by the speaker to be as follows:

For governor.

Daniel H. Chamberlain received ..... 86,216 votes.
Wade Hampton received ..... 83,071 votes.

For lieutenant-governor.

Richard H. Gleaves received ..... 86,620 votes.
William D. Simpson received ..... 82,521 votes.

The speaker thereupon declared your memorialists, Daniel H. Chamberlain and Richard H. Gleaves, duly elected, respectively, governor and lieutenant-governor of the State of South Carolina for the ensuing two years.

Your memorialists further show that on the 7th day of December, 1876, in the presence of both houses of the General Assembly, in the State-house, Daniel H. Chamberlain was duly inaugurated as governor of said State, and that thereafter your memorialists, who had been duly elected to the several State offices before named, duly qualified and entered upon their respective offices; and that constantly since their accession to office your memorialists have continued in full possession and exercise of their respective offices, and are now in possession of the same, together with all the insignia and appliances connected therewith.

IX.

The pretended house of representatives and its action.

Your memorialists further show that after the withdrawal of the fifty-seven members of the house of representatives from the house of representatives, as hereinbefore stated, they did, in conjunction with the eight pretended members from Edgefield and Laurens Counties, proceed to organize a pretended house of representatives, and to elect one W. H. Wallace as pretended speaker thereof, said pretended house of representatives having at the time of its pretended organization only fifty-seven persons duly elected as members of the house of representatives; that thereafter the said pretended house of representatives did, without the presence of the senate and without the returns of the election, proceed, in defiance of the provisions of the constitution, to declare Wade Hampton and W. D. Simpson elected as governor and lieutenant-governor, and that thereafter, on the 14th day of December, 1876, the said Hampton and Simpson went through the ceremony of a pretended inauguration as governor and lieutenant-governor.

And your memorialists further show that since the 14th day of December, 1876, the said pretended house of representatives and the said Hampton and Simpson as pretended governor and lieutenant-governor have claimed to exercise the functions of the house of representatives and of governor and lieutenant-governor, thereby causing obstruction to the lawful government of the State and setting an evil example to the people of the State.

Your memorialists, for further confirmation of the statements of fact and law herein contained, crave permission of your honorable bodies to refer to a certain official document adopted and published by the house of representatives of this State, being a "report of the special committee of the house of representatives of South Carolina relative to the organization of that body and the constitutional validity thereof, adopted December 21, 1876," hereto appended, and to make the same a part of this memorial, together with a copy of the opinion and decision of Hon. Hugh L. Bond, circuit judge of the fourth judicial circuit of the United States, to which special reference is made in the said memorial of Wade Hampton and others.

Wherefore your memorialists respectfully pray that your honorable bodies will, by all lawful and constitutional means, continue to uphold the authority of the lawful and constitutional executive and legislative departments of the government of South Carolina as represented by Daniel H. Chamberlain as governor, and your other memorialists as the several State officers and the senate and house of representatives of the said State, by protecting the said State against the domestic violence now threatened by Wade Hampton and others falsely styling themselves officers of said State.

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN,
Governor South Carolina.
R. H. GLEAVES,
Lieutenant-Governor South Carolina.

Report of the special committee of the house of representatives of South Carolina, relative to the organization of that body, and the constitutional validity thereof. Adopted December 21, 1876.

REPORT.

The special committee of this house, appointed under the following resolution—"Resolved, That a special committee of five, of which the speaker shall be chairman, be appointed for the purpose of preparing a report relative to the organization of the house of representatives, and such subsequent acts thereof as may seem to said committee pertinent to the matter of the constitutional validity of the said house"— beg leave to submit the following report:

In considering the question of the organization of this house, and its constitutional validity, your committee have deemed it best to present such statements of facts as seem necessary for a proper understanding of the entire case submitted to their consideration, with a full discussion of all the legal questions involved, in the following order:

I. A statement of the action of the board of State canvassers relative to members of the house of representatives, together with the grounds and reasons for such action.

II. A statement of the proceedings had in the supreme court of the State relative to members of the house of representatives.

III. The proper and legal mode of organizing the house of representatives, as established by general parliamentary law and by the law and practice of this State.

IV. A discussion of the authority of the clerk in excluding from the organization of the house of representatives all but legally elected members having proper certificates of election.

V. A discussion of the legal question of a legislative quorum and a statement of the precedents relating thereto.

VI. A statement of the actual facts connected with the organization of the house, and such subsequent acts thereof as are pertinent to the matter under consideration.

Following this order, your committee now proceed to consider:

I.—ACTION OF THE BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS.

On the 7th November, 1876, a general election was held in this State for the election, among others, of members of the house of representatives of this State. In accordance with the laws of the State, the returns of this election were forwarded to the proper officers at the capital to be submitted to the board of State canvassers. This board met on the 10th day of November, and began the work of canvassing the returns. In the course of the canvass the board was called upon to consider the election in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, where it was alleged upon evidence submitted to the board, that certain unlawful influences had so affected the election in these counties as to render it impossible for the board to determine and declare who had been duly elected.

Edgefield County.

It may be here stated that the leading evidences against the validity of the election in Edgefield County are:

First. The immense disproportion between the whole number of votes cast at this election as compared with the entire population of the county, as exhibited by the United States census of 1870 and the State census of 1875.

By the former census (United States, 1870) the entire population of Edgefield County, as then constituted, was 42,486. This included the village of Hamburg and the townships of Gregg, Hammond, and Schultz, having at that time, according to the same census, a population of 7,728, all of which were, in 1871, made a part of the new county of Aiken. Deducting this from the entire population, as above stated, we have left 34,758 as the population in 1870 of the territory now comprised in Edgefield County. A further deduction should here be made for the township of Shaw's Creek, fully one-third of which is also included in the county of Aiken. For this, however, we have made no deduction.

According to the State census of 1875, the entire population of Edgefield County, as now constituted, is 35,039.

The whole number of votes cast in this county at the late election, according to the returns before the board of State canvassers, was 9,374. Taking, then, either the United States census of 1870 or the State census of 1875, as giving the population of this county, the result is that at the late election the votes cast considerably exceeded the ratio of one vote for every four inhabitants. This fact alone would throw great discredit upon the accuracy of the returns.

But, by the State census of 1875, the whole number of male persons over twenty-one years of age in the county of Edgefield is only 7,122, showing an excess, in the total vote cast at this election, according to the returns, of 2,252 over the entire possible vote of the county.

Second. A comparison of the vote of this county at previous elections will establish the same result as above stated.

In 1870, the entire vote of this county for governor was 8,251. In connection with the vote of this year, it should be remembered that General M. C. Butler was a candidate upon the democratic ticket for lieutenant-governor. It is fair to presume that, owing to the fact of his being a citizen of this county and the acknowledged leader of the democratic party in that county, he brought out the full democratic strength. In the vote of 1870, as above given, is included the vote of that portion of the county which has since been made a part of the county of Aiken. By reference to the United States census of 1870 it will be found, as already stated, that the entire population of the territory now embraced in Aiken County was 7,728, which gives a voting population—reckoning by the same ratio as is established by a comparison of the entire population of the county with the whole number of males over twenty-one years of age—of, in round numbers, 1,500. Deducting this number from the entire vote, 8,251, we have 6,751 as the vote for 1870 of what constitutes the present county of Edgefield.

The aggregate vote of Edgefield County, as reported by the returns for this year, is 9,374, showing an excess over the unusually full vote of 1870 of no less than 2,623, or an excess over the vote of the entire county of Edgefield, before the present county of Aiken was established, of 1,123; or, again, an excess in the vote of the present year for the democratic candidates over the entire vote of the old county of Edgefield for General M. C. Butler in 1870 of 2,545.

In 1872, there being no democratic candidate for governor, it will be necessary to take the vote for State senator in that county as the standard of comparison. This vote in the aggregate was 5,374, or exactly 4,000 less than the reported vote of this year.

In 1874 the entire vote of the county was 6,298. By the United States census of 1870, the entire population of the territory embraced in the present county of Edgefield was 34,758. Allowing one voter for every five persons, the ratio established by the same census, there would have been in this county in 1874 a total voting population of 6,951. By the State census of 1875, the whole number of males over twenty-one years of age in this county was 7,122. An examination of these figures will show that the above vote of 1874 (6,298) is very nearly six-sevenths of the entire number of persons over twenty-one years of age, according to the United States census of 1870 or the State census of 1875. The statistics of popular elections in this country have established the fact that six-sevenths of the entire voting population is the highest limit reached in any elections, except in a few extreme and exceptional cases, which do not affect the general rule as here stated.

The conclusion is, that the vote of this county in 1874 was a full vote, under all ordinary circumstances, and yet this year the reported vote of this county exceeds the vote in 1874 by 3,076. And, in this connection, it may be added that General M. W. Gary, who claims to have been elected State senator from this county at the late election, has stated, in a public card, that about six hundred colored voters did not vote, which number being added to the excess just named would give an aggregate vote of 3,676 over the very full vote of 1874.

Third. The evidence before the board of State canvassers also showed that this large excess of voters over the lawful vote of the county was due to the increase exclusively of the democratic vote; for, while the vote was, at the recent election, largely increased over the vote at any previous election, yet the republican vote was decreased. This decrease in the republican vote was shown, by the evidence before the State board of canvassers, to be due not to a natural change of party connections, but to the fact of an organized and systematic plan of intimidation and violence carried on throughout the canvass and reaching its culmination on the day of the election.

The increase of the reported democratic vote of this year over the vote for General M. C. Butler in 1870, before the county of Edgefield was divided, is 2,545, and an increase over the democratic vote in 1874 of 3,367.

Fourth. The evidences before the board of canvassers also establish the fact that many of the election officers in Edgefield County were deterred by fear of physical violence from discharging their duties according to their convictions of justice and right. This result was accomplished in various ways. Some of the managers were prevented by threats from assuming the duties of their offices at all; others, again, during the progress of the election were prevented from rejecting the votes of persons not authorized to vote; others were prevented from making such returns of the election as their judgment dictated, or from forwarding their statements or other written evidences of the fraud and violence practiced at their poll; and, finally, the republican members of the board of county canvassers were coerced by threats of violence into signing returns which they believed registered the results of this overwhelming fraud and violence rather than the free ballots of the lawful voters of this county.

Laurens County.

In Laurens County the conduct of the election in its leading features was not unlike that in Edgefield County. This additional feature appeared, that the return of the board of county canvassers was signed by but two of the three commissioners composing the board, and one of the two signers signed the returns under protest, affixing his protest to the return itself, and afterward filing his affidavit with the board of State canvassers in the following terms:

"That so universal was this system of intimidation that deponent, influenced by this knowledge, and also by a personal observation of the illegal way in which the election was conducted in some particulars, did not feel justified in subscribing to the returns of the election in his official capacity as commissioner, and only consented to do so under protest, as said return will show on its face, when he became satisfied that his life would be placed in jeopardy if he declined to so subscribe the said return."

Under these circumstances and for these causes, of which the foregoing statement is but a brief and imperfect summary, the board of State canvassers reached the conclusion that no valid and lawful election had taken place in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and accordingly refused to declare any persons elected from these counties.

Having concluded the discharge of their duties, the board of State canvassers adjourned sine die on the 22d November, 1876.

II.—PROCEEDINGS IN THE SUPREME COURT.

During the sittings of the board of State canvassers, proceedings were instituted in the supreme court for the purpose of controlling the action of the board. That the supreme court had no jurisdiction to control the board in the manner attempted, will be clear to all impartial minds when the case is fully understood. It is possible that after the work of the board was fully completed, the court could, by some process of review, have inquired into the correctness of its action as to some officers; but it was clearly beyond its power to attempt to control its action in advance of any decision by the board; and as to the declaration of the election for members of the Legislature, the court could not have, either before or after the work of the board of canvassers was completed, any jurisdiction or right to interfere with, control, or modify that action. Upon this point the authorities are abundant and conclusive, but the length of this report precludes your committee from presenting them here at length. Your committee will content themselves with quoting two authorities only, in which the language is brief and pointed. Cushing, in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 52, section 141, in speaking of returning officers, says:

"It remains to be observed, in conclusion, that the proceedings of these officers, from the necessity of the case, are, in the first instance, uncontrollable by any other authority whatever, so that if on the one hand, notwithstanding an election has been effected, the returning officers refuse or neglect to make the proper return, the party thereby injured is without remedy or redress until the assembly to which he is chosen has examined his case and adjudged him to be duly elected; and, on the other hand, if the returning officers make a return when no election has in fact taken place, or of one who is not eligible, the person returned will not only be entitled but it is his duty to assume and discharge the functions of a member until his return and election be adjudged void."

In the celebrated Dorr case, Chief-Justice Durfee, of Rhode Island, used the following significant language in his charge to the jury:

"Courts and juries, gentlemen, do not count votes to determine whether a constitution has been adopted or a governor elected or not."

After enlarging upon this principle, he continues:

"And why not? Because, if we did so, we should cease to be a mere judicial and become a political tribunal, with the whole sovereignty in our hands. Neither the people nor the Legislature would be sovereign."

This view of the want of jurisdiction in the supreme court is fully sustained by the decision of Judge Bond, of the United States circuit court, in deciding the habeas corpus case; and from that decision we quote, as follows:

"The first question, then, to be decided at this time, and upon this motion, is whether or not the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter before it.

"Article 1, section 26, of the constitution of South Carolina provides, 'In the government of this Commonwealth, the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other.'

"Section 4 of article 6 of the same instrument defines the power of the supreme court thus: 'The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction only in cases of chancery, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law under such regulations as the General Assembly may by law prescribe: Provided, The said court shall always have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to give it a general supervisory control over all other courts in this State.'

"The powers of the board of State canvassers, so far as this case is concerned, are defined by chapter 8, title 2, sections 24, 25, and 26, thus:

"'SEC. 24. The board, when thus formed, shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct, and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"'SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe on the proper statement a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state.

"'SEC. 26. Upon such statements they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been, by the greatest number of votes, duly elected to such offices, or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body.'

"And the objection to the jurisdiction of the supreme court made by the petitioners is that they are a part of the executive department of the government, charged with the execution of a law of the State, and that they alone are authorized to canvass the votes, and that they are not subject in the exercise of their functions to the control of the judicial branch of the government.

"The Supreme Court of the United States, in a very able opinion by Mr. Justice Miller, in the case of Gaines vs. Thompson, 7 Wallace, 347, has very clearly determined what the law is on this subject, and that is that 'if it appear that the act which the court is asked to compel the officer of the executive department of the Government to do be purely ministerial, the court having jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandamus may compel the executive officer to perform his duty; but, if the act required to be done by the executive officer be not merely ministerial, but discretionary, or one about which he is to exercise his judgment, a court cannot, by mandamus, act directly upon the officer, and guide and control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care, in the ordinary exercise of official duty;' and the court further says that 'the interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the Executive Departments would be productive of nothing but mischief, and we are quite satisfied that such a power was never intended to be given them;' and for this Mr. Justice Miller quotes the opinion of Chief-Justice Taney, in the case of the Commissioner of Patents vs. Whitely, 4 Wallace, 522; and the law is stated to the same effect in a very celebrated case in Maryland, by Mr. Chief-Justice Bowie, Miles vs. Bradford, 22 Md. Rep., 170, a case where the power of the governor to canvass the votes was not so broadly given as in the case at bar.

"That the duty of this board of canvassers was not ministerial, but that they were clothed with a large discretion, it seems to me, is very plain. They were not merely to take the returns and aggregate them; they were to canvass them; that is, they were to examine, to sift, to scrutinize them, which implies a power to reject such as were not lawful in their judgment; and more, they were to decide all cases under protest or contest that might arise, when the power to do so did not, by the constitution, reside in some other body.

"They were the executive officers, appointed to declare the election of such persons as had, in their judgment, the majority of the legal votes cast. If they decided erroneously or falsely, the remedy of those candidates who thought themselves wronged was by quo warranto; but no court had the jurisdiction to compel the board of State canvassers to do otherwise than their own judgment dictated.

"It remains now to be seen what the court was asked to do by the relators. Their suggestion sets forth: 'That the board is proceeding to hear and determine all matters of contest and protest before them in regard to the election of persons who were candidates at the general election, and is proceeding to certify their determination on such contests and protests to the secretary of state.' And they pray that a writ of mandamus may issue, commanding them to ascertain from the managers' returns and statements, forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, the persons who, at the general election held on the said 7th day of November ultimo, had the highest number of votes; and commanding them and compelling them to revoke and annul any determination or decision which they may have made in any case of contest or protest, if any such there be."

"Under the cases cited in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, 7 Wallace, 347, Gaines vs. Thompson, above referred to, I am of opinion that the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had no jurisdiction to entertain any such 'suggestion' or petition."

In the closing portion of his opinion Judge Bond says:

"That the State board of canvassers were clothed, under the law, with discretionary powers, which required them to discriminate the votes, to determine and certify the candidates elected after scrutiny; and that they were a part of the executive department of the government, and were in no wise subject to the control as to what they should do, after they had commenced to perform that duty, to the judicial department."

Your committee, therefore, reach the conclusion that the board of State canvassers acted justly and properly, in view of the law and the facts, as to the election in Edgefield and Laurens Counties.

It will be seen that your committee have presented and defended at some length the conclusions of the board of State canvassers. This has been done for the sole purpose of establishing the fact that the action of that board was in itself just and legal; but it should be borne in mind that the validity of the present organization of this house does not depend in any degree upon the correctness or justice of the action of the board of canvassers. That board having completed its work, whether that work was just or not, it was final, and it only remained for this house to act in view of their declaration as it was actually made. It then became the duty of those who were elected to this house to proceed to effect an organization in accordance with general parliamentary law and the law and usage of this State.

III.—MODE OF ORGANIZING THE HOUSE.

Your committee now proceed to consider what is the proper and legal mode of organizing the house of representatives, as upon that question depends, to some extent, the validity of the present organization of this house.

In the well-known case of Kerr vs. Trego, 47 Pa. S. R., 292, cited in Brightley's Leading Cases on Elections, (p. 632,) Chief-Justice Lowrie, of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, laid down the following principle:

"On the division of a body that ought to be a unit, the test of which represents the legitimate social succession is, which of them has maintained the regular forms of organization, according to the law and usages of the body, or, in the absence of these, according to the laws, customs, and usages of similar bodies in like cases, or in analogy to them. This is the uniform rule in such cases."

And in the same case, speaking of the custom of the clerk of the former organization taking charge of the organization of the new body, he says, (p. 638:)

"It has the sanction of the common usage of every public body into which only a portion of new members is annually elected; it is the periodical form of re-organizing the select council and the senate of the State, and also the form of organizing the Senate of the United States on the meeting of a new Congress, when the Vice-President does not appear, and the last President pro tempore does; and we understand this custom to be uniform throughout the United States, though this is not very important. And when there is a president whose term as a member has expired, then the functions of the clerks continue, and they, in all cases, act as the organs of re-organizing the body, and continue to hold office until their successors are chosen and qualified. Our State and Federal Houses of Representatives are illustration enough of this. So universal is this mode of organizing all sorts of legislative and municipal bodies, that all departures from it can be justified only as founded on special and peculiar usages, or on positive legislation. Whenever this form is adhered to, a schism of the body becomes impossible, though the process of organization may be very tardy. * * *

"It is objected that a rule that attributes so much power to the officers of the previous year gives them an advantage which they may use arbitrarily and fraudulently against the new members, so as to secure to themselves an illegitimate majority. No doubt this may be so; but no law can guard against such frauds, so as to entirely prevent them, just as it cannot entirely prevent stealing and perjury and bribery; the people are liable to such frauds at every step in the processes of an election or organization. But so much more the need for order and law in this part of the process; the law can dictate that, though it cannot furnish honesty and sound judgment to the actors in it. That the law and order which we have announced have existed so long and so generally, is proof, at least, that they are better than no law at all."

In Wilson's Digest of Parliamentary Law, section 1603, page 221, this author says:

"At the commencement of every regular session, the Clerk of the House opens the session by calling the names of members by States and Territories, if in Congress, and by counties, if in State legislative assemblies. If a quorum answer to their names, he will put the following question: 'Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed to the election of a Speaker?' If decided in the affirmative, tellers are generally appointed to conduct the vote."

This seems to be the universal custom in the organization of legislative bodies, and such custom not only prevails in this State, but is specially established by the rules of the house of representatives of this State.

Rule 80 of the rules of the house of representatives of this State is as follows:

"In all cases not determined by these rules, or by the laws, or by the constitution of this State as ratified on the 14th, 15th, and 16th days of April, 1868, this house shall conform to the parliamentary law which governs the House of Representatives of the United States Congress."

Rule 81 is as follows:

"These rules shall be the rules of the house of representatives of the present and succeeding General Assemblies, until otherwise ordered."

Turning now to Barclay's Digest, (pages 44 et seq., and 126,) we find that the parliamentary law governing the House of Representatives of the United States Congress requires the Clerk of the last House to make up the roll of the members of the new House by placing thereon the names of such persons only whose credentials show "that they were regularly elected;" that having ascertained by a call of this roll that a quorum is present, the Clerk then proceeds to call the names of the members for the choice of a Speaker; the Speaker being chosen, assumes the duties of presiding officer, and after swearing in the members, the oath of office being first administered to him, proceeds to complete the organization; pending the election of a Speaker, the Clerk preserves order and decorum.

Such being not only the custom and parliamentary practice of this State, but also the general parliamentary law governing legislative bodies, the question arises: Was the present house of representatives organized on the 28th day of November in accordance with this universally established custom? That it was so organized the facts prove beyond a doubt.

IV.—AUTHORITY OF THE CLERK IN EXCLUDING ALL BUT LEGALLY ELECTED MEMBERS.

Before stating, however, the facts connected with the organization of the house of representatives, your committee deem it proper to consider next the question whether the clerk of the last house was authorized to omit from the roll the names of the claimants from Edgefield and Laurens Counties.

Your committee have already in this report stated the fact that the board of state canvassers determined that no valid election had taken place in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and had refused to issue certificates of election to any person in those counties.

Upon the question of the right of the claimants from these counties to be placed upon the roll, and to participate in the organization, the following citation from Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, section 229, page 87, is in point:

"The right to assume the functions of a member, in the first instance, and to participate in the preliminary proceedings and organization, depends wholly and exclusively upon the return or certificate of election; those persons who have been declared elected and are duly returned being considered as members, until their election is investigated and set aside, and those who are not so returned being excluded from exercising the function of members, even though duly elected, until their election is investigated and their right admitted."

To the same effect is section 141 (page 52) of the same work, which your committee have already cited in connection with the action of the supreme court.

In section 238 (page 91) of the same work, in discussing the principles of parliamentary law governing the assembling and organization of legislative bodies, Cushing says:

"Hence it has occurred more than once that struggles for political power have begun among the members of our legislative assemblies even before their organization; and it has happened on the one hand, that persons whose rights of membership were in dispute, and who had not the legal and regular evidence of election, have taken upon themselves the functions of members; and, on the other, that persons having the legal evidence of membership have been excluded from participating in the proceedings."

In order to avoid such difficulties, this distinguished writer lays down the following principles in section 240, which are applicable to the question now under consideration:

"That no person who is not duly returned is a member even though legally elected, until his election is established.

"That those members who are duly returned, and they alone, (the members whose rights are to be determined being excluded,) constitute a judicial tribunal for the decision of all questions of this nature."

In Kerr vs. Trego, (Brightley's Election Cases, page 636,) already cited, the chief-justice said:

"In all bodies that are under law, the law is that where there has been an authorized election for the office in controversy, the certificate of election, which is sanctioned by law or usage, is the prima facie written title to the office, and can be set aside only by a contest in the form prescribed by law. This is not now disputed. No doubt this gives great power to dishonest election officers, but we know no remedy for this but by the choice of honest men."

It is proper here, in this connection, to again refer to the language already quoted from the same authority, (page 638:)

"It is objected that a rule that attributes so much power to the officers of the previous year gives them an advantage which they may use arbitrarily and fraudulently against the new members, so as to secure to themselves an illegitimate majority. No doubt this may be so; but no law can guard against such frauds so as to entirely prevent them, just as it cannot entirely prevent stealing, and perjury, and bribery; the people are liable to such frauds at every step in the processes of an election or organization. But so much the more need for order and law in this part of the process; the law can dictate that, though it cannot furnish honesty and sound judgment to the actors in it. That the law and order which we have announced have existed so long and so generally, is proof, at least, that they are better than no law at all."

Applying the law, as now stated, to the facts in the present instance, it is clear, first, that there were no representatives from Edgefield and Laurens Counties having certificates of election according to the law and usage of this State; and, second, that, under the law, without such certificates, the clerk had no right to place the names of any persons upon the roll of the house as representatives from these counties.

It is true that certain parties did appear at the time of the organization of the house, claiming to represent these two counties, and presenting certain certificates signed by the clerk of the supreme court, upon which certificates they claimed that their names should be placed upon the roll, and that they should be admitted to participate in the organization of the house. These certificates the clerk of the house very properly refused to recognize as certificates of election sanctioned either by law or usage. But, aside from their validity, it is a fact worthy of notice here that these certificates were not authorized to be issued by the court itself. On the contrary, when asked to do so, the court distinctly refused to grant such certificates, but remarked that the parties in interest before the court could obtain transcripts of the record of the court from the clerk. In the proceedings of the court, as reported at the time in the leading democratic journals of the State, and, so far as your committee knows, undisputed up to the present time, the following appears:

"Mr. Youmans then submitted an order that the clerk of court issue certificates to the persons who had received the highest number of votes for members of the General Assembly for the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and that his certificates stand in lieu of those which should have been issued by the board.

"Judge WILLARD. That we cannot do. There is no authority or precedent for such an order. If our opinion has not weight enough to be respected in the organization of the houses, putting it on paper would not add to it."—Charleston News and Courier, November 27, 1876; Columbia Register, November 26, 1876.

But admitting that the court itself had undertaken to issue certificates of election to persons from Edgefield and Laurens Counties, such certificates would be clearly of no value as certificates of election entitling the holders to be regarded as representatives of those counties, nor could they be regarded as such prima facie evidence of election as entitled the holders to be placed upon the roll of the clerk.

The position assumed and maintained by the republican party before and during this entire contest was:

First. That no persons except those declared elected and duly returned by the board of State canvassers, and holding certificates of the secretary of state, were entitled by law or usage to be placed upon the roll. (Cushing, sections 229 and 240.)

Second. That the organization of the house must be effected by those persons only whose election had thus been declared by the board of State canvassers and certified by the secretary of state in accordance with the law of the State.

Third. That all other persons claiming to be entitled to seats in the house as representatives must submit their claims to the house after its organization by the members whose seats were undisputed. (Cushing, sections 229 and 240.)

In these just and reasonable demands the democratic members-elect of the house of representatives refused to acquiesce, although in the organization of the senate the course which the republicans had laid down was not only followed, but acquiesced in by all the democratic senators without protest or debate; and even to this date no person has been admitted to a seat in the senate from either Edgefield or Laurens County.

V.—LEGISLATIVE QUORUM.

Having ascertained and determined the proper course to be pursued in organizing the house, and having discussed the authority of the clerk to exclude all but legally elected members having the proper certificates of election, the only legal question now remaining to be considered is, what number of the duly elected members were sufficient to constitute a quorum for the purpose of organizing the house of representatives and discharging the functions of a legislative body?

By the action of the board of State canvassers in regard to the counties of Edgefield and Laurens but one hundred and sixteen persons were returned as duly elected members of the house of representatives, and the question now arises, what number of these one hundred and sixteen members were necessary to form a quorum for the purpose of perfecting a valid organization?

By section 4, article 2, of the constitution of the State it is provided that "the house of representatives shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members, to be apportioned among the several counties according to the number of inhabitants contained in each;" and by section 14 of the same article it is further provided that a "majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business."

The language of the Constitution of the United States upon the subject of a legislative quorum is identical with the language used in the constitution of our State: "A majority of each (house) shall constitute a quorum to do business." (Constitution United States, section 5, article 1.) And while it is true that the number of members of which the two Houses of Congress may consist is not as precisely fixed as in this State, yet the possible number of which each House may be composed at any given time is absolutely as certain as though it was an unalterable number, the possible membership at any given time being always an absolutely fixed number.

This similarity in the constitutional provisions in regard to the Legislature of South Carolina and the Congress of the United States is important in determining what constitutes a quorum of the house of representatives of this State, since, in the absence of all precedents in our own legislative annals, your committee are compelled to refer to the decisions of Congress upon this question.

Fortunately, this matter has been decided by both Houses of Congress, and is no longer a disputed question. During the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, in the House of Representatives, the Speaker (Hon. G. A. Grow, of Pennsylvania,) decided that a quorum of the House consisted of a majority of the members chosen, and in this decision of the Chair the House acquiesced. (Journal H. R., first session Thirty-seventh Congress, page 117.) This decision was not rendered, as has been erroneously stated on several recent occasions, for the purpose of enabling the House to organize, because several of the States failed to choose Representatives, but it was made fifteen days after the organization, upon a question which in nowise affected the validity of the organization.

The question as to whether a quorum consisted of a majority of the entire number of members provided for by the Constitution or a majority of the members actually chosen was first raised in the Senate of the United States on the 11th April, 1862, and after a discussion, which was prolonged for several sessions, it was finally decided, on May 4, 1864, by a vote of 26 yeas to 11 nays, that "a quorum of the Senate consists of a majority of the Senators duly chosen." Among those voting for this decision we find the names of eminent men of both political parties, such as Reverdy Johnson, Lyman Trumbull, Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson, W. P. Fessenden, Benjamin Wade, and others.

Precedents to the contrary may be found in the earlier decisions in Congress and among the earlier writers, but they have been overruled by these later decisions, in which all recent writers concur. For instance, Professor Farrar, in his Manual of the Constitution of the United States, page 166, says, in relation to the constitutional provision in regard to a quorum, that "this has been held to be a majority of the members actually sworn in and entitled to seats at the time, and not a majority of a full delegation from all the States."

This question of a constitutional quorum has also been decided by the Legislature of Indiana. Certain members of the Legislature resigned, in order to leave the Legislature without a quorum, the constitution of Indiana providing that two-thirds of the members shall constitute a quorum. The Legislature, in consequence of the withdrawal of these members, adjourned without passing the regular appropriation bills, and the governor ordered new elections to fill the vacancies, and again convened the Legislature. The appropriation bills were passed, when certain members, in order to defeat a vote upon the ratification of the fifteenth amendment, withdrew again, as on the former occasion. The Legislature thereupon decided that two-thirds of the actual membership constituted a quorum, and proceeded to ratify the amendment. This action was certified in forwarding the vote of the Legislature on the ratification of the amendment. No question was raised in regard to it by Congress, and the vote of Indiana, as thus cast, was passed upon and counted.

From this examination of the provisions of our constitution relating to a legislative quorum, and from the precedents in the Congress of the United States which have been cited, as well as the Indiana case, your committee feel fully warranted in concluding that the true definition of a legislative quorum, under our constitution, is a majority of the members chosen, and the organization of the House of Representatives upon this basis would be constitutioual and valid.

It is objected to the view which your committee has presented of a legislative quorum under our constitution that, if less than a majority of the possible number of members was elected, it would then place it within the power of but a very few members to organize the house. This your committee admit; for, unless we act upon this view of the constitution, in certain contingencies it would become impossible to organize a house of representatives in this State. Without such an organization no speaker could be elected, and consequently no writs of election could be issued to fill vacancies, if by any possibility the people failed at the general election to elect a majority of the one hundred and twenty-four members provided for by the constitution. The government, therefore, would, in such an emergency, be brought to a permanent stand-still until the next general election. Such a result cannot be reasonably supposed to be within the scope or intent of the constitution.

VI.—STATEMENT OF FACTS RESPECTING ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Having concluded their examination of all the legal questions involved in the organization of the present house of representatives, your committee now proceed to state the facts connected therewith.

The clerk of the last house of representatives, Mr. A. O. Jones, was, as your committee have already explained, charged with the duty of organizing the new house by preparing the official roll of members-elect, and by calling the house to order and presiding during the election of a speaker. Mr. Jones placed upon the roll of the house the names only of the one hundred and sixteen persons bearing the certificates of the secretary of state, based upon the decision of the board of State canvassers, the election in Edgefield and Laurens Counties being declared by the canvassers to be void by reason of fraud and violence.

At twelve o'clock m. of Tuesday, the 28th November, 1876, the day fixed by the constitution for the assembling of the Legislature, Mr. Jones proceeded with the organization of the house, having previously given orders to the sergeant-at-arms to admit no person to the floor of the house as members except those holding the certificates of the secretary of state. It may be mentioned here that in enforcing this latter order of the clerk, the sergeant-at-arms found himself confronted at the door of the house by the entire body of democratic members, headed by the persons claiming to be elected from Edgefield and Laurens Counties. Having no force at hand sufficient to guard against the entrance of these persons from Edgefield and Laurens, the sergeant-at-arms called upon the United States Army officer on duty in the building to aid him against being overpowered while executing the order of the clerk. The officer complied with the call, and assisted the sergeant-at-arms in maintaining his position. It is not true, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding, that any officer or soldier passed upon or undertook to pass upon the certificates of members of the house. The United States forces acted at this point simply as a support to the sergeant-at-arms, who was engaged in executing a lawful order of the clerk.

Upon the refusal of the sergeant-at-arms to admit the persons claiming to be elected from Edgefield and Laurens, the entire body of democratic members retired from the State-house, notwithstanding all who held certificates of the secretary of state were freely permitted, and even invited and urged, to enter the hall of the house.

At twelve m. the clerk proceeded to call the roll of the house; whereupon fifty-nine answered to their names. The clerk then immediately announced that an election for speaker was in order, and immediately called the roll upon this question; whereupon fifty-nine members voted, one democrat, Mr. W. H. Wallace, of Union, who had entered the hall subsequently to the first call of the roll, being present, but not voting. The result of the vote was declared by the clerk to be that E. W. M. Mackey received 55 votes, and was, therefore, duly elected. Mr. Mackey immediately appeared, took the oath of office, and assumed the duties of speaker. After the election of clerk, a message was sent to the senate, informing that body of the organization of the house, and immediately thereafter received a similar message from the senate, announcing the organization of that body. A joint committee of the two houses was thereupon appointed and waited upon the governor, and informed him that the two houses were duly organized and were ready to receive any communications which he might be pleased to make. After transacting other business, the house and senate adjourned until twelve o'clock the next day. During the second day's session the committee on privileges and elections reported upon the contest for seats from Barnwell County, and their report, seating the republican contestants, was adopted, and four of the persons declared elected were sworn in and took their seats; the other member from Barnwell subsequently appeared and qualified. The house again adjourned until twelve m. of Thursday, the 30th November, the senate adjourning until twelve m. of Friday, the 1st December.

Your committee would here state the action of the democratic members after their refusal to enter the house on Tuesday the 27th ultimo. They then immediately proceeded to the hall of the Richland rifle club, where they elected General W. H. Wallace, before named in this narrative, as speaker, the parties from Edgefield and Laurens taking part in all the proceedings. The whole number of persons present at this time was sixty-five, of whom only fifty-seven held the certificates of the secretary of state. This body continued its session from time to time until the morning of Thursday the 30th ultimo. At about 11.30 a. m. of the 30th, the entire body which had been sitting in the hall of the Richland rifle club appeared in a body at the door of the hall of the house of representatives in the State-house, and demanded admission of the officers of the house then on duty at the door. While these officers were endeavoring to enforce the rules of the house, excluding from the floor of the house all parties except members and officers of the house and certain privileged persons, the democratic members overpowered the doorkeepers and forced their way, together with the claimants from Edgefield and Laurens, into the hall of this house. Mr. Wallace immediately seized and occupied the speaker's chair and Mr. Sloan took possession of the clerk's desk.

At twelve m. of the same day the speaker and clerk of this house appeared and demanded possession of their respective positions. This demand was refused. This situation was continued until Monday, December 4, 1876, when the house adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina did assemble in the hall of the house of representatives on Tuesday the 28th day of November, 1876, a constitutional quorum of all the members duly elected as members thereof being present and answering to their names, and did organize by the election of Hon. E. W. M. Mackey as speaker and A. O. Jones, esq., as clerk, and did in all respects proceed to perfect its organization in conformity with the constitution and laws of South Carolina, and has continued in session from day to day until the present time;

"And whereas on Thursday the 30th November, 1876, a body of men, comprising many persons having no legal claim or credentials, did enter the hall of the house of representatives by force and arms, and did proceed to usurp the speaker's chair and the clerk's desk, and did refuse, upon the demand and order of the speaker of the house of representatives, to yield the same;

"And whereas said body of men has been since the said 30th day of November, 1876, engaged in interrupting the proceedings and defying the authority of the house of representatives, and are now preventing the house of representatives from proceeding with business;

"And whereas the senate and house of representatives, by concurrent resolution, have appointed this the 4th day of December, at two o'clock p. m., in the hall of the house of representatives, as the time and place for opening, counting, and publishing the returns of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor;

"And whereas the house of representatives is unable to enforce its authority against said body of men, who have unlawfully intruded themselves into the house of representatives;

"And whereas said intruders have openly proclaimed that they will not obey the orders of the house of representatives or retire from the hall thereof, but will resist by force of arms any attempt on the part of the officers of the said house to enforce its orders and authority: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the governor of the State be, and he is hereby, requested to take such measures as will protect the house of representatives against the unlawful intrusion, interruption, and violence caused and done by the said body of men who have unlawfully intruded themselves into the hall of the house of representatives, as hereinbefore set forth, and who are now engaged in unlawfully interrupting the proceedings thereof, and who are also, by their unlawful conduct and presence in the house of representatives, preventing the assembling of the General Assembly in joint convention, as is provided by the constitution of the State of South Carolina."

Upon the adoption of the foregoing preamble and resolutions and upon a notification from the speaker of this house that the governor was prepared to immediately respond to the request contained in the resolution, Mr. Wallace, after a few remarks addressed to the body co-operating with him, withdrew with them.

Previous to the withdrawal of Mr. Wallace and his companions, the committee on privileges and elections made a report, which was adopted by the house, confirming the action of the board of State canvassers in regard to the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and declaring that no valid election was held in either of those two counties on the 7th November, 1876.

On the same day (2d December, 1876) the committee on privileges and elections also reported upon the contest for seats from Abbeville County, and their report seating the republican contestants was adopted, four of whom immediately qualified and took their seats, the other member subsequently appearing and qualifying.

On the 5th December, 1876, the same committee reported upon the contest for seats from Aiken County, and their report seating the four republican contestants was adopted, all of whom being in attendance were duly sworn in and took their seats.

At one o'clock of the same day, pursuant to a joint resolution previously adopted, the senate and house of representatives met in joint convention in the hall of the house of representatives, for the purpose of canvassing the returns of the late election for governor and lieutenant-governor, in accordance with section 4, article 3, of the constitution of this State. The returns were opened and read by the speaker of the house, and when the counties of Edgefield and Laurens were reached, objections being made to the returns from those counties, in accordance with the rules previously adopted, the senate withdrew, and the two houses, acting separately, decided not to count the votes alleged to have been cast in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens. The canvass of the returns was then completed, and the following result was announced:

For governor.

D. H. Chamberlain received	86,216
Wade Hampton received	83,071

For lieutenant-governor.

R. H. Gleaves received	86,620
W. D. Simpson received	82,521

The speaker then declared that Hon. Daniel H. Chamberlain and Hon. Richard H. Gleaves were duly elected, respectively, governor and lieutenant-governor of the State of South Carolina for the ensuing two years. The joint convention was then dissolved and the senate retired.

On the 7th of December, 1876, at one o'clock p. m., the senate and house of representatives met in joint assembly, pursuant to a resolution adopted by both houses, for the inauguration of the governor-elect. The constitutional oath of office was then administered to Hon. D. H. Chamberlain, governor-elect, who thereupon delivered his inaugural address, after which the joint assembly was dissolved and the senate returned to its chamber, where the oath of office was administered to Hon. R. H. Gleaves, the lieutenant-governor-elect, thereby perfecting the organization of the government of the State in accordance with the will of the people, as expressed by their legal votes at the general election on the 7th November, 1876.

Your committee have now presented, as they trust with sufficient clearness and detail, the facts which have attended the history of this house since the declaration of the late election by the board of State canvassers. They have also presented the law which, as it has seemed to them, was applicable to the decision of the legal and parliamentary questions which have arisen and were involved in the facts.

In conclusion, it only remains for your committee to express their unhesitating opinion that the foregoing report establishes in all respects the legal and constitutional validity of this house, and, by consequence, the validity of all its acts since its organization on the 28th day of November, 1876.

E. W. M. MACKEY,
Speaker of the house of representatives.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of South Carolina, Fourth Circuit:

Ex parte H. E. Hayne, Thomas C. Dunn, Francis L. Cardozo, William Stone, H. W. Purvis.

Petition for writ of habeas corpus.

To the honorable Hugh L. Bond, circuit judge of the circuit court of the United States in and for the said circuit and district.

The humble petition of H. E. Hayne, Thomas C. Dunn, Francis L. Cardozo, William Stone, and Henry W. Purvis respectfully shows:

That your petitioners, Henry E. Hayne, (as secretary of state of the State of South Carolina,) Thomas E. Dunn, (as comptroller-general of said State,) Francis L. Cardozo, (as State treasurer of said State,) William Stone, (as attorney-general of said State,) and Henry W. Purvis (as adjutant and inspector general of said State) were, by the laws of the said State, constituted the board of State canvassers and authorized and required to canvass the returns and other evidences of election for each general election occurring in said State, and among other things to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers voted for, upon the certified copies of the statements of the boards of county canvassers, and to certify such statements to be correct, and to certify their determinations to the secretary of state, and, further, to determine and declare what persons have been by the greatest number of votes duly elected to such offices, with power and duty to decide all cases under protest and contest, when the power to do so does not by the constitution reside in some other body.

That the secretary of state, upon receiving such certificate of the determinations of the board of State canvassers, is required to transmit a copy thereof, under seal, to each person thereby declared to be elected; and as to members of the Congress of the United States to prepare a general certificate under the seal of the State, addressed to the House of Representatives, of the due election of the persons chosen at such election as Representatives of said State according to such certified determination of said board of State canvassers; and as to the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, the board of State canvassers is required to make a statement of all the votes and determine and certify the persons elected in the same manner as provided for the election of other officers; and the secretary of state is required to cause a copy of such certified determination of said board to be delivered to each of the persons therein declared to be elected, and, further, to prepare three lists of the names of the electors of President and Vice-President, and deliver them, with the signature of the governor and under the seal of the State, to the president of the college of electors on or before the first Wednesday in December; and, for a fuller and more specific statement of the duties and powers hereinbefore set forth, reference is now craved to the statutes of said State.

That the Legislature of said State in conferring upon your petitioners the powers and duties hereinbefore set forth and referred to acted in pursuance and solely by authority of, in respect to the election of members of Congress, section 4 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, and, in respect to the election of President and Vice-President, of section 1 of article 2 of the Constitution of the United States.

That, in pursuance of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the said State, a general election for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, for the various State and county officers, members of the General Assembly of said State, and for circuit solicitors of said State, was held on the 7th day of November, 1876.

That in pursuance of the powers and duties hereinbefore named, your petitioners assembled and organized, upon the notification of the secretary of state, on the 10th day of November, 1876, for the purpose of performing the duties imposed upon them by law, as a board of State canvassers; that they adjourned from day to day, Sundays excepted, until the 22d day of November, 1876, on which day, by the laws of said State defining their powers and duties, their powers to act as a board of State canvassers of said election ceased and determined by the express provisions of the twenty-seventh section of chapter 8 of title 2 of the general statutes of said State, and on which said day your petitioners, having fully, legally, fairly, and honestly, according to the measure of their best skill and judgment, discharged and fulfilled their powers and duties as a board of State canvassers, did adjourn without delay.

That in the lawful discharge of their duties as a board of State canvassers your petitioners duly canvassed, according to law, the returns of the election of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and of members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and determined and certified that John Winsmith, Christopher C. Bowen, Timothy Hurley, Thomas B. Johnston, Wilson Cooke, W. B. Nash, and William F. Myers were duly elected by the greatest number of votes as electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and that JOSEPH H. RAINEY, Richard H. Cain, ROBERT SMALLS, D. Wyatt Aiken, and John H. Evans were duly elected members of the House of Representatives of the United States.

That in canvassing the returns of said election for members of Congress and for electors of President and Vice-President, and determining, declaring, and certifying the result thereof, your petitioners were compelled to canvass and declare the election for all the State and other officers voted for at said election, except the governor and lieutenant-governor, not only by reason of their duties as defined by the laws of said State, in respect to such State officers, but also by reason of the fact that the returns of all the persons voted for, and all other papers and evidences pertaining to said election and within the custody and jurisdiction of the board of State canvassers, covered and embraced the entire election, and were, therefore, necessarily blended and commingled as one general whole.

That if your petitioners had failed to discharge their duties in full on or before the said 22d day of November, 1876, the said election for electors of President and Vice-President and members of Congress would have failed, inasmuch as by the laws of said State no power is given to the board of State canvassers, or to any other person or persons, to canvass and determine said elections after said day.

That on the 13th day of November, 1876, after your petitioners had organized as the board of State canvassers, and while they were in discharge of their duties as such board of State canvassers, your petitioners were served with a notice, signed by James Conner, as counsel for certain relators in a proceeding in the supreme court of said State, wherein your petitioners were informed that motions would be made in said supreme court, on the 14th day of November, 1876, for writs of prohibition and mandamus against your petitioners; that, as subsequently appeared, the said proceeding in the said supreme court was intended to restrain your petitioners from acting in a judicial capacity as a board of State canvassers, or to inquire into any matter not appearing on the face of the returns of said election, and, further, to compel your petitioners to proceed to perform the merely ministerial duty of aggregating the returns of the several boards of county canvassers, and to certify the results thereof in accordance with the results of such aggregation; that your petitioners appeared in said supreme court, by their counsel; whereupon a rule of said court was made requiring your petitioners to show cause before said court why writs of prohibition and mandamus should not be issued against them in accordance with the prayers of said relators; that said court subsequently granted an order requiring your petitioners to proceed to aggregate the returns of the several boards of county canvassers and to report the results to said court; that your petitioners thereupon proceeded to aggregate said returns of the boards of county canvassers and reported the results to said court, including the results of said returns as to the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States and as to the members of the House of Representatives of the United States; that your petitioners, in regarding the order of said court and in reporting the results of said canvass to the said court, acted in a spirit of courtesy to a high judicial tribunal, but then and now protesting and averring that the said court had no authority to issue said order or otherwise to restrain or coerce your petitioners as a board of State canvassers, or to guide or direct them in the discharge of their duties; that your petitioners, having, as hereinbefore stated, performed the duty required of them by the supreme court, and having, as hereinbefore stated, fully discharged all their duties in strict accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the constitution and laws of the said State, as a board of State canvassers, adjourned without day, whereupon, after said adjournment without day, your petitioners were served with an order of the said supreme court requiring them as a board of state canvassers to certify the elections as senators and representatives in the General Assembly of said State of all persons who appeared by the said report of your petitioners to the said court to be elected, and to deliver a certified statement thereof to the secretary of state, and requiring your petitioner, Henry E. Hayne, as secretary of state, to certify such statement of your petitioners to the said persons so to be declared elected; that your petitioners, having already discharged all their duties as a board of State canvassers, and having at the time of the service of said order ceased to exist as a board of State canvassers, were and are wholly unable to perform any other or additional duties as a board of State canvassers; that your petitioners, failing to comply with the last-named order of the said court, for the reasons now set forth, the said court proceeded, at 1.30 p. m. of the 24th day of November, 1876, to issue its order requiring your petitioners to show cause to the said court why they should not be attached for contempt of the said court in failing to obey the said order of the court, and made the said rule returnable at four o'clock p. m. of the said 24th day of November; that at said hour your petitioners appeared by counsel and by affidavit informed the court that for want of time they were unable to make due answer to said rule, whereupon the court refused to grant your petitioners further time to answer, and adjudged them forthwith to be in contempt of said court, and on the 25th day of November, 1876, ordered that your petitioners do pay each a fine of $1,500, and that the sheriff of Richland County do take them into custody and confine them in the common jail of said county until they be discharged by the order of said court; that subsequently, on the 25th day of November, 1876, your petitioners were taken into custody by the sheriff of said county and confined in the common jail of said county, where they are now, and each of them confined and restrained unlawfully, and against right and justice, of their liberty.

And your petitioners further show that a part of the proceeding hereinbefore referred to in the supreme court of said State consists of a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel your petitioners, as a board of State canvassers, to proceed to change the results determined and declared by them on or before the 22d day of November, 1876, while your petitioners were lawfully acting as such board of canvassers, as to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and to compare and correct said results by the returns of the managers of the several polls or precincts throughout the State, and otherwise still further to change said results as to said electors; that in accordance with said petition for mandamus the said supreme court issued its rule to your petitioners, requiring them to show cause on the 24th day of November, 1876, why a writ of mandamus should not issue in accordance with the prayer of said petition; that your petitioners made return to said rule that they were no longer capable of acting as a board of canvassers, whereupon the said court heard argument as to the sufficiency of said return, and, as your petitioners are advised and believe, the said court now have the said matter under consideration; that a part of said proceedings in said supreme court likewise consists of an application by the relators therein that the said court shall restrain and command, guide and direct your petitioners as a board of State canvassers in the discharge of their duties in determining ascertaining, and declaring the results of the election of members of Congress voted for at said election; that as appears both by the order of commitment and the reasons therein set forth under which your petitioners are now confined, and by other proceedings in said cause in the supreme court, the said court did, by its order, require your petitioners to make certified statements to said court of the persons who had received the highest number of votes for all the offices for which they were respectively candidates at the said general election held on the 7th day of November, 1876, including among said officers the offices of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States and of members of the House of Representatives of the United States.

And your petitioners further show that the said proceedings in said supreme court, including all its said orders, were wholly without jurisdiction and an interference with the legal powers and duties of your petitioners as a board of State canvassers in respect to said election for electors for President and Vice-President and members of the House of Representatives of the United States, which powers and duties, as hereinbefore stated, your petitioners were during said proceedings in said court executing under the laws of the said State, passed in pursuance of the authority conferred by the Constitution of the United States; that said proceedings, and especially said order committing your petitioners to jail, were and are an attempt by unlawful means to induce your petitioners as a board of State canvassers, and as officers whose duty it was to ascertain, announce, and declare the result of the said election, wherein an election was held for members of the Congress of the United States, and whose duty it was to give and make certificates, documents, and evidence in relation thereto, to violate and refuse to comply with their duty and the laws regulating the same; that for this reason said proceedings and said order committing your petitioners to jail were and are in violation of section 5511 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Wherefore your petitioners, and each of them, show that they are in custody and confinement and restrained of their liberty for acts done in pursuance of laws of the United States, and that they are in custody in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray your honor to grant the writ of habeas corpus, directed to Jesse E. Dent, sheriff of Richland County, in whose custody your petitioners now are detained in jail as aforesaid, requiring him to produce the bodies of your petitioners before your honor, at such time as your honor may direct by said writ, to be disposed of as law and justice may require.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

ORDER.

Mr. HAGOOD, Clerk: Let the writ issue as prayed, and make it returnable before me in the circuit-court room immediately.

HUGH L. BOND.

NOVEMBER 27, 1876.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of South Carolina, Fourth Circuit:

The President of the United States to the sheriff of the county of Richland of the State of South Carolina:

We command you that you have the bodies of Henry E. Hayne, William Stone, Francis L. Cardozo, Thomas C. Dunn, Henry W. Purvis, by you imprisoned and detained, as it is said, together with the time and cause of such imprisonment and detention, by whatever name the said Henry E. Hayne, William Stone, Francis L. Cardozo, Thomas C. Dunn, and Henry W. Purvis shall be called or charged, before Hon. Hugh L. Bond, judge of the United States circuit court for the district of South Carolina, at the court-rooms of the United States court-house, in the city of Columbia, South Carolina, on Monday, the 27th instant, immediately, to do and to receive what shall then be considered concerning the said Henry E. Hayne, William Stone, Francis L. Cardozo, Thomas C. Dunn, and Henry W. Purvis.

And have you then and there this writ.

Witness the honorable Morrison R. Waite, Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, at Columbia, in the district aforesaid, this 27th day of November, A. D. 1876.

By order of the court.

MARSHAL'S RETURN—IN CIRCUIT COURT.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of South Carolina, Fourth District:

Ex parte Henry E. Hayne, William Stone, Francis L. Cardozo, Thomas C. Dunn, Henry W. Purvis.
Writ of habeas corpus.

I do hereby certify that I did serve a copy of the within writ of habeas corpus on Jesse E. Dent, sheriff of Richland County, State of South Carolina, on the 27th of November, 1876, at Columbia, South Carolina, and that, in obedience to the said writ, the said Sheriff Dent on the same day did produce the above-named prisoners before Hon. Hugh L. Bond, circuit judge, who thereupon ordered the said prisoners to be delivered into my custody by the said sheriff, which was immediately done, and I now hold the said prisoners to await the further order of his honor the circuit judge.

R. M. WALLACE,
United States Marshal, District South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, November 29, 1876.

SHERIFF DENT'S RETURN.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Richland County:

I, Jesse E. Dent, sheriff of said county, do hereby certify and return to Hon. Morrison R. Waite, Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, that by virtue of a judgment an order issued out of the supreme court of the State of South Carolina, and signed by Hon. F. J. Moses, chief-justice, the said H. E. Hayne, William Stone, F. L. Cardozo, T. C. Dunn, and H. W. Purvis were by me taken into custody and confined in the jail of said county on the 25th day of November, A. D. 1876; one of which said judgments and order is in words as follows:

"It is now adjudged that the said H. E. Hayne is in contempt of this court, and it is ordered that he do pay a fine of $1,500, and that the said sheriff of Richland County do take him, the said H. E. Hayne, into custody and confine him in the common jail of said county until he be discharged by the order of this court."

And the same order was made in respect to each of the above-named persons, certified copies of which are herewith filed, and the bodies of the said Hayne, Stone, Cardozo, Dunn, and Purvis I have here, as commanded by this writ of 27th November, A. D. 1876.

J. E. DENT,
Sheriff Richland County.

REPLY TO RETURN OF J. E. DENT, SHERIFF.

Ex parte H. E. Hayne, Thomas C. Dunn, Francis L. Cardozo, William Stone, H. W. Purvis—United States Circuit Court.

Come now the said petitioners, and for reply to the return made by the said J. E. Dent, sheriff, &c., they say that they admit that the order set out in said answer was made by said supreme court, but they say that the same was made in a certain cause wherein the State ex relatione R. M. Sims and others, as citizens and candidates, were petitioners, and these petitioners were defendants, and t ey now file and make part hereof a copy of the record and proceedings had in said court and make the same a part hereof; and they say that the said supreme court had no jurisdiction or authority or jurisdiction of the subject-matter in said proceedings alleged, or over your petitioners, and that therefore the said order of said court was and is void.

And they further say that, at the time the said order set out in the said answer was made, the said petitioners had completed their labors as a board of canvassers and had adjourned and ceased to be a board, and therefore they were unable to comply with any order said court could or did make in the premises.

PETITION AND WRIT FOR HABEAS CORPUS—IN THE CIRCUIT COURT.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of South Carolina, Fourth Circuit:

Ex parte Henry E. Hayne, William Stone, Francis L. Cardozo, Thomas C. Dunn, Henry W. Purvis.

Opinion of the court.

Upon the petition of several persons styling themselves the board of State canvassers of South Carolina, which was presented to me on the first day of the regular term, I issued a writ of habeas corpus commanding the sheriff of Richland County, in whose custody they were alleged to be, to produce the bodies of the petitioners before me that I might inquire into the legality of their imprisonment.

This is a motion to dismiss the petition and remand the petitioners into the custody of the sheriff.

Section 755, title 13, of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides "the court or justice to whom application for the writ of habeas corpus is made shall forthwith award it, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto."

It is not a question, at the time of the application for the writ, whether or not the facts alleged in the petition are true or false.

They are to be verified by the oath of the petitioner, and if he sets out in his petition what is necessary to give a Federal court jurisdiction, the writ must issue, and the truth or falsity of the facts alleged must be determined at the hearing.

Whether or not, then, this writ issued properly or improperly depends upon the fact whether the petitioners have embraced in their petition what is necessary to give jurisdiction to the Federal courts.

To give such jurisdiction the party must allege that he is in custody in violation of the Constitution or of a law of the United States.

These petitioners do allege, in substance, that they were a board of State canvassers, charged with the duty, among others, of canvassing the votes recently cast at a general election, at which members of Congress and presidential electors were to be chosen.

That they proceeded to canvass the votes cast, when, on the 13th day of November, 1876, while in discharge of their functions, they were informed an application had been made to restrain them from exercising what they thought to be their powers as a board of canvassers, charged as well with a Federal as a State trust, and that in consequence of further proceedings against them, under said notice, they are now restrained of their liberty for acts done in pursuance of laws of the United States, and are in custody in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

When such a petition, including every requirement of the statute, was presented to me, there was nothing to be done but to order the writ to issue.

But it is very plain that if these parties are in custody for disobedience of an order of a State court of competent jurisdiction, there is no power in the Federal courts to release them.

It is not to the point to show that the order of commitment is erroneous. It must be absolutely void. The judgment of a State court having jurisdiction of the person or thing in controversy must be respected by every other court. It cannot be reviewed except in the way pointed out by the statute.

The first question then to be decided at this time and upon this motion is whether or not the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter before it.

Article 1, section, 26, of the constitution of South Carolina, provides: "In the government of this Commonwealth the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other."

Section 4 of article 4 of the same instrument defines the power of the supreme court thus: "The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction only in cases in chancery, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law under such regulations as the General Assembly may by law prescribe: Provided, The said court shall always have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to give it a general supervisory control over all other courts in this State."

The powers of the board of State canvassers, so far as this case is concerned, are defined by chapter 8, title 2, sections 24, 25, and 26, thus:

"SEC. 24. The board when thus formed shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct, and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe on the proper statement a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state.

"SEC. 26. Upon such statements they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been, by the greatest number of votes, duly elected to such offices, or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise, when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body."

And the objection to the jurisdiction of the supreme court made by the petitioners is that they are a part of the executive department of the government charged with the execution of a law of the State, and that they alone are authorized to canvass the votes, and that they are not subject in the exercise of their functions to the control of the judicial branch of the government.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in a very able opinion by Mr. Justice Miller, in the case of Gaines vs. Thompson, 7 Wallace 347, has very clearly determined what the law is on this subject, and that is "that if it appear that the act which the court is asked to compel the officer of the Executive Department of the Government to do be purely ministerial, the court having jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandamus may compel the executive officer to perform his duty; but, if the act required to be done by the executive officer be not merely ministerial, but discretionary, or one about which he is to exercise his judgment, a court cannot, by mandamus, act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care in the ordinary exercise of official duty; and the court further says that the interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the Executive Departments would be productive of nothing but mischief, and we are quite satisfied that such a power was never intended to be given them;" and for this Mr. Justice Miller quotes the opinion of Chief-Justice Taney, in the case of the Commissioner of Patents vs. Whitely, 4 Wallace, 522, and the law is stated to the same effect in a very celebrated case in Maryland, by Mr. Chief-Justice Bowie, Miles vs. Bradford, 22 Md. Rep., 170, a case where the powers of the governor to canvass the votes was not so broadly given as in the case at bar.

That the duty of this board of canvassers was not merely ministerial, but that they were clothed with a large discretion, it seems to me, is very plain. They were not merely to take the returns and aggregate them. They were to canvass them. That is, they were to examine, to sift, to scrutinize them, which implies a power to reject such as were not lawful in their judgment; and more, they were to decide all cases under protest or contest that might arise when the power to do so did not, by the constitution, reside in some other body.

They were the executive officers, appointed to declare the election of such persons as had, in their judgment, the majority of the legal votes cast. If they decided erroneously or falsely, the remedy of those candidates who thought themselves wronged was by quo warranto; but no court had the jurisdiction to compel the board of State canvassers to do otherwise than their own judgment dictated.

It remains now to be seen what the court was asked to do by the relators. Their suggestion sets forth "that the board is proceeding to hear and determine all matters of contest or protest before them in regard to the election of persons who were candidates at the general election, and is proceeding to certify their determination on such contests and protests to the secretary of state." And they pray that a writ of mandamus may issue commanding them to ascertain from "the managers' returns and statements, forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, the persons who, at the general election held on the said 7th day of November ultimo, had the highest number of votes; and commanding them and compelling them to revoke and annul any determination or decision which they may have made in any case of contest or protest, if any such there be."

Under the cases cited in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, 7 Wallace 347, Gaines vs. Thompson, above referred to, I am of opinion that the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had no jurisdiction to entertain any such "suggestion" or petition.

But it does not follow because a party is in custody by reason of a void judgment of a State court that a Federal judge or court has jurisdiction to release him from his imprisonment.

He must be in custody in the language of the statute for an act done or omitted, in pursuance of a law of the United States, or in custody in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and the question therefore presents itself whether the board of State canvassers, in exercising their functions in reference to the late general election in the State at which members of Congress and electors of President and Vice-President were to be chosen, were acting in any respect in pursuance of an act of Congress, or under the Constitution of the United States. That they were so acting is partly shown from the fact that Congress has undertaken by statute to punish these State officers for dereliction of duty. Section 5515 of the Revised Statutes United States provides "that every officer of an election at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress is voted for, whether such officer of election be appointed or created by or under any law or authority of the United States, or by or under any State, territorial, District, or municipal law or authority," who commits the acts forbidden by that section, shall be punished as therein provided. This was beyond the power of Congress unless these officers were acting in pursuance of a law, or under or by virtue of the Constitution of the United States.

But that these petitioners, though appointed by the State, are under the protection of the courts of the United States, is apparent from the fact that the board of State canvassers have certain powers to perform the authority for the exercise of which is derived directly from the Constitution of the United States.

Section 1, article 2, of the Constitution provides that electors shall be appointed in such manner as the Legislature of each State may direct. When the Legislature of a State, in obedience to that provision, has by law directed the manner of appointment of the electors, that law has its authority solely from the Constitution of the United States. It is a law passed in pursuance of the Constitution.

In South Carolina the Legislature has passed such a law. It has provided that electors shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the State, and the power of the State canvassers to canvass, determine, and declare the result of such election, and to hear all questions of protest and contest relative to said officers, is expressly given in the sections of the statute above quoted. Section 2, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States provides that members of Congress shall be chosen by the people of the several States, and in South Carolina the mode of choosing them has been fixed by law, and the board of State canvassers are appointed the proper officers for determining and declaring the result of such election.

An examination of the laws of South Carolina will show "that State and county officers are elected on the same day that electors of President and Vice-President and Representatives to Congress are voted for, and that they are voted for on the same general ticket, and that all ballots at the several precincts in each county are deposited in the same box, and are counted and returned by the same set of election officers, and the result of such election is certified to the board of State canvassers by the officers holding the election."

And section 5514, title 70, Revised Statutes United States, provides "that any one who is proved to have voted at such general election shall be deemed to have voted for Representatives in Congress."

The board of State canvassers is required to meet on the 10th day of November for the purpose of sifting, scrutinizing, not merely aggregating, the statements of the county boards. The validity of the entire election in a certain precinct or county depends upon a state of facts applicable to every officer, State or Federal, who has been voted for on the general ticket at that particular precinct. So far as the laws of the United States are concerned, at an election where members in Congress are to be chosen, any alleged intimidation or violence toward a voter, or other misdemeanor described in section 5511 of the Revised Statutes, would be a proper consideration for the board in determining the result; because such violations of the laws of the United States, if sufficient in degree in the judgment of the board of State canvassers, would control the result.

This is the law of South Carolina as applied concurrently with the paramount law of the land—the acts of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States.

The board of State canvassers was not at liberty in canvassing the votes to shut its eyes to the laws of Congress respecting what was a fraudulent poll. In the petition the board alleges it was necessary, in canvassing the returns for Federal officers at this general election, when both State and Federal officers were voted for on the same ticket, to canvass all the votes polled and to declare the election of State officers after such canvass as well as Federal officers, and it is manifest that to determine a general election the amount of fraud and intimidation, if there was any exercised, to control the vote for State officers, must have had some influence upon the election of Federal officers, and what the effect of it was upon such election it was for the board to determine.

The return of the sheriff shows that he holds the petitioners under an order of the supreme court, in which it is alleged they are in contempt of that court for disobedience of an order passed in a certain cause.

This cause, by the papers filed, appears to be the case of the State at the relation of R. M. Sims and others against H. E. Hayne, chairman, and others, as members of the State board of canvassers.

We have shown from the "suggestion" itself that in our judgment the court had no jurisdiction to entertain it, and though the returns show that the parties are in custody to-day solely for not obeying the mandate of the court respecting State officers, it is our duty to go behind the returns and look at the case as it presented itself to the supreme court at its inception. United States ex rel. Hendrochs vs. Harris; Ex parte Dock Brodges, 2 Circuit Court, L. I., 327; 21 Int. Rev., 214. What the relators asked the court to do in their original suggestion is perfectly plain, and we have above quoted the paragraphs of the "suggestion" which constituted the ground of complaint of the relators. In my judgment the whole matter was beyond the jurisdiction of the supreme court, and any order passed by them upon such "suggestion" is void.

A commitment for contempt is like any other judgment in a criminal case. While it gives me great concern to hear and determine a cause where parties are charged with disobedience to the orders of a State court, yet where the liberty of men is concerned who have a right to appeal under the act of Congress to the Federal courts, I am sure my brother judges of the State courts will not think me wanting in courtesy if I hear them, as I am bound by law to do, and will believe me when I say there is no one who regrets more than myself this conflict of jurisdiction.

I think this proceeding in the supreme court was beyond the jurisdiction of that court. That the State board of canvassers were clothed, under the law, with discretionary powers, which required them to discriminate the votes, to determine and certify the candidates elected after scrutiny, and that they were a part of the executive department of the government, and were in no wise subject to the control as to what they should do after they had commenced to perform that duty to the judicial department; and that as this was a general election at which members of Congress were to be elected and electors of President and Vice-President of the United States to be chosen, they were acting in a Federal capacity, or, in other words, in pursuance of a law of the United States, and therefore if any one disturbs them in the exercise of their functions they are entitled to the protection of the courts of the United States.

And while I greatly regret to differ from my brethren of the State court, I shall make an order discharging the parties from custody.

I am happy, however, to think that this controversy may be referred to a tribunal whose judgment we all respect—the Supreme Court of the United States—and I shall be displeased as little as any one to hear that in this judgment I have been in error.

In the course of the preparation of these notes I have had occasion to refer to the following authorities:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Samuel C. Busey, M. D., president of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, praying for an appropriation for the publication of a catalogue of the National Medical Library; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a memorial of the international medical congress held at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, September, 1876, praying for an appropriation for the completion and publication of the catalogue of the National Medical Library; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented resolutions of the international medical congress held at Philadelphia, in September, 1876, in favor of an appropriation for the benefit of the National Medical Library; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of Charles Reitz & Brother, Canfield & Wheeler, and 65 others, lumbermen, vessel-owners, and citizens of Manistee, Michigan, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the petition of Benjamin J. Cady, William Ready, John H. Gray, William A. Hamilton, and a considerable number of other citizens of Washington, asking the passage of "an appropriate act for the purchase by the United States of all the real estate owned as private property situated between Second street east and Second street west and B street north and B street south, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, for the purpose of enlarging the Capitol grounds as heretofore projected, thereby affording fit locations for the erection of suitable buildings for a Congressional Library, Supreme Court, and National Museum." The petitioners also "beg leave to suggest the appropriation of the $1,500,000 which are about to be refunded by the centennial commission of Philadelphia to be applied to this purchase." I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. I present the memorial of Joseph Ramsey, of Shelbyville, Bedford County, Tennessee, in reference to the mode of counting the electoral vote. While the petitioner holds no official position, he is an intelligent, patriotic citizen of that State. His patriotism I can no better illustrate than by assuring the Senate that at the vote for the secession of the State, in his district three hundred voting in favor of secession, he voted solitary and alone for the Union. I move that the memorial be referred to the select committee to devise a mode for counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 253) for the relief of Mary Thompson, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2229) for the relief of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1105) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a portion of the United States military reservation at Salt Lake City for cemetery purposes," approved May 16, 1874, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Edwards, jr., late captain third United States Artillery, praying to be restored to his former rank and position in the Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Theodore Higgins, late captain of Company D, Twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying to be allowed the pay of captain of that company from April 10, 1863, to July 4, 1863, while acting as captain thereof, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The adverse report of the committee will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3367) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Alfred Rouland, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of F. W. E. Lohman, Walter H. Ruth, and Charles M. Carter, praying compensation for secret service during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4189) authorizing the coining of the standard silver dollar and restoring its legal-tender character, to report it back without recommendation and ask that it be placed upon the Calendar. The Committee on Finance have taken the action of the Senate yesterday in extending the time for the report of the silver commission as an instruction not to act upon the bill now. As a matter of course, until that report comes in we shall not have the benefit of the information that that commission has gained, and we thought it better and more respectful to the Senate to report this bill back and let it be placed on the Calendar without recommendation, subject to the future action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish also in the same connection to give notice that when this bill is called up again I, as an individual, as a Senator, will offer as a substitute what I now send to the Chair, and which I ask to have printed, accompanying the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be printed.

KENDRICK AND AVIS ET AL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4155) amending the act of July 28, 1876, entitled "An act for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio," to report it without amendment. As the bill is very brief and is to correct an error in the law of last year for the relief of these parties, I ask for its consideration now.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends the act of July 28, 1876, entitled "An act for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio," by inserting in the third line thereof, after the words "to remit," and before the words "so much," the words "refund and pay back."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL B. STAUBER ET AL.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 767) for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others, to report it without amendment. As it is a brief bill and seems to be an equitable one, and has already passed the House, if there is no objection I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It releases certain persons named from certain taxes assessed on the brandy distilled by them in the fall of 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to request of the Senate that the bill (S. No. 1001) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Dalles military reservation, with the accompanying report, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1140) to establish certain post-roads in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

REVOLT IN TURKISH PROVINCES.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate any correspondence which has taken place with the diplomatic officers of the United States in Turkey, or any information in the possession of the Government, concerning the revolt in the Turkish provinces.

STATE GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, That the State government now existing in the State of South Carolina and represented by D. H. Chamberlain as governor is the lawful government of said State; that it is republican in form, and that every assistance necessary to sustain its proper and lawful authority in said State should be given by the United States when properly called upon for that purpose, to the end that the laws may be faithfully and promptly executed, life and property protected and defended, and all violators of law, State or national, brought to speedy punishment for their crimes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be referred.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired and it is the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have advices from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] that he is detained from the Senate to-day by sickness, and he requests that the bill may go over as unfinished business. I accede to that request and I trust the Senate will that the bill may go over as unfinished business by reason of the absence of the Senator from Georgia, who is detained at his rooms by sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not retain its place as unfinished business.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suppose it can be passed over now informally and then it can be called up before the adjournment to-day, so as to be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so disposed of, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. WITHERS. I gave notice a few days ago that I would ask the Senate to take from the table to-day the message of the President in reference to the occupancy of Petersburgh on election day by a portion of the Army of the United States. I ask that the message be now taken up.

Mr. FERRY. I should have felt disposed to press the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules were it not for the fact that the Senator from Virginia had given notice on a former day that he would to-day call up that matter. I trust after he has concluded his remarks, and all others that may speak to the same subject, the report will then be taken up by unanimous consent.

TROOPS AT PETERSBURGH ON ELECTION DAY.

Mr. WITHERS. I offer the following resolution, to be considered in connection with the message to which I have referred:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to examine whether the construction of the laws touching the elective franchise, promulgated by the Attorney-General in General Orders No. 96, of date September 7, 1876, be correct; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I now yield to my colleague, who desires to address some remarks to the Senate on the same subject.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, when it became known throughout the State of Virginia, a few days before the presidential election, that United States troops had been sent to Petersburgh, it produced a mixed feeling of anxiety and surprise—anxiety on account of what the people regarded an unwarranted and unconstitutional act, one that menaced the freedom of elections, and surprise that any pretext could be found for such a movement. We believed that nothing had occurred, or was at all likely to occur, to justify it. While violence, outrage, intimidation, murder, and every other crime that people are capable of committing had been freely imputed to our sister States of the South, and especially of the far South, we had escaped. If the Ku-Klux organization, the so-called rifle clubs, the White League, were ever charged to exist among us, we had not heard it. We had never been "investigated," and more than once, both in the House and Senate, republicans had borne testimony in our favor. Notably, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] introduced his resolutions which led to the southern outrage committee, did he make an honorable exception in favor of Virginia when his attention was called to it by myself. Here is an extract from the debate on that occasion:

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further?

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to make a regular connected statement, but I yield to my friend from Virginia if he desires me to do so now, before I have commenced to make my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to make a single statement. If I understand the resolution—I have not had an opportunity of reading it, and only heard it read—it declares that the state of things set forth in it exists in the late insurrectionary States. I presume the Senator who drew the resolution means to include the State of Virginia as one of the late insurrectionary States, and to declare by resolution that the Ku Klux Klan and organized perjury and resistance to the laws exist in that State. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator any further than to deny positively the statements of that resolution in regard to the State of Virginia and to declare that they are utterly untrue.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I stated before that I have no testimony now bearing on the case of Virginia; but I intend to give to the Senate this day a connected statement of the evidence disclosed, not only in this document, but in other proof that I shall present, to show that there is a condition of society in nearly all, and I believe, with the exception of Virginia, the evidence will go to all the lately rebellious States, that is disgraceful to American civilization, that is so startling that although I had read the newspapers from time to time, yet it startled me.

We in Virginia knew that peace and good order prevailed throughout the State; that the races lived together in harmony; that the colored people had their rights and as a body made no complaint. And knowing these things, and knowing too what had been the opinions of the republican party in regard to the State, having had our example held up as worthy and proper to be followed, we were surprised—profoundly surprised—at what we thought we had a right to regard as an attack both upon our good name and our constitutional rights. It was possible, but not at all probable, that some sufficient reason existed unknown to us for the action of the President, and we desired to know this reason if its announcement was not inconsistent with the public interest. If there was no good reason, we equally wanted to be informed as to the attitude of the Government toward us. In the brief discussion that arose when the resolution of my colleague was adopted, republican Senators who took part in the debate did not themselves seem to have ever heard of anything which required or excused the action of the President.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] proceeded upon the idea that the troops were poor, houseless wanderers, with no place upon which to lay their heads and had to stay somewhere, and that place might as well be Petersburgh as anywhere else. But the President has corrected this impression, and has shown that his object was not merely to have a company of soldiers temporarily entertained and provided for at Petersburgh for mere convenience and without any special object.

I will not notice the charge that the President sees fit to make or insinuate, that the fourth district in Virginia was the only one in that State in which "the legal and constitutional voters have been able to return as elected the candidates of their choice," further than to say that it is untrue and is a slander by the Chief Magistrate of the nation upon a part of the people over whom he presides.

The act of sending troops to Petersburgh was, under all the circumstances, most serious and grave, and I propose, in a dispassionate and non-partisan manner, to consider briefly the legal and constitutional right of the President to proceed as he did, and whether, admitting his right, he had sufficient reasons for his action, and whether he acted with the consideration and care the occasion demanded, and how far the election law was regarded by the United States officers at the late election.

In his message in reply to the resolution of the Senate, the President says:

> These inclosures [those accompanying the message] will give all the information called for by the resolution, and I confidently believe will justify the action taken.

The papers referred to are before the Senate, and I need not specially describe them. The provisions of the election law are those under which the President and his advisers find their warrant. Section 2002 of this law provides as follows, namely:

> No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

This section as well as others of the law are mere evasions of the Constitution. It is true that the power is given to Congress "to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments." But "keeping the peace at polls" is enforcing the provision of no one of them. The intention of Congress was to secure to every voter an uninterrupted right to vote. But breaches of the peace at the polls might not necessarily interfere with the right to vote of anybody. A fight between two drunken rowdies is a breach of the peace—so is a fisticuff between two negro women. Both of these things come within the letter of section 2002 if that section was construed literally; such trifling events might be made the pretext for moving the Army of the United States and attempting to control and subvert the right of the people to vote freely, instead of protecting them in the right. The mere right or power to keep the peace at the polls, in all events and without any reference to the character of the breach and the purpose for which it is committed, are not appropriate legislation to carry ont any one of the late constitutional amendments. The law should be confined to such classes of offenses as come within the purview of the Constitution, and are committed with the design of impairing the constitutional rights of some one to vote. The law, as it stands, gives the President the opportunity of saying there was a fight at the polls in Richmond or Petersburgh at the last election, and that is a reason to believe there will be again at this election. "That will be a breach of the peace. But I have the right to send troops to keep the peace at the polls; therefore I will send troops to Richmond."

Such a right as this is inconsistent with express provisions of the Constitution and incompatible with its whole spirit. I need not remind the Senate and the country how jealous the people were, when the Constitution was adopted, of military encroachment, and how anxiously they endeavored to protect the civil rights of the people from military power. The one thing that stood out more conspicuously than any other feature in the Constitution was the determination to keep the military subordinate to the civil power. In this spirit that instrument provides that Congress shall have power "to raise and support armies;" but, lest the Army might become too powerful, it was carefully added "that no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years." The power is also given "to provide and maintain a Navy;" but it was not considered necessary in this case to restrict and limit the right of Congress to make appropriations, because the Navy was not likely to be, as the Army might be, dangerous to the liberties of the people. And still further in the same spirit it was provided that "Congress might exercise exclusive legislation over all places purchased, by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings."

The fourth section of article 4 of the Constitution declares that "the United States shall protect each State against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, (or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence." And, finally, the third article provides that "no soldier shall in time of peace be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law."

Take all these provisions—their purpose, intent, and spirit—and how does section 2002 of the election law agree with them? The duty of keeping the peace in the States belongs to the State and municipal authorities. The United States cannot interfere except upon their request. The Constitution looks to concerted and united action between the General and State Governments to repel invasion and suppress domestic violence. For the mere purpose of keeping the peace, it was never intended to invoke the mighty and dangerous powers of the United States. The soldier was to repel the invasion of a foreign enemy and to prevent the overthrow of the legally constituted authorities. It is degrading him to convert him into a policeman. The Constitution contemplates the use of the Army only in concert with and in aid of the State authorities, and then when the latter are unequal to the task of repelling invasion and suppressing domestic violence. By "domestic violence" is meant resistance to the authorities or an attempt to subvert the Government. A riot or a mere mob fighting from passion, and doing nothing more, can make no case for the interference of the Army. But the election law ignores the State authorities altogether and provides for separate action on the part of the General Government, not only without but against the consent of the State; and when there no is suggestion even that the State and municipal authorities cannot keep the peace the intention of the Constitution was that the General and State Governments should act harmoniously, and not come in conflict. The Supreme Court has declared that ours is an "indestructible union of indestructible States." But if the law is correctly laid down and the power of the United States marshals properly defined in the circular of the Attorney-General of September 7, 1876, it is in the power of any United States marshal or deputy marshals to overthrow, destroy, and paralyze, any State government. He says: "In this connection I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and 'special,' have a right to summons to your assistance, in preventing and quelling disorder, every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation. There is no officer of a State whom you may not by summons embody into your own posse," &c. This description would embrace the governor of a State, the judges of its courts, and the members of its legislative bodies. A "special" deputy marshal, if the attorney-General be right, can take the governor from his office, the judge from the bench, the legislator from his hall, and thus leave an "indestructible" State without authorities to conduct it. In short, under the construction of Mr. Taft, a petty "special deputy marshal," who may not be able to read or write, can compel the governor and all officers of a State, legislative, executive, and judicial, to serve in the posse and thus overthrow a sovereign and "indestructible State."

Who may be summoned upon a posse is thus defined by an English elementary author:

> NOTE. Where the sheriff or other officer is enabled to take the power of the county, they may command and ought to have the aid and attendance of all knights, gentlemen, yeomen, husbandmen, laborers, tradesmen, servants, and apprentices, and of all other such persons, being above the age of fifteen years and that are able to travel.

The "power of the county" is for maintaining the government and executing the laws. That which is intended as one of the main supports of good order cannot be made an instrument for the destruction of the government itself. When the object is to enable the governor, the judges, and the other State officers to execute their functions without interruption, it cannot be they are themselves to be machinery by which it is to be done. But the theory of our learned Attorney-General is otherwise. He tells his marshals and deputies in printed instructions: "If you think you have occasion to summon a posse, you can take any citizen, no matter what civil office he holds. You can disregard the autonomy of a State government; put the governor, the venerable judges, and the members of the Legislature in your posse, arm them with revolvers and clubs, and make them engage in scuffle and conflict with rioters and criminals."

The Supreme Court has decided that Congress cannot tax the salary of a State judge, because the operation of a State government may be interfered with. But Mr. Taft decides that a judge may be taken out of his robes and inducted into the coat and cap of a police officer.

But let us see how and when deputy special marshals may be appointed and what are their duties and powers. The Attorney-General refers, in his letter of instruction, to sections 2021 and 2022 of the election law. Section 2021 is as follows:

Whenever an election at which representatives or delegates in Congress are to be chosen is held in any city or town of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward, the marshal for the district in which the city or town is situated shall, on the application, in writing, of at least two citizens residing in such city or town, appoint special deputy marshals, whose duty it shall be, when required thereto, to aid and assist the supervisors of election in the verification of any list of persons who may have registered or voted, to attend in each election district or voting-precinct at the times and places fixed for the registration of voters and at all times and places when and where the registration may by law be scrutinized and the names of registered voters be marked for challenge, and also to attend, at all times for holding elections, the polls in such district or precinct.

SEC. 2022. The marshal and his general deputies and such special deputies shall keep the peace and support and protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at such places of registration and at such polls, prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting thereat, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately, either at the place of registration or polling place or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits or attempts or offers to commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or who commits any offense against the laws of the United States; but no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the marshal or his general or special deputies or either of them, or of the supervisors of election or either of them; and, for the purposes of arrest or the preservation of the peace, the supervisors of election shall, in the absence of the marshal's deputies, or if required to assist such deputies, have the same duties and powers as deputy marshals; nor shall any person, on the day of such election, be arrested without process for any offense committed on the day of registration.

The city of Petersburgh does not have a population of 20,000, and therefore no "special deputy marshals" could be legally appointed there. If it was done at the late election it was a gross violation of law.

The duties of the marshals and "special deputies" are "to keep the peace and support and protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order, prevent fraudulent voting or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election," &c. Both the marshal and his deputies are United States officers, clothed with the authority of the law and vested with great powers in enforcing and executing it. They should be like other officers of the United States, impartial and honest in the discharge of their duties. They should understand and obey the law under which they act, and execute it fully, neither more nor less. They should not be partisans nor use their power to advance one side or the other, or to promote the success of either party.

There was no power in the first place to appoint the "special deputies" in Petersburgh, and they were not appointed for the purposes contemplated by the law, but to secure a republican majority. They did their duties in no respect. They were not needed to keep the peace, for there was no intention of violating it. How the "special deputies" thus illegally appointed in Petersburgh acted on the day of election I learn from good authority. There are about twenty-five hundred colored voters in that city. They were all listed and a captain assigned to each ten voters, who was responsible for the votes of his squad. To each of these captains, of whom there were about two hundred and fifty, a commission in the Grand Army of the Republic was issued. Commissions as United States deputy marshals were given to each of them, thus constituting them United States officers and giving them the authority of the Government over the ignorant and credulous negroes. On election day each captain marched his squad to the United States custom-house, where the troops were, and there a Hayes and Wheeler ticket was issued to each man. They were then sworn to vote the ticket so received, and the squad was marched to the polls under the escort and superintendence of a man wearing the badge and having the power of a United States marshal.

And this was the purpose for which special deputy marshals were appointed in Petersburgh, and this was the way in which they "kept the peace, protected the supervisors, prevented fraudulent voting," &c.

But this was not all. Instead of aiding and supporting the officers of election, as it was their duty to do, these special deputies openly defied them, and at two polling-places, twice during the day of the election, it was necessary to apply to Judge Hughes to have them ejected from the interior of the voting-places, where only by law the State conductors, judges, and the United States supervisors were allowed. In the first ward the negroes were found in solid column, two or three hundred deep, to the exclusion of the white voters, and when the judges to meet this unfairness opened two avenues of approach, and proceeded to allow the whites and blacks to vote alternately, the assistant district attorney notified the mayor that unless the column of whites were made to fall into the rear of the blacks he would disperse it by force. Rather than see this done the whites left their places and went into the rear of the blacks, and for hours none of them could get to give in their ballots. But this was still not all, for the negroes after voting, instead of leaving the way open, went back and fell into the column again in order to keep the whites away if possible. And of this trick the marshal, whose duty it was to see that all were allowed to vote, afterward openly boasted. At one ward after the voting was over the negroes to the number of several hundred formed around the voting-place and swore aloud if that poll was against them that they would murder the white men, rather than the box should be carried to the central depot. Yet neither soldier, nor marshal, nor special deputy-marshal, nor district attorney, nor district judge, appeared to prevent the execution of this threat or to keep the peace.

The President had had some experience in regard to Petersburgh that should have made him cautious this time. An alarm was raised once before, in 1874, by the same parties who pretended to be frightened at the last election. Two republican papers in this city published sensational communications or editorials to the effect that the property of the United States in Petersburgh and the lives of the United States officials were in danger from an armed mob. The President was beseeched for soldiers, and, moved by the statements made to him, ordered or was about to order troops to that city. Fortunately a citizen of Petersburgh was in this city and, hearing of what had occurred, went to see the President and asked him to suspend further action till an answer could be received from Petersburgh to a telegram. The telegram was sent as follows at once to the assistant marshal in Richmond:

WASHINGTON, June 17, 1874.

WILLIAM CALDWELL,
Assistant United States deputy marshal, Richmond, Virginia:

Did you meet with any resistance to your arrest of the Petersburgh judges of election on Thursday last and were you aware of any armed mob resisting or threatening to interfere with United States property or preventing United States officials from discharging their duty? Answer by boy.

W. E. HUNTON, JR.

The reply was as follows:

W. E. HUNTON, JR., Metropolitan Hotel:

In answer to your telegram, I have to say that I met with no resistance in arresting the Petersburgh judges of election on Thursday last. I was not aware of any armed mob threatening to interfere with United States property or to interfere with United States officials in the discharge of their duties.

W. W. CALDWELL.

This reply was shown to the President and satisfied him that he had been misled and misinformed, and he took no further action in the matter. But he does not seem to have profited by his experience, and though he had been deceived once he lent a willing ear to the same persons who had deceived him. Neither he nor the General of the Army appear to have taken any trouble to examine into the matter. All the latter seemed to consider was, whether there were any troops to spare. His letter professes to give a "complete understanding of the case," and that complete understanding consists of the statement that, a gentleman came to him from the Attorney-General, representing that there was reason to apprehend a breach of the peace in Petersburgh, Virginia, and asking a detachment of troops to be sent there. He proceeds to say, that not being able to see the Secretary of War "in person" he saw Judge Taft "in person," and then saw General Hancock "in person," and after some inquiries as to the troops available, he ordered a certain company to be sent to Petersburgh. And that is all! The President asks the General of the Army if he can spare some troops to send to Petersburgh. The General says he will look around and see about it, and does find out that there is a company of artillery without a present engagement, and so he sends it.

With the President's message are certain papers which purport to be affidavits of colored men as to what had occurred at the elections in Petersburgh in the spring. After the most diligent search it seems that only one of these men, William White, could be found, and he made oath that he had never given any such affidavit, and that moreover he was not afraid to vote and did not know anybody else who was.

The marshal in his letter says expressly that the opinion of the district attorney as to the necessity of sending troops to Petersburgh was doubtless based upon the history of elections in that city for the past two years, which have been anything but orderly. Neither he nor the attorney give any other reason. The attorney in fact says that "the election on the 7th of November in that city will be a farce as gigantic as it will be fraudulent." And he invites the Army of the United States to amuse itself by witnessing this farce.

Only at this present session the Congress of the United States received with appropriate honors the statues of two distinguished citizens of Massachusetts presented by that State. One of the chief claims to distinction and respect of one of them, Samuel Adams, is thus eloquently set forth by a member of the House:

On the day of the Boston massacre Adams intrusted no other messenger with the demand for the removal of the regiments. Yonder statue represents the great popular leader and chieftain, king of men, the genius of American liberty speaking through his lips, as he stood in the presence of the royalty of England represented by Governor Hutchinson: "If you have the power to remove one regiment you have power to remove both. It is at your peril if you refuse; night is approaching; an immediate answer is expected. Both regiments or none."

It seems from the remarks of the Senators from Indiana and Illinois, when this subject was under consideration early in the session, that they thought as the troops neither imprisoned nor killed anybody in Petersburgh, therefore there was no harm in sending them there. Those Senators apparently overlooked or disregarded all the questions of propriety, of law, and of the Constitution, and seemed to consider it as only a matter of the behavior of the troops themselves. But this is not the standard by which to measure the act. If the law and the Constitution and the facts of the case did not justify the action of the President, then he is not to be excused because brave and gallant men only behaved with the good order and good conduct that might be expected of them. If the act of the President was not in itself right, it could not be made right by the merits of the soldiers themselves.

When about to exercise the right of suffrage the minds of the people should be entirely free from any disturbing or alarming influences. They should be allowed to act calmly, carefully, and freely. But could this be done by the people of Petersburgh in the presence of an armed force, sent by a man who had used the Army as the President has done? The country had seen him supporting usurpers by the bayonet, keeping men in office who had not been elected, expelling men from the legislative halls of a State who had been duly returned, and taking possession of a State-house. And when he does send troops to any place the people naturally expect them to be used in the same lawless way. The presence of an armed force under the order of such a man who has done these things can be nothing but a menace and a dread.

As to this we may take a good lesson from our English ancestors. This Government is called a republic. Great Britain is a monarchy. We claim to be the only really free people on earth. Here, it is said, personal liberty, and respect and protection for the rights of the citizen, have reached the highest point. But here is what Blackstone says about troops at elections in England:

> And as it is essential to the very being of Parliament that elections should be absolutely free, therefore all undue influences upon the electors are illegal and strongly prohibited. For Mr. Locke ranks it among those breaches of trust in the executive magistrate which, according to his notions, amount to a dissolution of the government, "if he employs the force, treasure, and offices of the society to corrupt the representatives, or openly to pre-engage the electors, and prescribe what manner of persons shall be chosen. For, thus to regulate candidates and electors, and new-model the ways of election, what is it," says he, "but to cut up the government by the roots and poison the very fountain of public security." As soon, therefore, as the time and place of election, either in counties or boroughs, are fixed, all soldiers quartered in the place are to remove, at least one day before the election, to the distance of two miles or more; and not to return till one day after the poll is ended.—Blackstone's Commentaries, volume 1, page 177.

The law of England, passed more than a hundred years ago—in the reign of George II—is worth putting on record here. I will ask the Clerk to read chapter 30.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER XXX.

An act for regulating the quartering of soldiers during the time of the elections of members to serve in Parliament.

Whereas by the ancient common law of this land all elections ought to be free:

And whereas by an act passed in the third year of the reign of King Edward I, of famous memory, it is commanded, upon great forfeiture, that no man by force of arms, nor by malice, or menacing, shall disturb any to make free election: and forasmuch as the freedom of elections of members to serve in Parliament is of the utmost consequence to the preservation of the rights and liberties of this kingdom:

And whereas it hath been the usage and practice to cause any regiment, troop, or company, or any number of soldiers, which hath been quartered in any city, borough, town, or place where any election of members to serve in Parliament hath been appointed to be made, to remove and continue out of the same during that time of such election, except in such particular cases as are hereinafter specified: To the end therefore that the said usage and practice may be settled and established for the future,

Be it enacted by the King's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in Parliament assembled, and by authority of the same, That when and as often as any election of any peer or peers to represent the peers of Scotland in Parliament, or of any member or members to serve in Parliament, shall be appointed to be made, the secretary at war, for the time being, or, in case there shall be no secretary at war, then such person who shall officiate in the place of the secretary at war, shall and is hereby required, at some convenient time before the day appointed for such election, to issue and send forth proper orders in writing for the removal of every such regiment, troop, or company, or other number of soldiers as shall be quartered or billeted in any such city, borough, town, or place where such election shall be appointed to be made, out of every such city, borough, town, or place, one day at the least before the day appointed for such election, to the distance of two or more miles from such city, borough, town, or place, and not to make any nearer approach to such city, borough, town, or place as aforesaid, until one day at the least after the poll to be taken at such election shall be ended and the poll-books closed.

2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in case the secretary at war for the time being, or such person who shall officiate in the place of the secretary at war, shall neglect or omit to issue or send forth such orders as aforesaid according to the true intent and meaning of this act, and shall be thereof lawfully convicted upon any indictment to be preferred at the next assizes or sessions of over and terminer to be held for the county where such offense shall be committed, or on an information to be exhibited in the court of King's Bench within six months after such offense committed, such secretary at war, or person who shall officiate in the place of the secretary at war, shall for such offense be discharged from their said respective offices, and shall from thenceforth be utterly disabled and made incapable to hold any office or employment, civil or military, in His Majesty's service.

3. Provided, nevertheless, That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to the city and liberty of Westminster, or the borough of Southwark, or and in respect of the guards of His Majesty, his heirs, or successors, nor to any city, borough, town, or place where His Majesty, his heirs, or successors, or any of his royal family shall happen to be or reside at the time of any such election as aforesaid, for or in respect of such number of troops or soldiers only as shall be attendant as guards to His Majesty, his heirs, or successors, or to such other person of the royal family as is aforesaid; nor to any castle, fort, or fortified place where any garrison is usually kept, for or in respect of such number of troops or soldiers only whereof such garrison is composed.

4. Provided likewise, That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any officer or soldier who shall have a right to vote at any such election, as aforesaid, but that every such officer and soldier may freely, and without interruption, attend and give his vote at such election, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

5. Provided always, That the secretary of war, or, in case there shall be no secretary at war, then such person who shall officiate in the place of the secretary at war, shall not be liable to any forfeiture or incapacity for not sending such order, as aforesaid, upon any election to be made of a member to serve in Parliament on a vacancy of any seat there, unless notice of the making out any new writ for such election shall be given to him by the clerk of the Crown in chancery or other officer making out any new writ for such election, which notice he is hereby directed and required to give with all convenient speed after making out the said writ.—Pickering's Statutes, volume 16, pages 548-550.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the English statute preserved and enforced for more than a century and only declaratory of an immemorial usage makes it the imperative duty of the secretary of war to remove troops two or more miles from voting-places, and in case of his failure degrades him from place and disables him from holding any office, civil or military, in the service of the king. And this in a monarchy!

Our statute authorizes the sending of troops to voting-places merely to keep two citizens from fighting, and that without a suggestion even that the State and municipal authorities are not equal to the emergency. And this in a republic!

It is one of the theories of our Constitution that the three branches of the Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial, are equal and co-ordinate, and that the judiciary ought to be and is independent. But this election law has overthrown this theory and waked the people from the delusion under which they labor. Just before the late presidential election the President sent the following order to the Hon. R. W. Hughes, judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, November 4, 1876.

To Hon. R. W. HUGHES,
United States District Judge of the Eastern District of Virginia:

Whereas I have reason to believe that offenses are likely to be committed within said judicial district against the provisions of chapter 7, of the title "Crimes," of the Revised Statutes of the United States, you are, therefore, hereby requested and directed to attend at Petersburgh, Virginia, on the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th days of November current for the purposes mentioned in section 1988 of said Revised Statutes.

U. S. GRANT.

Section 1988 is as follows:

> Whenever the President has reason to believe that offenses have been or are likely to be committed against the provisions of chapter 7, of the title "Crimes," within any judicial district, it shall be lawful for him, in his discretion, to direct the judge, marshal, and district attorney of such district to attend at such place within the district, and for such time as he may designate, for the purpose of the more speedy arrest and trial of persons so charged, and it shall be the duty of every judge, or other officer, when any such requisition is received by him, to attend at the place and for the time therein designated.

The President appoints the judges, and under this section a judge may be ordered by him to go anywhere in his district that the President may indicate, whether it be a place fixed by law for holding court or not, and keep it open as long as the President may direct, and may arrest and try citizens charged with offenses under chapter 7, title "Crimes." When the order comes, the judge may be holding his regular term at the place prescribed by law; may have a jury impaneled and be engaged in the actual trial of a cause; perhaps a prisoner may be having a hearing; but the judge must adjourn his court, dismiss his jury, remand the prisoner to jail, send parties, counsel, and witnesses home, and go wherever his orders direct and stay there at the pleasure of the President. No clerk is directed to attend, so it is presumed that no record of the court's proceedings is to be made or preserved. The judge may arrest a man, try him instantly, convict and sentence him, and all this in a barn or stable if the judge chooses. If the President can order the judge to remain to hold these terms a week, he can a month; if a month, a year; and thus practically overthrow the courts, for there is no limit on the President's power as to time. And this is an independent judiciary!

But it is not only at the mercy and under the power of the President that the judges are placed. Sections 2011 and 2012 of the Revised Statutes contain these provisions.

I ask the Clerk also to read them:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 2011. Whenever, in any city or town having upward of twenty thousand inhabitants, there are two citizens thereof, or whenever, in any county or parish in any congressional district, there are ten citizens thereof, of good standing, who, prior to any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States, or prior to any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, may make known, in writing, to the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the circuit wherein such city or town, county or parish, is situated, their desire to have such registration, or such election, or both, guarded and scrutinized, the judge, within not less than ten days prior to the registration, if one there be, or, if no registration be required, within not less than ten days prior to the election, shall open the circuit court at the most convenient point in the circuit.
> SEC. 2012. The court, when so opened by the judge, shall proceed to appoint and commission, from day to day and from time to time, and under the hand of the judge, and under the seal of the court, for each election district or voting-precinct in such city or town, or for such election district or voting-precinct in the congressional district, as may have applied in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, and to revoke, change, or renew such appointment from time to time, two citizens, residents of the city or town, or of the election district or voting-precinct in the county or parish, who shall be of different political parties, and able to read and write the English language, and who shall be known and designated as supervisors of elections.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Thus, Mr. President, not only may the judges be ordered about the country at pleasure by the President, and made to hold court at any place he may designate in the district, and as long as he pleases, but in one event two citizens and in another ten citizens may require them to open and hold their courts! Instead of being the independent judge that the theory of our Constitution requires, he is at the orders not only of the President but of any two citizens who choose to issue an edict to him.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, the Congress and the people of the United States have with anxious solicitude been for weeks engaged in the consideration and discussion of the question "how shall the electoral vote be counted?" The sovereign voice of the people uttered at the polls has not, as in times past, calmed the agitated waters of political strife. On the contrary, these waves appear to mount higher and higher, and to be lashed into yet greater fury by the breath of rival disputants, as with mutual recrimination they attack and defend the fairness of the election and the fairness of the count. Grave as this question undoubtedly is, vital as it must be to the future destinies of our common country, there is another, intimately connected it is true, but still distinct from it, in my view, of yet greater importance, and which has attracted comparatively little attention, and which I propose now to discuss.

It is true that the question of the presence or absence at the polls of an insignificant city in the interior of Virginia of a small number of United States soldiers might appear at the first blush a trivial incident, of which it is trifling with the time and attention of the Senate to ask their consideration. But, sir, the true question involved in this matter is this: whether the executive department of the Government shall be permitted, in defiance of the Constitution, to use the Army of the United States to control the ballot and thus absolutely to destroy the freedom of elections. If this can be done with impunity, we are but wasting time in the consideration of matters connected with the counting of votes and the making up of returns.

When at an early period of the present session I submitted a resolution of inquiry calling upon the President to inform the Senate "whether troops of the United States were stationed at the city of Petersburgh, in the State of Virginia, on the 7th day of November, 1876, and, if so, under what authority and for what purpose," I was influenced by no captious spirit, no factious purpose of cavilling at the legitimate exercise of executive authority. As one of the representatives of a State which has ever been known in the history of our country as the determined advocate of the rights of the people and the principles of constitutional liberty, I felt it my duty, where these rights were invaded or these principles jeopardized, to maintain the one and defend the other. Not unmindful of the teachings of history or the prophetic words of warning uttered by the wise fathers of our Constitution, educated to believe that the greatest danger which threatens the perpetuity of our free institutions lurks in the legislation which provides for the maintenance of a standing army in time of peace, and remembering that no people have ever yet lost their liberties through any instrumentality other than the weapons of an organized and disciplined soldiery dominating the freedom of elections and directed and controlled by the despotic will of an ambitious commander, I plead guilty to the charge recently uttered on this floor of "sensitiveness" on this subject, and confess with no feeling of shame that the presence of the military at the polls for the purpose of influencing the popular will filled me with apprehension and alarm for the perpetuity of our free Government.

Desirous, however, of ascertaining all the facts connected with the transaction and anxious to vindicate my people from the implied censure involved in the occupancy of one of her principal cities on the day of election by the soldiery, I have sought the evidence upon which the executive action was based, that I, and the country as well, might be the better prepared to criticise and condemn or justify and approve the act. This evidence is before us, embodied in the message of the President and the papers by which it is accompanied; "evidence," to quote the language of the message, which he "confidently believes will justify the action taken." To the calm and dispassionate consideration of these official papers and of the momentous consequences involved in the recognition and sanction of the principles they embody, I invoke the attention of the Senate.

A careful consideration of the message itself will leave us at a loss whether most to admire the perspicuity of its diction, the independence with which it sets at defiance the ordinary rules of grammatical construction, the felicitous innuendo whereby it conveys an insinuation against the character and good name of the people of Virginia as gratuitous as it is slanderous, or the bold avowal of a principle which, if admitted and accepted unchallenged, will with its inevitable and unavoidable corollary, put an end to republican institutions and utterly subvert and destroy the fundamental principles of our Constitution.

Mr. President, the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States conveys all the powers which are granted to the Government of the United States under any circumstances to march their troops into the interior of any State. It is as follows:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

It will be thus seen that by the provisions of the Constitution the United States is authorized only in one single instance without qualification to occupy the territory of a State with its armed troops; that is, to repel invasion. On the application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature is not in session, it is also authorized to march its troops into the territory of any State.

Mr. President, these I say are the only two circumstances contemplated by the Constitution which justify the use of the military arm of the Government in interfering in the interior affairs of any State. Did either of these conditions exist in Virginia on the 7th of November last? I undertake to say broadly and unequivocally that they did not, and that there is not the shadow or semblance of an assertion that either condition of things described by the Constitution existed then in the State of Virginia.

This possible occupancy of any State by the military and the dangers incident to its abuse were early recognized by the fathers of the Republic, and Edmund Pendleton, the president of the Virginia convention which considered the articles submitted them by the convention which framed the Constitution, used this language in discussing this particular provision of the Constitution:

> The fourth section of the fourth article provides that Congress may, at their pleasure, on application of the State Legislature, or (in vacation) of the executive, protect each of the States against domestic violence. This is a restraint upon the General Government not to interpose. The State is in full possession of the power to use its own militia to protect itself against domestic violence, and the power in the General Government cannot be exercised or interposed without the application of the State itself.

Was any such application made? The Legislature was not in session, and of course could not make such an application. Did the governor indicate by any means or in any manner his desire that United States troops should be sent to Petersburgh on the day of the election? On the contrary, I have before me the message of the governor of Virginia embodying a firm and distinct and an indignant protest against this invasion of the State of Virginia by the troops sent there by order of President Grant. When Petersburgh was occupied by the United States Army and information of the fact was conveyed to the city of Richmond, the governor issued the following proclamation:

A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

To the people of Virginia:

Information has just been received, from authentic sources, that a detachment of the United States Army was this day quartered at Petersburgh, with orders to remain until after the elections and to be under the sole direction of Federal officials. The voting-places at Petersburgh are being surrounded with a cordon of bayonets on the eve of the elections.

It is provided by the Constitution of the United States that the Government thereof shall protect each of the States, on the application of the Legislature, (or the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

No domestic violence, no breach of the peace, no molestation of any citizen in the exercise of any right, exists, or is threatened, or apprehended, or likely to arise in this Commonwealth. Perfect peace, order, and security reign throughout all our borders. Every citizen, of whatever race, color, or condition, is protected, can be protected, and will be protected in all his personal and political rights, privileges, and immunities by all the authorities of this State.

No application by the Legislature or by the executive has been made to the President for protection against domestic or other violence.

No complaint is made, anywhere, that the rights of any citizen are assailed or threatened. Nevertheless, in the midst of profound peace, and without a constitutional requisition from any quarter, the President of the United States has stationed troops in a city of this Commonwealth, with the design, as cannot be doubted, of intimidating the people and controlling the pending elections for partisan purposes.

And whereas so flagrant a usurpation of ungranted authority endangers the liberties of the people and the integrity of the Government, imperils the freedom of the elective franchise, and is well calculated, as it is doubtless designed, to incite and foment the domestic violence which is falsely pretended to be threatened:

Now therefore, I, James L. Kemper, governor of Virginia, solemnly protesting before the States of the Union, and in the name of the Constitution, against this despotic invasion of our guaranteed rights, do call upon the good people of this Commonwealth, and I command the authorities and officers thereof, to keep the peace at any cost, and to persevere in abstaining from every act and manifestation which might be made a pretext for the employment of armed force in our midst. And I enjoin upon all such moderation and self-denying forbearance, such patience and composure, as will prevent the possibility of any disturbance of the public order.

Done at Richmond, this 4th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1876, and in the one hundred and first year of the Commonwealth.

JAMES L. KEMPER.

By the Governor:
JAMES McDONALD,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

There we see, Mr. President, that the governor of Virginia, so far from authorizing or inviting the presence of troops, uttered his indignant protest in a proclamation to the people, embodying it in language that will live through all time as a manly vindication of the rights of the State and protest against this usurpation of power in the hands of the Executive of the United States. And this is the same James L. Kemper, the same governor of Virginia whom the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] quoted as having incurred the reprobation and indignation of the people of the city of Petersburgh by having vetoed an unconstitutional charter, as he alleged, to the extent that they burned him in effigy. Sir, he is a man who is never afraid nor ashamed to discharge all the duties and responsibilities officially devolving upon him, whether he thereby offend friends or enemies.

But, sir, the denial of the right of the Government to employ the military in the interior of any State is not restricted alone of the governor of Virginia. The President of the United States himself has given utterance to a sentiment identical in spirit, and which, if adhered to, would forever have prevented his sanction of the outrage perpetrated in Virginia. In his special message of January 13, 1875, occurs this paragraph:

> Any military interference by officers or troops of the United States with the organization of a State Legislature or any of its proceedings, or with any civil department of the Government, is repugnant to our ideas of government. I can conceive of no case, not involving rebellion or insurrection, where such interference by authority of the General Government ought to be permitted or can be justified.

What change has come over the spirit of our President's dream since he gave utterance to those manly and patriotic and law-abiding sentiments, it is not for me to say; certainly some new light must have been shed upon the question, which has prompted him to depart so far from the line of conduct which he there laid down, and to commit acts which he himself had denounced as being such as ought not to be permitted and cannot be justified.

But, sir, I am not unaware of the fact that the peculiar events which have transpired in this country for the last few years have brought about a condition of things that has culminated in the enactment of laws which extend indefinitely and very largely the restrictions which were thrown around this matter of military occupancy. I am not unaware of the fact that to these two causes, which justify the armed intervention of the Government in the affairs of a State the legislation of Congress has added a third, to wit, "the keeping of the peace." After the elaborate and exhaustive examination of that question to which my colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] has just given utterance, it is unnecessary and improper for me to repeat the arguments which he adduced to show how fallacious is the idea and how preposterous and absurd the proposition that, in order to prevent a breach of the peace, in the legal acceptation of the term, soldiers of the Army and Navy of the United States can be invoked to perform those duties which in every State and in every community devolve upon its municipal police.

Perfect candor compels me to admit that I can to some extent realize the influences which surrounded the minds of Senators and Representatives when they gave such a broad latitude to the employment of the military in elections, when I remember the arguments and appeals that were made to them, the prejudices which were aroused by the assertion that the recently enfranchised blacks of the South would, unless this protection were afforded them, be denied the free exercise of the right of suffrage, and that this highest duty of a citizen could only be guaranteed to them by the presence of the armed forces of the United States Government. But, sir, while I know, and while all representatives from my section of the country know, how groundless were these assertions in the main, (certainly they were so with regard to my own State,) I am still not disposed to criticise with too great harshness the precipitate action which induced the Congress of the United States to embody this legislation in such form that, if it remains on the statute-book, this and other circumstances which have transpired under its ostensible authority should teach us is fraught with the most momentous ills that can accrue to the body-politic.

But, sir, to these three causes which authorize the employment of military at times of elections in the States, it has remained for this message of the President of the United States and the accompanying documents to add a fourth hitherto unrecognized and unknown in this country, never intimated by any one, extending indefinitely and without any qualification or restriction this right of employing troops; because we learn from the official documents embodied in this message that the troops in this instance were furnished upon—what? "A message from a gentleman in the Attorney-General's Office." This unknown and anonymous gentleman in the Attorney-General's Office, who seems to wield such immense power, is unrecognized by any one; and yet upon his simple ipse dixit the rights of the State of Virginia have been violated and with them the rights of all the other States of this Union; and the civil has been subordinated utterly and entirely to the military authority. The President of the United States justified this action. It is for the people of this country to decide whether this loose interpretation of law and its loose administration in matters involving their vital interests is for their welfare or their safety.

Mr. President, I do not propose in the remarks which I intend to submit, to criticise with any degree of harshness beyond what the facts would justify the action of the Chief Executive of this nation. I find upon an examination of this document that General Grant's action is predicated and sustained and defended by the opinion of his constitutional adviser, and to that extent I hold that he is not altogether responsible for the action which has been taken or the outrage which has been perpetrated. The Attorney-General of the United States is his constitutional adviser in matters of law, and it is not remarkable that the President of the United States, with a military education, all unused to civil law and unacquainted with its provisions and its limitations, should have applied to this officer for advice under the circumstances; and the Attorney-General's opinion and his circular of instructions issued to the deputy United States marshals accompany the executive message upon which I have been commenting.

It is not too much, I think, to assert that if the construction placed by Mr. Taft upon the statutes of the United States be a correct and proper one, it is now in the power and ever hereafter will be in the power of the Chief Executive of this nation at any time when in his pleasure he may think it necessary, or when the interest of his party may demand it, to absolutely destroy the freedom of election at any and every point throughout these United States, for I assert that there is not a town or city of this Union containing ten thousand inhabitants that does not witness annually greater scenes of disorder, greater breaches of the peace than that alleged to have been perpetrated in the municipal election in Petersburgh last spring and upon which this whole action of the President and the Attorney-General is predicated. If that construction be true, the petty office of a deputy United States marshal is invested with greater power and prerogatives, and he can wield more absolute authority than the President himself can exercise; because under the provisions of this opinion there is no civilian throughout the land, from the governor down to the lowest member of society, that cannot be summoned imperatively to obey the orders of this deputy marshal, and all are placed utterly and entirely under his control. Nay, sir, it goes further than that; it goes on to specify that the Army and Navy and marine force of the United States occupy no better ground than a civilian in this matter; and we have the strange spectacle therefore presented of the Army itself, from its highest official, the General in command, through all its ramifications of grade and rank, placed utterly and absolutely under the control and at the disposition of a deputy United States marshal—the office being filled, as it was in the case under consideration, not by men of intelligence and standing and moral worth in the community, but largely by ignorant colored people, too ignorant even to write their own names. And yet each of these colored deputy United States marshals in the city of Petersburgh, under this construction of the Attorney-General of the United States, was the superior of General Sherman or any one else in the exercise of power on the day of election! It is a subject well worth inquiry; it is a subject that demands the careful and most assiduous investigation to know whether this unwonted, this unwarranted, this preposterous stretch of power is authorized by the legislation of Congress.

Not to inform the Senate, nor to repeat merely what my colleague has already quoted, but to show that I have not spoken without authority, I beg leave to quote a passage or two from this General Order No. 96, issued by the Attorney-General as instructions to the marshals:

> In this connection, I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and "special," have a right to summon to your assistance, in preventing and quelling disorder, "every person in the district above fifteen years of age whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, marines, all of whom are alike bound to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies, [whether of the State or of the United States,] under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus."

And the next clause:

> I need hardly add that there can be no State law or State official in this country who has jurisdiction to oppose you in discharging your official duties under the laws of the United States. If such interference shall take place, (a thing not anticipated,) you are to disregard it entirely.

It seems, therefore, that these deputy marshals are armed with plenary powers. From their orders there is no appeal. Every citizen in the whole community, the justices of the supreme court, of all the inferior courts, the governors, the executive officers, the militia, the Army, the Navy, and the marines of the United States, each, one and all, are compelled to obey the orders of these deputy United States marshals.

The President of the United States in his message seems to make a point that the troops which were sent to Petersburgh were not present at the polls, that they were not designed to be near the polls, and consequently could not have controlled the election; and yet by reference to the letter of the Attorney-General directed to the Secretary of War, found on page 7 of the document from which I read, we find that the troops were sent there designed and intended and required to be present at the polls.

> DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
> Washington, December 9, 1876.
> SIR: Replying to your letter of the 7th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of all papers on file in this Department containing information showing the necessity for troops to be sent to Petersburgh, Virginia, to be present near the polls of that city on November 7, 1876. I also inclose newspapers containing articles in reference to this subject.
>
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
>
> ALPHONSO TAFT,
> Attorney-General.
> Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
> Secretary of War.

Thus it will be seen that the President and the Attorney-General admit that the troops were sent to Petersburgh for the purpose of being present at the polls. After the thoroughly exhaustive quotations from the English law on the subject given by my colleague, I shall curtail that portion of my speech in which I designed to contrast the spirit of the English law with that which pervades our own, and to show that while in that monarchical government the provisions of the law were imperative, requiring the commandant of any troops that might be quartered in a city where an election was to be held to remove them at least two miles beyond its limits, in the free Republic of America these troops are required to be moved from other places to the polling-place in order that they may control and influence the voters.

Now, Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate by any lengthened discussion of the particular details of the case under consideration further than to justify and defend the people of the city of Petersburgh from the allegations contained in this document which has been sent us from the Executive. I assert that so far from any circumstances existing in the city of Petersburgh either at the time the troops were sent or at any antecedent time to justify the opinion that the municipal authorities were not fully competent to preserve the peace and vindicate the majesty of the law, precisely the contrary was the case, and that the allegation and the affidavits embodied in this document, upon which the action of the President was predicated, furnished no justification whatever for the act of which we complain. These consist briefly of what? First, of the letter of Mr. L. L. Lewis, the United States district attorney for the eastern section of the State. Mr. Lewis testifies in his application, which seems to have been the initiative in this movement:

I am, from my knowledge of the character of that and other elections held in Petersburgh—

Speaking of the last State election—

prepared to say that, unless the marshal is furnished with a better and more reliable posse than he will be able to summon to his aid from residents of the city, the election on the 7th of November in that city will be a farce as gigantic as it will be fraudulent. I am not now prepared to express the opinion that the presence of troops to act as the marshal's posse will be essential to the preservation of order, and to insure a fair election at other points in the eastern district of Virginia, but of the necessity of their presence to prevent bloodshed and secure a fair election in Petersburgh I think there cannot be a shadow of doubt.

That is very explicit; and but for the fact that the deponent, Mr. Lewis, had had no opportunity whatever of knowing whereof he spoke, we might attach some importance and give some heed to it. But when we recognize the fact, which I understand cannot admit of question or doubt, that Mr. Lewis was not within the fourth congressional district of Virginia during the whole canvass from first to last, I submit to the Senate whether his testimony with regard to the condition of the people of that city and the sentiment of the people of that district is to be received as implicitly and entirely true. His letter of September 16, containing the phrase which I have quoted, and a subsequent letter of October 10, which is also published, addressed "Dear Doctor"—I presume Dr. Jorgenson, who was candidate for Congress in that district—pledging himself to come to Washington and asserting that it would be criminal in his judgment to fail to send troops to Petersburgh, I leave with the comment I have made, that he was absent from that city during the the whole of the canvass, knew nothing of the condition or sentiments of the people of that city, and therefore knew nothing of the facts to which he was testifying.

But Mr. C. P. Ramsdell seems to have been the active agent in securing the presence of troops in the city of Petersburgh. Mr. Ramsdell is the United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia. In 1874 an effort was made by a Federal official in the city of Petersburgh to secure the presence of troops in that city at that election; and the Attorney-General at that time, Mr. Williams, wrote to Mr. Ramsdell, who held the same office then as now of United States marshal, stating that troops would be furnished if there was anything in the condition of affairs there that rendered it necessary, in his opinion, either to protect the property of the United States or the United States officials in the discharge of their duty or to preserve the peace; and this same Mr. C. P. Ramsdell made no application for troops, and, consequently, no troops were sent; and yet he now bases his application for troops upon the condition of the district as existing at that very time, when by his own action he admitted that there was no disorder or violence, threatened or contemplated, to justify their employment. But the difference in the circumstances of the case are these: At that time Mr. C. P. Ramsdell was merely the United States marshal for that district; he was attending to the legitimate discharge of the functions of his official position. In the recent contest Mr. C. P. Ramsdell also held the office of chariman of the State republican executive committee; and it was in the latter character that political interests demanded and required of him such active interference as would secure the control of the vote of the city of Petersburgh. An examination of the documents which lie before me shows a remarkable unanimity of sentiment in one respect between the United States marshal and the President of the United States. The marshal declares that "troops can do no harm to well-disposed citizens, and in the light of experience I am of opinion that they will be needed." The President of the United States says, "It is well understood that the presence of the United States troops at polling-places never prevented the free exercise of the franchise by any citizen, of whatever political faith."

Now, sir, are we to admit in all their length and breadth, as the basis of executive action, the allegations contained in these two sentences, that troops can do no harm to well-disposed citizens and that the presence of the military never interfered with the free exercise of the right of suffrage? If such be the case I undertake to say upon the floor of the Senate, if that principle be recognized and acted on by future executives, a few years only will have elapsed before we shall find the last vestiges of constitutional liberty prostrate at the feet of executive power, and a despotic Government substituted for this free Republic.

But to return to this report of Mr. Ramsdell. I find in a letter of the 31st of October this paragraph:

I am this moment in receipt of information from Portsmouth, Virginia, as follows:

Last night a meeting at which Mr. Segar, candidate for Congress in that district on the republican ticket, and Mr. Ball, of Alexandria, attempted to speak was broken up, and on their going out a regular assault was made on them by the democratic roughs, and Mr. Dezendorf, who attempted to speak in the hall, was beaten, and burned by the powder of a pistol discharged at his head.

Now, Portsmouth is not in the fourth congressional district. Portsmouth is the only place where the official communications of this United States marshal mention that any act of violence was committed during the whole canvass, and yet no application was made for troops for Portsmouth, nor were any ordered there. But if we look further at this letter we find that this is not the official report of a United States officer to his superior making known the condition of a district of country which was under his charge, but it is simply the report of a subordinate political official made to his political superior, conveying political information and designed to promote the political interest of his party, because he goes on to say:

I have appointed deputy marshals in Portsmouth, Norfolk, and in some of the counties of that district. I spoke in Portsmouth about four weeks ago at an open-air meeting. There was some disturbance, but not serious.

I have made a thorough canvass of the fourth or Petersburgh congressional district, traveling between two hundred and three hundred miles and speaking at the court-house in each of the eleven counties. Deputy marshals have been appointed in each county and every possible precaution made to preserve the peace and secure the citizens in their rights under the Constitution; but I am prepared to witness and hear of violence in this part of the South. The truth is this:

The white people are generally opposed to colored suffrage, and regard any means justifiable to render that vote nugatory.

I see here that this United States marshal, in an official report of his duties to a United States officer, conveys the information that he has canvassed the whole eleven counties of his district and traveled several hundred miles, and yet there is not one word mentioned in it nor an intimation given that with all this enlarged experience of the condition of the fourth district of Virginia there is anything that has occurred within the limits of that district to justify the slightest anticipation of violence or breach of the peace. I do not assume too much when I assert that if such a case had come to his knowledge it would certainly and assuredly have been reported and embodied in this document, and the fact that no such assertion is made, that no such intimation is given, I assume to be equivalent to an admission on his part that perfect peace and order were observed throughout that whole district; and I have other evidence to show the same thing. I have the authority of the mayor of the city of Petersburgh; I have the authority of the candidates who canvassed the district, that no act of violence, no breach of the peace, no personal intimidation or violence to any person can be pointed to as having occurred within the limits of that district during the whole of the canvass; and I take it that the statements of these gentlemen will not be denied.

Appended to these letters of Mr. Ramsdell and Mr. Lewis we find a certain number of affidavits, testifying in the main to violent scenes which are said to have occurred at the municipal election there in May last. Marble, the principal witness, is a custom-house official, whose character, I understand, is not of the best, though I know nothing of him personally, and consequently do not wish to impugn it. The others are, I believe, without exception colored people. I do not impute to these colored people any desire or design of falsifying any facts; but I do assert that, owing to their ignorance and their credulity, they are entirely at the mercy of any person in whom they have confidence who can procure their signatures to any statement they may think proper to make. Therefore the affidavits of this class of persons are always to be received with many grains of allowance. I have a striking evidence of the fact in the case before me, because I find here that one of the strongest affidavits embodied in this report purports to be signed by one William White, a blacksmith, who lived near the scene of the reputed act of violence, and yet this very man has furnished this affidavit:

This is to certify that I, William White, blacksmith in fifth ward, did not authorize any one to sign my name to the affidavit published in the Washington Republican, nor did I sign it myself, and hope the citizens will not regard it.

his
WILLIAM + WHITE.

Witness:
E. M. WILLIAMSON.
JAMES C. BAIN.

This 6th day of November, 1876, personally appeared before me William White, blacksmith in fifth ward of Petersburgh, and made oath to the truth and correctness of the above certificate, witnessed by E. M. Williamson and J. C. Bain, and swore to the answers to the following questions:

Question. Are you afraid to vote the republican ticket on the 7th of November?
Answer. No.
Q. Do you know of any one who is afraid to vote it?
A. No.
Q. Do you think it necessary for any military force to be here for the protection of any citizens in their rights to vote?
A. No.

J. R. QUARLES,
Justice of the Peace.

And it is upon the testimony of this man in part that this action is predicated. I ask also in this same connection, to rebut the statements embodied in these affidavits, and the assertions made by Mr. C. P. Ramsdell and Mr. Lewis, to read the affidavit of the mayor of the city, Mr. W. F. C. Gregory, who was mayor of the city at the time this alleged act of violence occurred, to wit, in 1876. It is as follows:

I, W. F. C. Gregory, do hereby certify that on the afternoon of the 25th day of May, 1876, while seated in the mayor's office attending to official business, Dr. Jorgenson came in and in an excited manner stated that a serious fight was going on at the election precinct in fifth ward. The captain of police being in my office, I directed him to go at once and attend to the matter. Thinking it however best I entered a carriage and went in person directly to the place, and found no fighting there; but from testimony heard by me as mayor it appeared that there had been a fight such as occurs in many cities on like occasions.

I. Nathan Stoner was brought before me, as mayor, charged with shooting Edward Edwards; several witnesses were examined, among them A. W. Archer, a justice of the city, who was present at the time of the fight, who put an end to it by commanding the peace. It was in evidence that a pistol was fired by an unknown party, but that the prisoner could not have shot Edwards from the position which he occupied. The physician who examined the wound could not say whether the wound was caused by a pistol-shot or with a brick or some such thing. Stoner was discharged. I have been informed that Edwards soon recovered and is now well.

I regarded the whole affair as the result of free use of whisky on the election day, and not a premeditated affair.

Given under my hand this 19th day of December, 1876.

W. F. C. GREGORY.

STATE OF VIRGINIA,
City of Petersburgh, to wit:

This day personally appeared before me, John M. Pleasants, a justice in and for the said city, W. F. C. Gregory, who made oath that the foregoing statement is true.

Given under my hand this 19th day of December, 1876.

JOHN M. PLEASANTS,
Justice of the Peace.

Such is the evidence of the mayor of the city, who gives a clear, succinct, and, I will guarantee, from my personal knowledge of the man, a true account of the whole occurrence, which appears to have been nothing but a little collision produced by bad whisky on the close of a municipal election.

Certain newspaper articles are filed also and made a part of this record. Their general scope and tenor, I admit, are inflammatory and violent on both sides, whether the republican newspaper or the conservative newspaper, but the threats of violence which the latter embody are predicated in every single instance upon an assumed and hypothetical condition of things, namely, that in the event of the occurrence of a certain contingency, to wit, the provoking a riot by the carpet-baggers who control the negroes, then these carpet-baggers would be held to a strict accountability for any loss of life or property that might occur in the city of Petersburgh. I had expected, from what was said by the Senator from Indiana on the day the resolution calling for the information was brought up and considered and adopted, that evidence would have been adduced here to show the facts as connected with an asserted riot in 1874; but for some reason, doubtless a good one, there was nothing said about that riot or the circumstances which precipitated it upon the people; but I will state here that that was a difficulty and a collision far exceeding in its dimensions any which are alluded to in the case under consideration. There it was that under the administration of a republican mayor a mob of colored people paraded the streets of Petersburgh for hours, stoning the houses of white people and committing other acts of violence, assaulting and stoning them until, in accordance with that principle of self-preservation which the law itself recognizes as right under certain circumstances, the people of Petersburgh, despairing of securing relief from their authorities, took the law into their hands and by the strong hand, suppressed this violence. But there is nothing said about that in this report.

I wish here to state that in what I have said I have uttered no word of apology and certainly none of approval for the intemperate character of the newspaper articles which are copied in this document. The Virginia Citizen was an ephemeral campaign paper, owned, it was alleged, by Dr. Jorgenson, the republican candidate for Congress in the district, and edited by one Van Auken, who formerly held office in the custom-house there and who is now a defaulter to the Government. Of course the utterances of a paper thus controlled and thus edited must be received with many grains of allowance.

But now, Mr. President, I should not have performed my duty in the premises without stating the "true inwardness" of this whole Petersburgh matter. In the Petersburgh district, which is largely controlled by the colored voters, there has been for some years a growing hostility on the part of the native colored people of that district against the carpet-bag element which has hitherto controlled it and enjoyed all the offices, and they have more and more frequently and determinedly evinced their disposition and purpose to resist the control of the carpet-baggers who had hitherto fattened upon the offices which they had given them by their vote. Consequently, prior to the last presidential election a convention of colored people in that district was held and one De Mortie, a highly respectable colored man, was nominated as their candidate for Congress. The custom-house "ring" and other Government officers held a convention and nominated one Dr. Jorgenson, the present postmaster at Petersburgh, who has been in the enjoyment of office all the time since he has been within the confines of the State. The antagonism between these two elements became very strong. Hinton was nominated by the democrats and conservatives of the district as their candidate for Congress, under the impression and belief that notwithstanding the immense republican majority in that district the division of the votes between the carpet-bagger and the colored man would give him a fair chance of being elected. The canvass progressed. Larger and larger numbers of the colored people avowed their purpose of supporting the man of their own color, De Mortie, and a great many of them became members of the democratic club and said they were tired of this trouble and preferred acting with their own white people, and avowed their purpose of supporting Hinton. The canvass went on with this condition of things up to within a few days of the time of election. I will state here that I made myself a partial canvass of that district during the presidential contest, and I know whereof I speak. I myself met, and talked with, many colored people who avowed their purpose of voting the democratic ticket, and I met many others, a much larger number, who avowed their purpose of supporting De Mortie, the man of their own color, who was the man of their choice. But these carpet-bag officials and custom-house officers, finding as the day of election approached that the result would be prejudicial to their candidate, hit upon this device: they went through the country everywhere asserting that it was the desire of President Grant and the Administration that the colored people of that district should vote for Jorgenson and not for De Mortie, and that soldiers would be sent there to compel them thus to vote. Hence it was that this anxiety was displayed by the leaders of the republican party in Petersburgh and by Mr. C. P. Ramsdell, the United States marshal, and chairman of the State committee, to get United States troops there on the day of the election in order that they might control the colored vote and secure it for the candidate of their choice. That is the whole of it.

It is not too much to assert that the presence of the military in Petersburgh, though "quartered in the custom-house," as General Grant says, "at a considerable distance from any polling-place," did materially affect the result of the election in that district. The colored people, finding that these soldiers were there, naturally considered it as proof of the correctness of the statements which had been made to them by Jorgenson and his friends; and unless the statements which come to me are untrue, but which I am promised shall be verified during the progress of a contested election before the other House, letters purporting to come from General Grant himself were read to the negroes directing and ordering that they should cast their votes for Jorgenson. The consequence was that the whole colored vote was concentrated for him, and De Mortie, who expected to carry some two or three thousand votes in the district, was left with two or three hundred only. This change was effected, the whole of it, within two or three days preceding the election and by the presence of the military. Many white persons were deterred from going to the polls. Men who were timid, men who were afraid of trouble and violence, seeing United States soldiers there and recognizing that the only pretext upon which their presence was justified was the expectation of a collision between the two races, remained away. All who were timid and disinclined to become participants in such a difficulty as was very likely to arise remained away from the polls, and consequently their votes were lost to the conservative candidate. I have a letter here from the mayor of the city corroborating the statements which I have made, and which I have in fact embodied from his letter.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say with regard to the details of the particular case under consideration, but I wish to ask of the Senate a brief consideration of the dangers which underlie the practice of employing the military at elections in order that they may control them. The founders of our Government, as I asserted in the beginning, clearly recognized those dangers. In the discussions which preceded the adoption of the Federal Constitution, not only in the convention itself which framed that instrument but when the old States were called upon to consider it in convention for adoption, they one and all recognized through their leading men the fact that dangers to our free institutions lurked in this military organization. George Mason, whose authority on questions of constitutional law is second to that of no man who ever lived, gave utterance to this sentiment:

> The liberty of the people—
> Said he—
> has been destroyed only by those who are military commanders.

You may cast your eye back along all the ages which have preceded us of which we have any record in history, and in the light of this examination I assert that this statement of George Mason stands to-day as an axiom in politics, that there is no instance on record where the liberties of a people ever have been destroyed by any other than a military commander. Another one of the fathers in Virginia utters this sentiment in the Virginia conventions which was called to consider the Federal Constitution:

> Governments ought not to depend on armies for their support, but ought to be so formed as to have the confidence, respect, and affection of the people. Some degree of virtue must exist or freedom cannot live. * * *
> In a country extensive as ours the power of the sword is more sensibly felt than in small communities. * * *
> The tyrant of a single town or a small district would soon discover that one hundred armed soldiers were a weak defense against ten thousand peasants or citizens, but ten thousand well-disciplined soldiers will command with despotic sway millions of subjects, and will strike terror into the most numerous populace.

These words are just as true to-day as they were when uttered in the constitutional convention in 1788. The danger which Mr. Dawson so hypothetically states in the paragraph which I have quoted from his speech is, so far as human reason can judge, now rapidly becoming a reality. It is no true statesmanship which intrusts dangerous powers in the hands of its Chief Executive with no safeguard to protect the people from its unlawful exercise except the virtue and patriotism of the incumbent. On this point I quote the utterance of a man whose name will live while history has an existence as the greatest champion of civil liberty that this country has ever known. I quote from a speech made by Patrick Henry in the Virginia convention in 1788:

> It is on a supposition that your American governors shall be honest that all the good qualities of this government are founded; but its defective and imperfect construction puts it in their power to perpetrate the worst of mischiefs, should they be bad men; and, sir, would not all the world, from the eastern to the western hemisphere, blame our distracted folly in resting our rights upon the contingency of our rulers being good or bad? Show me that age and country where the rights and liberties of the people were placed on the sole chance of their rulers being good men, without a consequent loss of liberty! I say that the loss of that dearest privilege has ever followed, with absolute certainty, every such mad attempt.
> If your American chief be a man of ambition and abilities, how easy is it for him to render himself absolute! The army is in his hands, and if he be a man of address, it will be attached to him, and it will be the subject of long meditation with him to seize the first auspicious moment to accomplish his design; and, sir, will the American spirit solely relieve you when this happens? I would rather infinitely—and I am sure most of this convention are of the same opinion—have a king, lords and commons than a government so replete with such insupportable evils. If we make a king we may prescribe the rules by which he shall rule his people and interpose such checks as shall prevent him from intringing them; but the President, in the field, at the head of his army, can prescribe the terms on which he shall reign master, so far that it will puzzle any American ever to get his neck from under the galling yoke.—3 Elliot's Debates, page 59.

Mr. President, have the conditions thus graphically portrayed by this great orator been reached in our country? It is a grave and pregnant question, and one that demands the careful consideration of all who revere our Government and are desirous of preserving the liberties of the people. It is no discredit to the present head of the executive department; in what I shall say in this connection I am actuated by no spirit of hostility toward him personally; I will merely mention what are known to be historic facts, that the present head of our Government, by his education, by his past experience, by his habits of thought, knows little or nothing of the restraints of civil or constitutional law. Having been accustomed to rule by the strong hand of military despotism, it is not to be expected that he can unlearn all the lessons of his youth and divest himself of those convictions which have grown up with his growth and strengthened with his strength. Of his character in this regard the following has been said:

He knows little of our form of government. By a military education and military genius he represents the idea of force. Nor is he any exception to the rule of his profession, which appreciates only slightly a government that is not arbitrary.

Such are the utterances, not of a democratic statesman, not of a southern fire-eater; but they are the utterances of that republican statesman who to-day stands higher in public estimation than any other man of his party whose voice has ever rung through these halls; they are the utterances of Senator Sumner, of Massachusetts. They are his estimate of the character of the present incumbent of our executive chair. Sir, is there nothing in the past experience of this country, is there nothing in the actions which have been performed by General Grant since he has been President, to justify the character which has thus been given him by Senator Sumner, and which his education and past associations would entitle us to expect him to exhibit? When the chief executive officer of this nation forgets that he was elected and sworn to discharge the duties of a President of the United States and hesitates and blushes not to avow himself the President of a party; when we have seen him time and again invoke the aid of the military to crush out the very muniments of liberty in the States, and to take possession of one, and another, and another of the State governments by armed military interference, I say it is not too much to assert that the period described by Patrick Henry has arrived in the history of this country and that we ought to look well to the conditions by which we are surrounded, in order that we may guard against the dangers which so imminently threaten us.

True, the President of the United States attempts to make light of the inquiry which I had the honor to institute with regard to the occupancy of Petersburgh by ironically referring of the small number of soldiers who constituted the detachment that was sent to that city. Twenty-four soldiers, with a captain and a lieutenant, he thinks, should scarcely so threaten the liberties of the people of Petersburgh or of the State of Virginia as to render it a proper subject of apprehension. It is not the number of the soldiers who were present, but it is the fact that they represent the whole strength and majesty and might of the Government of the United States that makes them formidable. Ah, sir, in the history of nations there are not wanting instances where the presence of military as few in numbers as those that perpetrated this outrage in the city of Petersburgh have subverted utterly the foundations of government and established a despotism upon the ruins of a republic. History records the period when, at the head of the paltry number of thirty armed soldiery, Cromwell stalked into the British Parliament, and drove from their seats the members of that body and all its officers, seized the reins of government, and became at once dictator and emperor in truth, if not in name, of the great English nation; and yet but thirty soldiers were present when this consummation was effected. I tell you, Mr. President, with a grave conviction of the perils which now surround our Government, it is a time which should make us all pause and reflect upon the dangers with which we find ourselves confronted. It is a question which is totally distinct and separate from all political connections and affiliations. It rises above and beyond them. All who love republican liberty, whether they belong to the so-called republican or democratic party, are interested now in throwing every possible protection around the liberties of the people and the constitutional government which our fathers gave us; for they are in danger, in imminent danger, of being destroyed. Not only has the Army of the United States been used to subvert State governments, but we are now confronted with the fact that that Army is itself concentrating around this Capitol and that Senators and Representatives here are to legislate under the shadows of the bayonets of the United States Army controlled by the Chief Executive. As I said before, there is nothing in his character, in his education, or in his antecedents, if opportunity serves and he believes himself that he could be sustained by the Army, that will prevent his taking the last step and sending the Republic of America to join the long list of republics that have lived and passed away. When we look at the history of all other republics, we find that certain steps have been invariably taken indicating their decline and their final destruction. What are they? Corruption first, fraud next, violence last. He would be a bold man who would rise in his place in this Senate and assert that the first steps have not been taken in this country. He would be a bold man who would assert that corruption has not stalked forth in the midday with unblushing effrontery, challenging our admiration if not our respect. He would be a bold man who would rise in his place on this floor and assert that frauds in elections have not been perpetrated time and again, constantly increasing in boldness, in extent, and in magnitude with each successive election. And, sir, if these two first steps have thus been taken, who can say that the third will not follow in their train? We must recollect that the present incumbent of the executive chair is a man who has been elevated to the high position which he now occupies, if not by the strong arm of military power in the first place, by his services to the country in his position as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and that to his military service is he indebted for the high position and honors which he now enjoys. That he is ambitious beyond any President who has ever preceded him in that chair, I presume his warmest friends will not deny; and it is for you to say whether, with a President of this character and with these antecedents, whose course in the past has been such as to indicate that his trust and reliance is mainly on the military arm to carry out and compass and accomplish his wishes, when the time comes and the opportunity is considered to be favorable, the last step will not be taken.

For myself and for my people I can say this: that we are as truly and earnestly devoted to the principles of constitutional liberty as we ever were. That Southern Senators have remained quiet and passive spectators of all the heated debates which have hitherto occurred here, is true; but that proceeds not from indifference. We considered that it would be perhaps prejudicial to the cause of liberty if we were to raise our voices in this Hall, certainly until all the evidence which it was possible to bring to bear on the case should be laid before you. We, sir, have passed through the fires of affliction; we, sir, do not propose to assume the initiative in any contingency which may arise pending the decision of the immense questions which are now pressing upon public attention. We consider that our past experience of despotic power has enabled us to appreciate beyond what the people of any other section can imagine what is meant by despotic power; and as we have lived under it in the past, we can live under it in the future, if the northern people shall give their assent to the change of government which is involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.) The question is on the resolution submitted by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I should like to add an amendment to the resolution, if my friend from Virginia does not object. The difficulty, as it strikes me, in regard to the sending of troops into any of the States at the time of a State election or an election of a member of Congress, grows out of the legislation which took place during the war. Prior to 1865 there is no doubt that the sentiment of the people was against the permission of the presence of troops near a polling-place during an election. In old times, as far back as 1800, the principle which prevailed in England, of removing soldiers from the polls, had a lodgement with a very large body of the citizens of the United States. It was supposed to be really an objection to the right of a party declared elected to take his seat if soldiers had been in his interest stationed near the polling-place; and the Senate will remember that in one of the early contested elections, the case of Trigg vs. Preston, that was one of the grievances complained of by the petitioners. A reference to that case and the matter attached to it will show that in the House of Representatives, on the 17th of February, 1800, a resolution was passed submitting to a committee of inquiry whether it was expedient "to pass some legislative provision either for removing any military force of the United States from the places of holding elections, or for preventing the interference of any such force with said elections." That committee reported a bill, and it passed the House of Representatives, but subsequently failed in the Senate.

From 1800 until 1865 I believe no statute whatever existed upon that subject; but in 1865 a bill was introduced to accomplish that very purpose of keeping the officers of the Army and Navy from interfering in any way with elections. It passed both Houses without debate, without change; and I rather suspect it passed without the attention of both bodies being drawn specially to the few words which now appear in our Revised Statutes, and which create the very difficulty under which the people of Petersburgh labored at the last election, and it is by the insertion of these few words, "or to keep the peace at the polls." That is a very broad authority; and it is a very questionable thing whether under the law the President has not got a color of authority at least for sending soldiers into a State to keep the peace at the polls.

I therefore think, Mr. President, that there should be an inquiry sent to the Judiciary Committee whether that law should not be amended so as to remove these words, which seem to justify the President of the United States in the interference with elections by sending soldiers to a polling-place. I would suggest therefore to my friend from Virginia to add the words, "and whether some change of the law in regard to the stationing of soldiers at the polls to keep the peace thereat should not also be made."

Mr. WITHERS. I have no objection whatever to the amendment

suggested by my friend from Maryland, and will state in that connection that it was the primary purpose of my colleague and myself to have offered a bill repealing so much of the election laws to which he has referred as ever furnished, as I admit they have, color of ground for the action taken; but upon an examination of the question it was our opinion that there were so many changes which were required to be made, so many amendments, that it would require more time than we should now be able to bestow upon it, because the same principle runs clear through the statute-book; laws under many other heads would require to be amended to conform to it. I wished to secure the attention of the Judiciary Committee to the particular construction which has been placed on these laws by the Attorney-General in the opinion from which I have quoted, because I believed that, broad as those laws were and indisputable as is the fact that there is some color of ground for the action taken, yet still I do not believe they furnish authority for the broad construction which has been given them by the opinion of the Attorney-General, and I wish the attention of the Judiciary Committee particularly directed to that question, supposing that being authorized to report by bill or otherwise they would bring in a bill, if in their opinion it was judicious to do so, covering the whole ground, and repealing such provisions of the law as they might think dangerous to the liberties of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland offer an amendment?

Mr. WHYTE. I withdraw the amendment on the statement of the Senator from Virginia. I wanted to call attention to this provision of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The resolution was read.

The resolution was agreed to.

A. M. GAROUTTE.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to call up the bill for the relief of Captain A. M. Garoutte. It is a case of much importance to him, a poor man who has been long in attendance here. It is a bill of the last session, and I think it might be disposed of in a few moments. I move to take up Senate bill No. 949.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 949) for the relief of A. M. Garoutte, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Army, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to A. M. Garoutte, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Army, of $1,544.15, in full for the amount refunded by said Garoutte to H. Hurdle, by order of General Boyd, in the year 1865, and of hotel bills paid by him for clerks and auctioneer while making sale of personal property of the United States at various places in the State of North Carolina in 1865 and 1866, and for amount of fine wrongfully imposed upon him by a court-martial in August, 1866, and paid by him; and for all sums which would have been due to him for military services in the capacity stated if he had been honorably discharged on the 14th of August, 1866. It also requires the Secretary of War to cause to be issued to Garoutte an honorable discharge, to take effect from the 14th of August, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the rules reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the next rule in order after the last one acted on yesterday be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEES.

Appointment of committees.

46. In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint, severally, the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same. A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall appoint the other members thereof. All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

When the chairman of a committee shall resign or cease to serve on a committee, and the presiding officer be authorized by the Senate to fill the vacancy in such committee, unless specially otherwise ordered, it shall be only to fill up the number on the committee.

Mr. FERRY. I ask, if there be no objection, that the rules be considered as adopted as read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT.) If no amendment be offered or objection made, this rule will be considered as adopted. It is so regarded and the next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Standing committees.

47. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each session, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

A Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Foreign Relations, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Finance, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Appropriations, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Commerce, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Manufactures, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Agriculture, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Public Lands, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Private Land Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Indian Affairs, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Pensions, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Claims, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the District of Columbia, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Patents, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of five Senators, who shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Territories, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Railroads, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Education and Labor, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of three Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, or creating a charge upon the same.
A Committee on Printing, to consist of three Senators.
A Committee on the Library, to consist of three Senators.
A Committee on Rules, to consist of three Senators.
A Committee on Engrossed Bills, to consist of three Senators, who shall examine all bills, amendments, and joint resolutions before they go out of the possession of the Senate.
A Committee on Enrolled Bills, to consist of three Senators, who, or some one of whom, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that the Committee on Printing, together with the Committee on the Library and the Committee on Enrolled Bills, should have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives. I ask that these amendments be added as to each of these committees empowering them to act jointly with the committees of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves an amendment which will be stated.

Mr. FERRY. I move to add "who shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives" in the case of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the Committee on the the Library, and the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is adopted. The question is on the rule as amended. If there be no objection, the rule as amended will be considered as adopted.

The Chief Clerk read the next rule, as follows:

Reference to committees.

48. When motions are made for the reference of the same subject to a standing committee and to a select committee, the question shall first be put upon referring to a standing committee, and a motion simply to refer shall not be open to amendment, except to add instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, this rule will be regarded as agreed to. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Reports of committees of conference.

49. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except while the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and, when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report shall immediately be put, and shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection this rule will be regarded as agreed to, and it is agreed to. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee to lie one day for consideration.

50. All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of a subject, and all subjects from which a committee shall be discharged, shall lie one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to unless there be objection. It is agreed to. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MESSAGES.

Messages from the President and from the House of Representatives.

51. Messages from the President of the United States or from the House of Representatives may be received at any state of business, except while the Senate is dividing, or while the Journal is being read, or while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFCER. If there be no objection this rule will be regarded as agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Communications to the House of Representatives and to the President.

52. Messages shall be sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary, who shall previously certify the final determination of the Senate upon all bills, joint lutions, and other resolutions which may be communicated to the House, or in which its concurrence may be requested; and he shall likewise certify and deliver to the President of the United States all resolutions and other communications which the Senate shall direct to be laid before him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask a question in regard to Rule 51 which we have just passed. Will that admit of the reception of a message from the President or from the House while the yeas and nays are being called?

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will observe that while the Senate is dividing a message cannot be received.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that refer to a call for the yeas and nays or a standing division?

Mr. FERRY. A division of the Senate in any form, whether by count or by yeas and nays. "While the Senate is dividing" is the language used in all rules.

On the next rule I suggest after the word "final" in the second line before "determination" be stricken out. "Determination" is sufficient. "Final" is tautology.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment indicated by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, Rule 52 as thus amended will stand as the judgment of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and the rule is agreed to. The next will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING.

Printing of papers.

53. Every motion to print documents, reports, or other matter transmitted by either of the Executive Departments, or to print memorials, petitions, accompanying documents, or any other paper, except bills of the Senate or House of Representatives, resolutions submitted by a Senator, communications from the Legislatures or conventions, lawfully called, of the respective States, and motions to print by order of the standing or select committees of the Senate, shall, unless the Senate otherwise order, be referred to the Committee on Printing. When a motion is made to commit with instructions, it shall be in order to add thereto a motion to print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to this rule, and it will be regarded as adopted. The next will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Printing additional numbers.

54. Motions to print additional numbers shall also be referred to the Committee on Printing; and when the committee shall report in favor of printing additional numbers, the report shall be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof; and when the cost of printing such additional numbers shall exceed the sum of $500, the concurrence of the House of Representatives shall be necessary for the order to print the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this rule? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The next will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Printing bills, joint resolutions, and reports of committees.

55. Every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave or reported from a committee, and all bills and joint resolutions received from the House of Representatives, and all reports of committees, shall be printed, unless, for the dispatch of the business of the Senate, such printing may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to this rule? The Chair hears none. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WITHDRAWAL OR REFERENCE.

Withdrawal of papers.

56. No memorial or other paper presented to the Senate, except original treaties, finally acted upon by the Senate, shall be withdrawn from its files except by order of the Senate. But when an act may pass for the settlement of any private claim the Secretary is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement the papers on file relating to the claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to this rule? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When an adverse report has been made, copies to be left with the Secretary of the Senate.

57. No memorial or other paper upon which an adverse report has been made shall be withdrawn from the files of the Senate unless copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to this rule? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The next will be reported.

Mr. FERRY. I see that Rules 58 and 59 have not been changed. I ask that their reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. FERRY. Also the next, Rule 60, is unchanged with the exception that the word "and" occurring in three places is stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These rules will be considered as agreed to without reading, if there be no objection.

These rules are as follows:

Claims adversely reported not again referred.

58. Whenever a claim is presented to the Senate and referred to a committee, and the committee report that the claim ought not to be allowed, and the report shall have been agreed to by the Senate, it shall not be in order to move to take the papers from the files for the purpose of referring them, at a subsequent session, unless the claimant shall present a memorial for that purpose, stating that new evidence has been discovered since the report, and setting forth the new evidence in the memorial.

BUSINESS CONTINUED FROM SESSION TO SESSION.

59. At the second or any subsequent session of a Congress, the legislative business of the Senate which remained undetermined at the close of the next preceding session of that Congress shall be resumed and proceeded with in the same manner as if no adjournment of the Senate had taken place; and all subjects referred to committees and not reported upon at the close of a session of Congress shall be returned to the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and be retained by him until the next succeeding session of that Congress, when they shall be returned to the several committees to which they had previously been referred.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

Persons admitted to the floor of Senate.

60. No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate while in session, except as follows:

The officers of the Senate.
Members of the House of Representatives and their Clerk.
The President of the United States and his Private Secretary.
The heads of Departments.
Ministers of the United States.
Foreign ministers.
Ex-Presidents and Ex-Vice-Presidents of the United States.
Ex-Senators and Senators-elect.
Judges of the Supreme Court.
Governors of States and Territories.
General of the Army.
Admiral of the Navy.
Members of national Legislatures of foreign countries.
Private secretaries of Senators duly appointed in writing, and the Librarian of Congress.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SUSPENSION.

Suspension of the rules.

61. No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof. Any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate; and the rule proposed to be suspended shall precisely and distinctly be stated; but the eighteenth rule shall never be suspended under any circumstances whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. Is the rule just adopted sufficiently precise to prevent the possibility of a question as to the ability to repeal the eighteenth rule? Manifestly it ought not to be repealed, and yet this gives us the privilege of repealing any rule whatever other than the eighteenth rule. Cannot this rule itself be repealed which contains the inhibition of the repeal of the eighteenth rule?

Mr. FERRY. This states in precise language that it cannot be repealed in any case whatever.

Mr. WITHERS. But if every rule can be repealed, this rule itself which contains the inhibition can be repealed and the inhibition with it.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan to insert in the first part of the rule "any rule excepting the eighteenth." Then the two provisions would harmonize together. As it reads now, there is, first, a provision that all rules may be repealed, and then, second, a provision that the eighteenth rule shall never be repealed. There seems to be an inconsistency which could be provided for by inserting in the first part "excepting the eighteenth rule."

Mr. FERRY. I have no objection to that amendment if it renders it more explicit. The committee were satisfied with the language as reported; but I make no opposition to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont suggests an amendment inserting the words "excepting the eighteenth rule."

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the rule be read again. I cannot see the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont since I have looked at the rule again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Rule 61.

Mr. FERRY. In the same rule it makes the exception that the eighteenth rule cannot be suspended in any case whatever. It provides for suspending the other rules by unanimous consent, but this under no circumstances whatever shall be suspended.

Mr. MORRILL. My idea was, not having the print before me, that it was included in two rules. But the point I make is nevertheless as valid in the one case as the other. This rule provides "any rule may be suspended," and then in the next breath that the eighteenth rule shall not be suspended. Now, if you will insert after the words "any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate" the words "excepting the eighteenth," then it will be all harmonious.

Mr. FERRY. That is simply changing the word "but" to the word "except." The committee supposed that the word "but" being used covered as much as the word "except." I accept the change. It is a mere change of phraseology.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is to strike out "but" and insert "except," in next to the last line. If there be no objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no objection to the amendment there or to the change suggested by the Senator from Vermont. The first provision of the rule provides for taking steps to suspend or amend or modify a rule, requiring previous notice to be given. The second clause of the rule provides for the suspension of a rule by unanimous consent, and this third clause is a limitation or restriction upon that unanimous consent. Now, if it is intended that the eighteenth rule shall be eternal and invariable and immortal, as much so as the Louisiana returning board, then I shall certainly object to such language and move to strike out the words "under any circumstances whatever," because I do not think and I do not hold that we can make a rule which can never be changed, make a rule that we cannot give notice of a motion to change and finally have modified or altered. For that reason I think that, even taking it the way it is, the meaning would be the same as it will be when the amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont is adopted. It is only a limitation upon the power of the Senate to suspend the eighteenth rule by unanimous consent.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will see by reference to Rule 18 that it relates to the denial of permission to a Senator to vote after the result has been announced. The rule has always been so. The practice has been never to allow a Senator to vote after the announcement of the result. Now, if there is any force in that, the privilege ought never to be granted, and the reason of the thing, as is well known to the Senator, who has already apprehended it, is that, if after the result were announced a Senator were permitted to vote, he might change the result entirely; and for that reason it is prohibited altogether under any circumstances whatever. I cannot say, under the circumstances which the Senator has alluded to, that if the Louisiana returning board were imported to the Senate but that the whole phase of the rules might be changed; but in the absence of that returning board I think the rules ought to have full force.

Now, if the Senator desired to reach this very rule itself he might, by giving one day's notice, offer a proposition for the repeal of this very rule, so as to take it out of the code of rules; but so long as it is a rule it says that "Rule 18 shall never be suspended under any circumstances whatever;" and it seems to me there is a great deal of force and a great deal of safety in it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is not the Senator mistaken in supposing that a Senator has never been allowed to vote after the result is announced? I think that if the Senator will look at the records of the Senate he will find at least in one instance that a Senator on the following day was allowed to record his vote.

Mr. FERRY. Under what circumstances, I should like to ask the Senator?

Mr. STEVENSON. Under the circumstances that he was not present in the Chamber when the vote was called, and he came in the next day and asked leave to record his vote. I am particularly positive on that subject, because the vote I refer to was on the expulsion of the late Senator John C. Breckinridge, when a Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Rice] on the following day said he was not in the Senate when the resolution of expulsion was up, and he asked to be allowed to record his vote. It was allowed, and I think you will find the vote recorded.

Mr. FERRY. I would ask the Senator whether that was not in the face of the rule, that under no circumstances whatever shall a Senator be permitted to vote after the announcement of the result.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know what the rule was; I cannot answer my friend from Michigan on that question; but I heard him say that it never had been allowed in the Senate; but in the case in my mind there was a request of the Senator from Minnesota to record his vote, and I know it was done, and the record will support me, I am sure, in the fact that his vote is recorded for the expulsion, and that vote was allowed to be recorded on the day after the resolution was passed.

Mr. FERRY. I doubt not the Senator from Kentucky is correct in his statement of recollection. He is always correct in his statement of recollection, but the case had escaped my notice, and I am prepared to say that it is an unsound proposition and an unsafe one.

Mr. STEVENSON. I agree with that. I am not proposing it. I only wanted to show the history, and not allow the statement to pass unchallenged. I do not think a Senator ought ever to be allowed to record a vote after the result has been announced. I agree to that proposition; but it has been done.

Mr. FERRY. I do not dispute the statement of fact, of course, for the Senator's recollection is clear and vivid always, although the fact had escaped my notice. I am only contending for the soundness of the proposition embodied in the rule; and I think (and the Senator agrees with me) it is better that the rule should be enforced that under no circumstances should a Senator be permitted to vote after the result has been announced.

Mr. SHERMAN. The case cited by the Senator from Kentucky is certainly the only one that I ever heard of in the history of the Senate. Indeed, I supposed it was the uniform and universal rule that no Senator was ever, in any case from the foundation of the Government, allowed to vote unless he was present when the vote was taken, especially where his vote would change the result. I suppose in the case cited that it was owing to peculiar circumstances that the recording of the vote was allowed to Mr. Rice. I was here then a member of the Senate, and I can readily understand that under the peculiar relations that existed between Mr. Rice and Mr. Breckinridge, it might have been granted in that case by general consent; but I never heard of such a case; I do not remember that.

Mr. FERRY. I presume upon examination of the record it will be seen that that vote did not change the result; and on that account, in courtesy to the Senator who had been absent, he was permitted to record his vote; but if that vote had changed the result from yea to nay or from nay to yea, I think the Senate would not have granted it. Probably those were the circumstances under which the vote was cast.

Mr. COCKRELL. I heartily indorse the sentiment of the eighteenth rule, as a matter of course, but I was protesting against the unlimited, eternal power we were trying to exercise in the language used here. I still contend that the Senate can repeal that rule at any time it chooses by pursuing the form required by the rules.

Mr. FERRY. There is no question of that. If the Senator follows the method of the prior rule giving one day's notice, he can secure its repeal by a majority vote; and this rule itself can be repealed by giving the proper notice, provided the Senate concurs in doing it; but so long as this rule is in force, Rule 18 cannot be suspended under any circumstances whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment proposed to this rule and no objection made, the rule will be regarded as agreed to as amended. The rule will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

61. No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice, in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof. Any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate; and the rule proposed to be suspended shall precisely and distinctly be stated; excepting the eighteenth rule shall never be suspended under any circumstances whatever.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment proposed by me should come in after "notice;" so as to read, "Any rule may be suspended without notice, except the eighteenth rule, by the unanimous consent of the Senate;" and then the language as proposed to be amended in the rule here would read all right:

Any rule may be suspended without notice, except the eighteenth rule, by the unanimous consent of the Senate; and the rule proposed to be suspended shall precisely and distinctly be stated; but the eighteenth rule shall never be suspended under any circumstances whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to insert the words "except the eighteenth rule" just after the words "any rule" in the fourth line; so as to read, "Any rule except the eighteenth rule."

Mr. MORRILL. That perhaps would be better. I accept the suggestion.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senate is disposed to transpose these words let the whole of the paragraph be transposed, including the words, "not be suspended under any circumstances whatever."

Mr. SHERMAN. In trying to be virtuous, Senators may perhaps violate the Constitution. We cannot prevent the Senate of the United States from making rules and changing the rules at pleasure, because the Constitution gives expressly to the Senate the power to make its rules and therefore to change its rules and vary its rules or suspend its rules. You cannot say, therefore, that it shall not do it; nor can this Senate bind its successors. It cannot deprive the Senate of the power to change these rules if it chooses. Therefore this great care over a rule that everybody seems anxious to preserve should not be carried so far as to violate the Constitution or interfere with the right of the Senate to change its rules. Nothing prevents me, as a Senator, making a motion to amend the rules, however absurd the motion might be and however illogical the proposition that I might submit.

Mr. FERRY. There is a special rule that provides for modifying and changing the rules and suspending them on notice, and the Senator from Ohio understands that he cannot move the Senate to change a rule without giving a day's notice.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true.

Mr. FERRY. We must conform to the rule which requires it. There is no prohibition here to the suspension or modification of this very rule upon the one day's notice, provided the Senate concur in suspending or modifying it; so that this is only absolute so long as it is in force.

Mr. SHERMAN. This simply says that even unanimous consent shall not at the moment suspend Rule 18. I assert that the Senate may by unanimous consent disregard all its rules and this rule among the rest, because the Senate exists as an organized body, and can act according to its own will and pleasure. It may regulate the mode and manner of carrying measures; and where a unanimous vote of the Senate declares that a certain thing shall be, there is no power to reverse that decision if it is within the power of the Senate to do the act. Therefore it may disregard all your rules and pass a bill in a moment, as is often done. We might disregard all the rules. I think, therefore, that all these provisions that tie up our rules against ourselves are simply null and void.

Mr. FERRY. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to be after the word "rule" to insert "except the eighteenth;" and then let the rest of the rule stand as proposed by the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FERRY. That I assent to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the rule as thus proposed to be amended? The Chair hears none, and the rule stands as thus amended. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SENATE WING OF THE CAPITOL UNDER CONTROL OF PRESIDING OFFICER.

62. The presiding officer of the Senate shall have the regulation and control of such parts of the Capitol building and of its corridors and passages as are, or may be, set apart for the use of the Senate and its officers, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this rule? The Chair hears none, and the rule is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OATHS OF OFFICE.

63. The oath or affirmation required by the Constitution and prescribed by the act of June 1, 1789, shall be taken in open Senate by each Senator before entering upon his duties; and he shall also take and subscribe in open Senate the oath or affirmation prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, or he shall take and subscribe the oath of affirmation prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868, as the case may be, before entering upon his duties. The said oaths shall also be taken and subscribed in the same manner by the Secretary of the Senate; but the other officers of the Senate may take and subscribe them in the office of the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as agreed to. It is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Doors closed on motion.

64. On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a Senator, require secrecy, the presiding officer shall direct the galleries to be cleared; and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

President meeting the Senate in executive session.

65. When the President of the United States shall meet the Senate in the Senate Chamber for the consideration of executive business, he shall have a seat on the right of the Chair. When the Senate shall be convened by the President of the United States to any other place, the presiding officer of the Senate and the Senators shall attend at the place appointed, with the necessary officers of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the rule is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Officers admitted in executive session.

66. When acting upon confidential or executive business, the Senate Chamber shall be cleared of all persons except the Secretary, the Chief Clerk, the principal legislative clerk, the executive clerk, the minute and journal clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the assistant doorkeeper, and such other officers as the presiding officer shall think necessary; and all such officers shall be sworn to secrecy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to unless there be objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator reporting these rules whether there has ever been a rule that in executive session the debates shall be taken down when they are wanted to be preserved, by having a reporter sworn?

Mr. FERRY. Not during secret session. It would be defeating the very object of secrecy, perhaps.

Mr. COCKRELL. We keep a record of our proceedings.

Mr. FERRY. But no one has access to it except the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate might at certain times want the proceedings reported.

Mr. FERRY. It has never been the case, and I think the committee did not deem it prudent to open the door any farther than is now allowed by the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Subjects embraced in injunction of secrecy.

67. All confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate shall be by the Senators and the officers of the Senate kept secret; and all treaties which may be laid before the Senate, and all remarks, votes, and proceedings thereon, shall also be kept secret, until the Senate shall, by their resolution, take off the injunction of secrecy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as agreed to. No objection is made, and the rule is agreed to. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Violation of injunction of secrecy.

68. Any Senator or officer of the Senate who shall disclose the secret or confidential business or proceedings of the Senate shall be liable, if a Senator, to suffer expulsion from the body; and if an officer, to dismissal from the service of the Senate, and to punishment for contempt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Proceedings on treaties.

69. When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification, it shall be read a first time; and no motion in respect to it shall be in order, except to refer it to a committee, or to print it, in confidence, for the use of the Senate.

When a treaty is reported from a committee with or without amendment, it shall, unless the Senate unanimously otherwise direct, lie one day for consideration; after which it may be read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, when it shall be proceeded with by articles; and the amendments reported by the committee shall be first acted upon, after which other amendments may be proposed; and when through with, the proceedings had as in Committee of the Whole shall be reported to the Senate, when the question shall be, if the treaty be amended, "Will the Senate concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole?" And the amendments may be taken separately, or in gross, if no Senator shall object; after which new amendments may be proposed.

The decisions thus made shall be reduced to the form of a resolution of ratification, with or without amendments, as the case may be; which shall be proposed on a subsequent day, unless, by unanimous consent, the Senate determine otherwise; at which stage no amendment shall be received unless by unanimous consent.

On the final question to advise and consent to the ratification in the form agreed to, the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present shall be necessary to determine it in the affirmative; but all other motions and questions upon a treaty shall be decided by a majority vote, except a motion to postpone indefinitely, which shall be decided by a vote of two-thirds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. It is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When action upon treaties shall expire.

70. Treaties transmitted by the President to the Senate for ratification shall be resumed at the second or any subsequent session of the same Congress at the stage in which they were left at the final adjournment of the session at which they were transmitted; but all proceedings on treaties shall terminate with the Congress, and they shall be resumed at the commencement of the next Congress, as if no proceedings had previously been had thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. It is agreed to. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Indian treaties, when acted upon in open session.

71. All treaties concluded with Indian tribes shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in its open or legislative session, unless the same shall be transmitted by the President to the Senate in confidence; in which case they shall be acted upon with closed doors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Nominations—proceedings.

72. When nominations shall be made by the President of the United States to the Senate, they shall, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate, be referred to appropriate committees; and the final question on every nomination shall be, "Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?" Which question shall not be put on the same day on which the nomination is received, nor on the day on which it may be reported by a committee, unless by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Remarks and votes not to be disclosed.

73. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations, concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any nomination, shall be kept secret. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. It is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Nominations—reconsideration.

74. When a nomination is confirmed or rejected, any Senator voting in the majority may move for a reconsideration on the same day on which the vote was taken, or on either of the next two days of actual executive session of the Senate; but if a notification of the confirmation or rejection of a nomination shall have been sent to the President before the expiration of the time within which a motion to reconsider may be made, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the President to return such notification to the Senate. Any motion to reconsider the vote on a nomination may be laid on the table without prejudice to the nomination, and shall be final.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that the word "a" be put in between "the" and "final," and the words "disposition of such motion" added; so as to read:

Shall be a final disposition of such motion.

Which would be more explicit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this amendment. The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to. If there be no objection, the rule as thus amended will be regarded as agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Nominations—when returned to the President.

75. Nominations confirmed or rejected by the Senate shall not be returned by the Secretary to the President until the expiration of the time limited for making a motion to reconsider the same, or while a motion to reconsider is pending, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Nominations—when motion to reconsider shall fall.

76. When the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all motions to reconsider a vote upon a nomination which has been confirmed or rejected by the Senate, which shall be pending at the time of taking such adjournment or recess, shall fall; and the Secretary shall return all such nominations to the President as confirmed or rejected by the Senate, as the case may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule will be regarded as agreed to. No objection being made, the rule is agreed to. The next rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Nominations—not finally acted upon at close of session to fall and be returned to the President.

77. Nominations neither confirmed nor rejected during the session at which they are made, shall not be acted upon at any succeeding session without being again made to the Senate by the President; and if the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all nominations pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment or recess shall be returned by the Secretary to the President, and shall not again be considered unless they shall again be made to the Senate by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this rule is agreed to. The next rule will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

President furnished with copies of record.

78. The President of the United States shall from time to time, be furnished with an authenticated transcript of the executive records of the Senate, but no further extract from the executive journal shall be furnished by the Secretary, except by special order of the Senate; and no paper, except original treaties transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States, and finally acted upon by the Senate, shall be delivered from the office of the Secretary without an order of the Senate for that purpose.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that in line 4 the words "by the Secretary" be stricken out; because that would imply that copies could be given by some other person.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the rule as thus amended will stand as approved. The rule is approved. The reading of the rules is concluded.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to Rule 12.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator will not press his motion. There are two or three amendments to be inserted. It is only four o'clock.

Mr. McCREERY. That is a good time to adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. Ten minutes will conclude the work.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will my colleague withdraw his motion for a second?

Mr. McCREERY. Yes, sir, for a second.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wish to call up the bill for the relief of Robert Erwin, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] being sick, so that it may remain the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will see that that is laid before the Senate prior to the adjournment. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREERY] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. We can soon conclude this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky withdraw the motion?

Mr. McCREERY. I believe I will.

Mr. FERRY. I call attention to Rule 3. The Senator from Kansas who is not now in his seat [Mr. INGALLS] called the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the case of the lack of a quorum, and a failure to obtain a quorum, the proceeding would fall upon an adjournment under that rule. He suggested that there might be a case when the Sergeant-at-Arms in the execution of an order of the Senate might be away partially discharging his duty, when he would be arrested by that fact. I suggest that that latter clause, "and all proceedings under this rule shall cease upon an adjournment," be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the last line of Rule 3 be stricken out. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I made an objection yesterday which has been removed by striking out this last line.

Mr. FERRY. That is all. The other part of the rule stands to be reported to the Senate. There is an amendment pending to the other part.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has not been adopted, as this rule was reserved.

Mr. FERRY. I am aware of that. It was the understanding on that question that it should be reported to the Senate and the question come up then. I am not asking any action upon that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. FERRY. In Rule 12 I ask that the word "finally" be inserted in the third line between the words "not" and "disposed;" so as to read:

If not finally disposed of on that day, it shall then take its place upon the Calendar of special orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. In Rule 8, as the Senator from Missouri raised a question in order to make it more explicit, I suggest this phraseology so that the rule read:

The first hour of daily session shall be designated as the morning hour, during which the order of business shall be as follows.

And the next line read:

First after the Journal is read the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, &c.

Mr. COCKRELL. That meets exactly the suggestion I made. I had different language; but this is sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to

Mr. COCKRELL. Rules 18 and 19 were reserved yesterday, and I suppose they will go into the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. They will go into the Senate. I desire to call attention to Rule 20. I ask the Secretary to read the last clause commencing "when a bill, resolution," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported at the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. The second clause in the rule is:

When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider such vote shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same to the Senate; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and determined without debate.

Mr. FERRY. The practice under the rule now in force is that when a bill or resolution passes from the possession of the Senate a motion to reconsider does not obtain. Now this rule provides that it shall be accompanied by a resolution that the bill or resolution be returned to the Senate. This will hold the bill or resolution here until the Senator who moves the reconsideration shall at his convenience deem it proper to have the motion to reconsider considered. He might keep the matter here for days and weeks. I suggest that this be added to the rule:

And when determined in the negative shall be held to be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

In other words, that when it is accompanied as proposed by this rule with a resolution that a bill or resolution be returned to the Senate, if that is negatived it shall be considered as a determination of the question of reconsideration.

Mr. WEST. I should like to ask the Senator who has the rules in charge what becomes of the notice of a motion to reconsider? Does that restrain or affect the bill?

Mr. FERRY. It does not affect it at all.

Mr. WEST. Does it not keep it here?

Mr. FERRY. This would cover it. A motion to reconsider would do the same thing. It has got to be accompanied by a motion to return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the latter clause read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider such vote shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same to the Senate; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and determined without debate, and when determined in the negative shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. COCKRELL. That would have the effect, then, of determining the motion to reconsider by the negative vote and not permitting any debate upon the question. Debate is prohibited upon this last motion and not upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. FERRY. That is true.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it would cut off debate entirely upon this last motion.

Mr. FERRY. That is true.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was that the intention of the rule?

Mr. FERRY. It was.

Mr. COCKRELL. That when the bill or resolution had gone to the House and a motion to reconsider was made within the time prescribed by the rule, that motion should then be accompanied by a request to the House to return the same to the Senate, and that that request should be acted upon immediately, and, if determined in the negative, should be a determination of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will bear in mind that the rule now in force prohibits the possibility of a reconsideration of a bill or resolution after it has passed from the possession of the Senate. This opens a way to reach any such bill or resolution by an order of the Senate that the bill or resolution be returned to the Senate. If that vote shall be a negative one, the Senate being prepared to act upon it without debate, it ought to be equivalent to deciding that the Senate does not care to act upon the question of reconsideration, and that negative vote is taken to be a sufficient indication of the judgment of the Senate.

Now I call attention to Rule 27. In the eighth line the words "some act or" have been stricken out. I ask that the words "act or" be retained; so as to read: "existing law, or act, or resolution."

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe we inserted the words "treaty stipulation" yesterday.

Mr. FERRY. I think not in that connection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Clerk read and see whether the words "treaty stipulation" were not inserted yesterday.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation.

Mr. COCKRELL. The words "treaty stipulation" were inserted.

Mr. FERRY. The language should be "law, or act, or resolution." The construction is that a bill passed by the Senate is considered as an act; that it then changes from a bill to an act, although strictly it is not an act until it has passed both Houses of Congress and received the approval of the President. In parliamentary language, however, it is considered an act; and where the Senate passes a bill in such a case as that, certainly an amendment ought to be admitted to carry it into effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to restore the words "act or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. Rule 40 provides that—

A question of order may be raised at any state of the business.

I desire to move as an amendment to add the words "except when the Senate is dividing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. That concludes the amendments that the committee propose. I ask that the rules be reported to the Senate and lie on the table.

The rules were reported to the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the Senator from Michigan had better let the subject lie over until to-morrow; the Senate is so exceedingly thin.

Mr. FERRY. I am not disposed to ask action now. The rules have been reported to the Senate and will lie on the table for the present, to be taken up hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the report be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ROBERT ERWIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay the unfinished business before the Senate, being the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin.

Mr. McCREERY. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 16, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

ZEPHENIAH CRUBOUGH.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4432) granting a pension to Zepheniah Crubough; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF FREEDMAN'S BANK BUILDING.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am instructed by the select committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4285) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy certain property for the use of the United States, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order will be made with the understanding that the bill shall not come back on a motion to reconsider.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly; and the bill with the amendments was referred as indicated, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. EDEN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on War Claims a bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

Mr. GOODIN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Lands a substitute (H. R. No. 4434) for the bill (H. R. No. 4357) to secure the rights of settlers upon railroad lands, and to repeal the first section of an act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to the Red River; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery be taken from the Speaker's table, that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and a conference with the Senate asked.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

CHARLES METCALF.

Mr. BANNING. The bill (H. R. No. 3283) for the relief of Charles Metcalf was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by mistake, and is now on the Private Calendar. I ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL P. FEARON.

Mr. BRIGHT. House joint resolution No. 178 has been improperly referred to the Committee of Claims. I am directed by the committee to ask that they be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The title of the resolution is joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Mary Fearon and Jessie Crossin, executrices of Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed by the Government on forged assignments and power of attorney.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

JENKINS A. FITZGERALD.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 4287) for the relief of Jenkins A. Fitzgerald, assistant surgeon United States Army, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which motion was agreed to.

HAYDEN'S REPORT.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution to print 4,500 copies of Hayden's report for 1875 and 1876 with a favorable recommendation.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 4,500 copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1875 and 1876; 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the office of the survey.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF WOMAN'S LEGAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, introduced (by request) a bill (H. R. No. 4435) to relieve the legal disabilities of women; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask that the memorial accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner would respectfully represent that she is a citizen of the District of Columbia, and has been a resident therein for the past ten years.

That she graduated in Genesee College, New York, in June, 1857; received her second degree in Syracuse University in 1870; was admitted to the National Law University of Washington, District of Columbia, and passed through its curriculum of study, receiving her diploma therefor in May, 1873.

That on the 24th of September, 1873, she was admitted to the bar of the supreme court of the District of Columbia; and that since that time she has been continuously in practice before the said court, her said practice having been interspersed with a large and varied practice before the several Departments of the Government.

That it has been the custom hitherto to admit members of the bar of the District of Columbia to the Supreme Court of the United States on a motion of a member thereof, and taking the oath prescribed.

That your petitioner has been debarred from admission to the United States Supreme Court on the ground that she is a woman; and that fact has been largely published over the country much to the detriment of her law practice, upon which she and her family are dependent for support; and for which profession she has duly prepared herself by the expending of much time, labor, and money.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that a statute may be enacted requiring the United States Supreme Court to receive as members of its bar your petitioners and all other women similarly situated; and thus will ever pray.

BELVA A. LOCKWOOD.

[From the members of the bar of the supreme court, District of Columbia.]

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned would respectfully request the passage of House bill No. —, entitled "An act to relieve the legal disabilities of women."

THOMAS J. DURANT,
CHARLES W. HORNOR,
O. D. BARRETT,
A. G. RIDDLE,
And many others.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled, of the United States of America:

The undersigned would respectfully request the passage of House bill No ——, entitled "A bill to relieve the legal disabilities of women."

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Tenafly, New Jersey; Matilda Joslyn Gage, Fayetteville, New York; Elizabeth C. Clark, Washington, District of Columbia; Susan B. Anthony, Rochester, New York; Matilla M. Ricker, Dover, New Hampshire; P. Holmes Drake, Alabama; Buell McClung, Alabama; Frank B. McCarty, Alabama; Annie B. Robertson, Alabama; Alice D. Brooks, Alabama; Ellen V. Griffiths, Wilmington, Delaware; Eliza Anne Chambers, Washington, District of Columbia; Mrs. H. H. Stowell, New York City.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, PARKERSBURGH, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4436) for the completion of the custom-house at Parkersburgh, West Virginia, and to furnish the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK S. ARMISTEAD.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4437) to remove the political disabilities of Frank S. Armistead, a citizen of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I hope, by unanimous consent, that the bill will be put upon its passage at this time.

There was no objection.

The bill, which was read, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) removes the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States on Frank S. Armistead, a citizen of West Virginia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting therefor.

ROCK ISLAND A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. HENDERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4438) to establish a port of delivery at the city of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. FORNEY.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4439) to remove the political disabilities imposed upon John H. Forney, of Calhoun County, Alabama, by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I hope this bill will be passed at this time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it at his request?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. It is.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting therefor.

JAMES ATKINS.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill (S. No. 1040) to authorize sundry allowances to James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue of the fourth district of the State of Georgia, in the settlement of his accounts, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Ought not that to go to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection for the present until the bill is read. It is reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, and should be passed.

The bill, which was read, provides that James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue of the fourth district of the State of Georgia, shall be allowed in the settlement of his accounts, $7,750.03 on account of items of assessment and abatement, and further the sum of $1,415.08 on account of expenses incurred by him in the performance of the duties of his office.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] make the point of order?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will not insist on it.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is merely for the purpose of permitting the adjustment of this officer's accounts, and the report of the committee is unanimous.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that the report of the Senate committee in this case may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The report is as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1040) to allow the late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia his salary, hitherto withheld, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Your committee referred the bill to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for examination and report, and received in reply the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, August 14, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, referred by you to this office, inclosing Senate bill No. 1040, for the relief of James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia, and in reply I have to state that this subject has heretofore had the attention of my predecessor, Hon. D. D. Pratt, a copy of whose letter I have the honor herewith to transmitting.

Mr. Atkins is charged on the books of this office with the sum of $17,220.65, made up of the following items:

Balance of assessment lists uncollected	$2,755 02
Amounts abated as uncollected and charged back as having been collected	1,985 32
Amounts turned over to successor and charged back as having been collected	1,842 22
Amounts charged to Mr. Atkins for taxes collected by his deputy and not accounted for	4,579 28
Amount retained from disbursing fund in excess of amount allowed for salary, &c	6,058 21
Total	17,220 05

Upon examination of the records of this office, I find that the various allowances made by the Secretary of the Treasury to Mr. Atkins as collector amount to the sum of $21,309.72, and that the sum of $17,743.46 has been passed to his credit, leaving the sum of $3,566.26 of said allowances not passed to his credit, which amount was reduced by $1,000 by the Secretary of the Treasury on an order made subsequent to the original order, which would constitute the contract between the United States and the collector, which reduction seems not to have been in accordance with law. (See Patton vs. The United States, 7 C. Cl. R., 362.)

In the adjustment of Mr. Atkins's accounts, therefore, this office is disposed to give him credit for the said sum of $3,566.26 on account of salary. Mr. Atkins's accounts for expenses in his district were for the sum of $71,525 29
Of which was allowed 70,110 21

Leaving a balance of 1,415 08

For which he filed vouchers, but which were disallowed, as the payments were in excess of the appropriation made by order of the Secretary of the Treasury for the expenses of his district. Mr. Atkins claims, with considerable show of reason, that as these appropriations were made several months after he commenced incurring the expenses for the fiscal year, it would be unfair for the item of $1,415.08 to be disallowed.

This office would not be adverse to allowing Mr. Atkins both of said items, amounting to $4,981.31, which, if deducted from the amount with which he is chargeable, would leave him debited with the sum of $12,329.34, made up of the items before mentioned. Of these items, the sum of $4,579.28 is said to have been collected by his deputy, and that the securities of said deputy are perfectly solvent, thus leaving a balance that Mr. Atkins and his securities would be personally responsible for of $7,750.03. This sum of money seems to have been lost to Mr. Atkins by the dishonesty and incompetency of some of his deputies.

While Mr. Atkins held the office of collector he received and paid into the Treasury over three millions of dollars, and there is no charge in this office that he misappropriated any of the funds coming into his hands, except in the instance of retaining about $1,500 on account of salary and expenses in excess of the amount allowed.

The foregoing facts are given for the purpose of enabling Congress to determine whether it will exercise the power of giving Mr. Atkins the relief desired. If such a bill is to be passed, I would recommend that he be relieved to the extent of $7,750.03 on account of items of assessments and abatements and $1,415.08 on account of expenses, leaving him chargeable with $4,579.28 collected by his deputy.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Hon. LOT M. MORRILL,
Secretary of the Treasury.

And in view of the facts set forth therein, recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute:

SALE OF LANDS IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4440) authorizing the sale and private entry of certain tracts of land within the limits of Salt Lake City, Utah Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIP W. COLEMAN.

Mr. DURAND, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution for payment of monthly salary of Philip W. Coleman for month of January, 1877; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with adverse recommendations, the following bills and petitions; and they were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 2521) for the relief of John H. Ruff;

The petition of G. W. Penn, late captain of Company M, Thirteenth Kentucky Volunteers, for arrears of pay, &c.;

The petition of Captain W. P. Berry and others, of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry;

The bill (H. R. No. 627) for the relief of James M. Lee;

The bill (H. R. No. 1394) for the relief of Lieutenant W. H. Collins, late of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, now of the county of Venango, State of Pennsylvania:

The petition of Jackson Roberts, of Kentucky, for arrears of pay as captain of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteers; and

The bill (H. R. No. 2029) to remove the charge of desertion against Levi Sutton and George Grooms, of Company K, Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry.

DANIEL H. KELLY.

Mr. STRAIT also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 685) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of War to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly, deceased, upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, to date December 1, 1861.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Military Committee, to whom was referred the petition of Delilah Kelly, with the Senate bill No. 655, an act to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry, have had the same under consideration, and return the same to the House with the recommendation that it pass. Your committee have carefully considered all the papers in this case, and concur fully in the report made by the chairman of the Senate Military Committee, which is hereto attached.

The report of the Senate committee is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the petition of Delilah Kelly was referred, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

This is the petition of Delilah Kelly, who claims to be the widow of Daniel H. Kelly, deceased, late a private of Company F, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteers. The evidence shows that deceased enlisted in the military service of the United States about December 1, 1861, at Couche's Gap, Tennessee, under Captain David Fry; that while on their way, in Lee County, Virginia, the command was attacked by a large force of rebels, and, after a hard fight, continuing from two o'clock till dark, the deceased, the captain, and several others were taken prisoners. The recruiting papers were in the hands of deceased, who had been made orderly sergeant, and, by direction of said Captain Fry, were destroyed the night after their capture, on which account no return was ever made of the enlistment of deceased. The deceased was sent to the rebel prison at Richmond, where he died.

The facts in this case are testified to by Captain Fry and Ione Thomas Davis, both of whom were taken prisoners with deceased. The particulars are stated minutely and so clearly as to satisfy the committee of their truthfulness; and the signature of Captain Fry is verified by the War Department.

The committee, being fully satisfied of the justness of this claim, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

H. T. BURROWS.

Mr. FOSTER, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution providing for payment of salary of H. T. Burrows, a special messenger to assistant doorkeeper, from December 5 to 31, 1876, inclusive; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

DESTITUTION IN EAST WASHINGTON.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of a meeting of colored citizens of East Washington, held on Wednesday evening, January 10, 1877; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent that the memorial be printed.

The SPEAKER. In the usual form or in the RECORD?

Mr. HOOKER. That it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and the memorial was ordered to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, without the names of the petitioners, as follows:

Memorial of a meeting of colored citizens of East Washington, held on Wednesday evening, January 10, 1877, at Mount Sinai African Methodist Episcopal Church.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

A large and interesting meeting of the colored citizens of the eastern portion of the city of Washington, seeing the absolute destitution, and unmitigated suffering of great masses of our fellow-citizens for want of the common necessities of life—many of them being men and women of marked honesty and industrious habits—who are unable to obtain employment of any kind by which they may earn their daily bread, feel it to be our duty to petition your honorable body in their behalf for an appropriation that will relieve their present necessities and enable them to survive the severe cold weather through which we are now struggling.

The severity of the winter, the great number of destitute strangers from abroad, and the large reduction of the employés of the various Departments of the Government, have combined to produce a degree of suffering in this city unparalleled in the history of many of our oldest citizens.

The various churches, as well as a few charitable associations in the city, have rendered such aid as they could bestow on a number of those who reached them in the early part of the winter; but their supplies proved so inadequate to the demands that it allayed but a very small proportion of the suffering among the masses.

Your honorable bodies are aware of the fact that the poor of the District have not often called upon you to aid them in this particular manner; and even now, in their present dilemma, numbers of them without fire, without food, and but a scanty supply of clothing, detest the necessity that compels them to seek this relief.

We are assured that something must be done as speedily as possible to give them relief or hunger and cold will open the grave for many who to-day are physically able to perform any kind of manual labor.

We therefore again most earnestly beseech you to make, at the earliest possible moment, such appropriation for the relief of the famishing poor of this District as you in your wisdom may deem advisable; and your memorialists will ever pray.

Signed in behalf of the meeting.

HORACE E. MULLAN.

Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4441) for the relief of Horace E. Mullan, late a lieutenant-commander in the Navy of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. TEESE. I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of Dr. Mary E. Walker, accompanied by a bill to protect woman in her suffrage, and ask that it be read, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: Your memorialist most respectfully asks that—

Whereas the women of New Jersey exercised the rights, duties, and privileges of the elective franchise before the Constitution of the United States was adopted, and continued to exercise the same until 1844, long after the framers of the Constitution as well as the adopters were all dead, clearly proving that the fathers intended to make this country a perfect republic instead of a limited one: Therefore,

Your memorialist, in behalf of the women citizens of the United States, asks your honorable body to pass the following bill to protect women citizens from State laws that are clearly in conflict with the Constitution of the United States of America.

DR. MARY E. WALKER.

BILL TO PROTECT WOMAN IN HER FRANCHISE.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the penalties made and provided for the hindering or preventing men citizens from the free exercise of the elective franchise on election days shall be in full force in regard to women citizens in all the States and Territories of the United States.

MARY E. WALKER, M. D.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1877.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I desire to present a memorial.

Mr. RUSK, Mr. GARFIELD, and others called for the regular order.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON GOLD AND SILVER.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes to one o'clock p. m., and the House resumes the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (S. No. 16) was rejected. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] is entitled to ten minutes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to attend an international conference upon the subject of the relative values of gold and silver.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That should the government of one or more countries invite a conference or convention to consider the important change which has recently occurred in the relative values of gold and silver, and the adoption of international measures for the removal of embarrassments arising therefrom, the President of the United States is authorized to appoint three properly qualified persons as commissioners to attend such conference or convention.

Mr. WILLARD. Last Thursday, by the courtesy of the gentleman who has charge of this bill, I offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute which I ask may be read, and I will also state, sir, that there was an inadvertent omission of three words in the amendment which I have inserted. The words are "the government of," after the word "should," in the fourth line.

The amendment, as modified, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the event of the full remonetization of silver in the United States, should the government of one or more countries invite a conference or convention with a view to agree upon and establish a uniform relation of silver with gold as a legal standard of value, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three qualified persons as commissioners to attend such conference or convention.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to propose to the governments of such countries as use both gold and silver as a legal standard of value such conference or convention in the event and for the purpose stated in the foregoing resolution.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I wish it understood that the amendment is only offered for the purpose of being read for information, and is not to be considered before the House.

Mr. WILLARD. I desire to say but a word in regard to this amendment. I have prepared it to meet the objections of those who opposed the joint resolution as submitted by the committee to the House. It occurred to me that in the event that silver should be remonetized in this country it would be very important that our nation should be in agreement with such other nations of the world as use both gold and silver as a legal standard of value. It is well known that in this country our coinage acts previous to 1873 undervalued silver as compared with France and the other countries of the Latin Union. In those countries fifteen and one-half ounces of silver are equal to one ounce of gold. In this country from 1834 to 1873 sixteen ounces of silver were equal to one ounce of gold. In other words, 399.9 grains of standard silver are equivalent to a dollar in France, Italy, and the other nations belonging to the Latin Union, while in this country it requires 412.5 grains. Under our precarious coinage laws the owner of silver in bringing his silver to our mints received less in value for it than he would have received if he had taken it to the mints of those countries, $100 in the United States being equal to $103.15 in the European countries which with us had adopted the double standard.

Now, Mr. Speaker, can we afford, being the greatest silver-producing country in the world, to stand before the nations as undervaluing this important product? It seems to me that we cannot. And while the double-standard countries of the old world are making this grand battle in behalf of that system of coinage, it would certainly appear that we ought at least to extend to them the cordial hand of sympathy, and if possible to come to some terms of agreement with them.

We in this country practically banished silver of legal standard value from our coinage by undervaluing it for nearly forty years, and when silver shall rise again in value, as it has been fast rising in the last six months, we, under our present system and under the present relations between the two metals in our coinage, should encounter great and serious difficulty.

If the opportunity shall be given to bring the substitute which I have offered to a vote, I trust it will be adopted in the place of the resolution now under consideration. It implies that this country shall restore the status quo of our coinage previous to 1873, and upon that basis to assume an expectant attitude in regard to the relation to be permanently fixed between silver and gold and the united coin of the realm. It will be eminently proper, in my opinion, for the United States Government, upon the restoration of silver to its old position in our coinage system, to unite with such nations as use the optional or double standard in securing an international conference to consider simply the relation which silver should uniformly bear to gold in its coinage value.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, before demanding the question on reconsideration I propose to reply to the several objections and arguments that have been urged against its adoption, and to offer some reflections on the important questions which the resolution proposes to submit to an international conference or convention. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] considers it the highest duty of statesmanship and fidelity to our own people to control the question of a gold standard of value or a double standard of silver and gold legal tender for ourselves as an American question. He bases his argument on the assertion that American interests are very different from English interests, because our country is very largely a debtor country, perhaps the largest debtor nation in the world. If it were possible, Mr. Speaker, for us, on account of our large silver-mining interests, to consider and legislate upon the question of remonetizing silver without our action being affected by the conduct of European nations we might well grant all that the advocates of the bimetallic standard require; but can we afford to pursue an independent line of action? Are not our material interests inseparably bound up with the legislation of the leading nations when we attempt to proclaim as a legal tender and as a standard of value silver, which is not acknowledged as such either by England or Germany. Further, in the face of the fact that the Latin Union, under the lead of France, has gone to the verge of demonetizing silver by limiting its coinage, how can the United States, which is tributary to these great nations in all things which pertain to trade and commerce, the whole commercial world being a unit—how can we disregard the demands of continental Europe for conference and combination without producing serious disadvantage and peril to our commerce and finances? The highest statesmanship will always demand the most exhaustive examination of the whole question and seek all the light that the wisdom and experience of the nations of the world can bestow, before entering upon a path of action which may lead to commercial and financial disaster.

This joint resolution is almost the reverse, Mr. Speaker, of the charge made against it by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] that it is a measure "to rule silver out of the currency of the country." If the legislation proposed by an international conference would be adverse to making silver a standard of value and an equivalent legal tender with gold, the gentleman would pause in his wild scheme of creation of a double standard. He would be admonished by the decree of so important a convention; but, sir, the resolution proposes no such consideration. Rather, sir, that the very object desired by the advocates of bimetallic money may be sustained, if deemed wise and advantageous, by regulating the value of the two metals and thus creating an invariable standard of value, if possible, by which the two metals—gold and silver—may be used, and thus advancing especially the silver-mining interests of our country.

Nor, Mr. Speaker, are the adverse views of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] any more in point. The passage of this resolution would not postpone action by the Senate on the silver bill passed by the House. On the contrary, the advocates of silver money in that body, notably the Senator from Missouri, the gentleman's own State, [Mr. BOGY,] is on record in favor of it. He states that "the value, the relation of the two metals, should be uniform throughout the commercial world." And as the resolution only proposes a conference to determine the relation, it is in accord with the views of every writer of note in Europe who favors the monetization of silver. Further, sir, their opinions are supplemented by the prominent men of this country who have made the science of money a study and have given to this all-important question reflection and consideration.

I therefore press the resolution before the House. I ask its adoption with the firm conviction that only by an international conference can the relative value of gold and silver be agreed upon by the commercial nations, and that only by such decision can the vast silver-mining interests of this country be secured and made permanently prosperous. Besides, Mr. Speaker, the conclusions of such a conference, though of vast importance in guiding national legislation, would in no sense be binding on Congress or the country until fully approved by the law-making power, no more than the results of the silver commission heretofore constituted by Congress and whose report will, I believe, recommend just such action as is proposed by the pending joint resolution. While, as present advised, I am in favor of gold as the only legal-tender standard of value, I am not regardless of the views of the eminent advocates of bimetallic money. On the contrary, it may be that under a proper system provided by wise legislation and enforced by joint action of the leading nations, silver may yet be restored, and, side by side with gold, work out the problems of financial science and gratify the objects, although unwisely pursued, I believe, of my honorable friends who differ so widely from me on the immediate demands of the silver question.

The Bland silver bill now before the Senate will hardly suffer anything from the passage of this resolution. It, Mr. Speaker, must stand or fall on its own merits.

The rise of silver in value has doubtless been promoted somewhat by the attempts at remonetization of that metal by this Congress, and the effect of successful legislation in that direction on the ratio proposed of 1 to 16 may give us silver money—a legal tender in no part of the world but here—and rid us of gold faster than silver can be coined. Can this be our true interest? We will become the receptacle of the demonetized silver of Europe, which will not recognize our silver legal tender, and be compelled to part with our gold—the only money which is money the world over.

But, says the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] we are a debtor nation. In what money will we then pay our debts, the interest on our bonds, the value of our importations? Not in unrecognized silver, but in gold—the only money known and acknowledged by commerce—and that gold we must buy from Europe at its price on demand.

This will be but one of the inevitable disadvantages of remonetization of silver. Gold and silver now stand at a relation of 17 to 1, and if coined at 16 to 1 it needs no argument to convince every candid and properly informed person that the cheaper money, silver, will remain at home and the gold coinage be lost to the country. This result, Mr. Speaker, leads me to consider whether the advocates of the silver standard are not meditating a crusade against our gold currency and striving, not to obtain a double standard, but to substitute silver for gold as the coin legal tender of the country. I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the design of the advocates of the Bland silver bill. There is admittedly an irrepressible conflict between the two metals, and one or the other, in my opinion, must survive as the only acknowledged legal tender. For forty years prior to 1873, while silver was by law a legal tender, the monetary standard was practically limited to gold in all the relations of commerce and contracts were made on the basis of that metal except as limited since and by the legal-tender act. The variations in the value of silver should cause us to pause and consider whether even international legislation can fix a certain relation of value between gold and silver. If fixed at 15½ or 16 to 1, will it prove invariable? I am not sanguine that universal law can make the relation of to-day stand to-morrow, but, sir, it is to me self-evident that, as our country's interests on this question are inseparably interwoven with the action of other nations, only international conference and united action of the commercial nations can even measurably solve this great problem of finance. Certainly, sir, discordant legislation will shut out from us all hope of reaching a solution, and in that view, with a lively faith, with hope of the best results, I submit the joint resolution to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent to say a word on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BLAND. Only a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must indicate a time.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes.

Mr. CARR. I object.

Mr. BLAND. I rise then to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is if the motion to reconsider prevails I would like to understand whether the substitute will then be pending together with the original joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider the vote shall fail then the joint resolution will fall of course. Of course if the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was rejected should prevail, then the next question will be upon its passage. But the Chair supposes the gentleman from Missouri wants to know how he can get at a motion to amend the joint resolution. The Chair would recognize any one to move a reconsideration then, but the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to its third reading, and if that motion should prevail the joint resolution would then be open to amendment.

Mr. FORT. There are some of us who want to kill the joint resolution, and I would suggest that the Chair state also that a vote against the motion to reconsider will help to kill it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say in further reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that a vote in the negative on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was rejected will kill it.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have not yielded for any such motion.

Mr. SAVAGE. The gentleman is obliged to yield to it, for he does hold the floor.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent to be heard for one minute on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CARR. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair has no power to grant the gentleman that leave.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. SAVAGE; and upon a division there were—ayes 89, noes 64.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. O'BRIEN called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 26 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, there being 35 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The vote on ordering tellers is sufficient to order the yeas and nays, and if there be no objection the yeas and nays will be regarded as ordered.

There being no objection, the yeas and nays were ordered accordingly.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 104, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Baker, Bell, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horace C. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cannon, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Wigginton, and Woodburn—59.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to report, from the Committee on Appropriations, a bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order during the morning hour, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent to make the report at this time.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the report is not now in order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. How much of the morning hour is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eleven minutes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA 3.65 BONDS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3689) to prevent default or delay in the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized by an act of Congress approved June 20, 1874.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in order to carry out the pledge, upon the part of the United States, in section 7 of an act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," and in order to prevent default or delay in payment of the interest on the bonds authorized by said act, which interest is, by an act approved February 20, 1875, amending said act of June 20, 1874, made payable at the Treasury of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the interest on said bonds, when and as the same shall mature, at the Treasury of the United States and at the office of the assistant treasurer in New York. To re-imburse the United States, the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, are hereby directed to transfer to the United States Treasury the sums advanced for the payment of the semi-annual interest falling due on said bonds from any revenues of the District subject to their requisition.

The amendments reported from the committee were to strike out in line 17 the words "in office," and to insert in line 18, after the words "United States Treasury," the words "on or before the 15th day of June of each year;" so that that portion of the bill would read as follows:

To re-imburse the United States, the commissioners of the District, or their successors, are hereby directed to transfer to the United States Treasury, on or before the 15th day of June of each year, the sums advanced for the payment of the semi-annual interest falling due on said bonds from any revenues of the District subject to their requisition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is that the bill makes a permanent appropriation of money for a specific object.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is in error in stating that this bill provides for the appropriation of any money. It is simply a bill to carry out existing law, which existing law makes it obligatory on the part of the Government to pay the interest on certain bonds, which interest is to be re-imbursed from the revenues of the District of Columbia. The bill does not make any appropriation of money at all; I call the attention of the Chair to that fact.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be heard on that point a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear both gentlemen.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair will perceive that this bill places these District of Columbia bonds on the same footing as other bonds issued by the United States, and makes a permanent appropriation of money for the purpose of paying the interest on them. No further annual appropriation will be required. These bonds are simply bonds upon which the Government has made certain guarantees. Even if these guarantees are construed as requiring an appropriation to be made, a bill for that purpose must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. This is not simply an annual appropriation, but a permanent appropriation, placing these bonds on exactly the same footing with the bonds issued by the United States in the exercise of its powers.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The argument of the gentleman is conclusive against himself. The interest upon the bonds of the United States is not provided for by ordinary appropriations directly, but it is paid when the interest accrues out of the Treasury without any specific action upon our part. Now these bonds are precisely of the same character. The proposition now submitted from the Committee of Ways and Means, which was unanimously adopted by them to-day, is to place these bonds, so far as the payment of interest is concerned, in precisely the same attitude, so that no specific appropriation by Congress will be required semi-annually for the purpose of carrying out the existing pledge of the Government. There is, however, in this case the additional merit that the amount which the Government is semi-annually to disburse for the payment of this interest is to be re-imbursed from taxes collected upon the property of the District of Columbia itself.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the gentleman's own argument is conclusive in favor of the point of order. He admits that this bill proposes a permanent appropriation, standing on the same footing with any other permanent appropriation of the Government.

The SPEAKER. This bill embraces two clauses. The first provides for the payment of money, the amount not being stated, it is true, but sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds issued by the District of Columbia under the authority of Congress. This first clause is therefore not only an appropriation of money but an appropriation for all time until the principal of this debt shall be paid. The second clause provides a separate and distinct manner in which the Government of the United States shall be re-imbursed from the taxes of this District for the money that may be paid out of the Treasury under the authority of this bill in the payment of interest on these bonds.

Now Rule 112 provides that "all bills touching appropriations of money or property shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole." The Chair is of the opinion that this bill in the first clause not only "touches an appropriation of money" but in fact makes an appropriation not only for one year but for all time. The bill is in effect a permanent appropriation of money from the Treasury. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The bill must first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. Not quite.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If the morning hour has expired, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill reported by me.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not yet expired; there are two minutes of it remaining. Reports are still in order from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to inquire whether I shall be recognized at the expiration of the morning hour to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that such a motion would be in order; but that he is already under obligation to recognize two other gentlemen on privileged reports, one of them involving a question of privilege.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to say that, after that business shall be disposed of, I propose to make my motion.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now expired.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. SPARKS. I am instructed by the special committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House in reference to counting the electoral votes to offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk, and upon its adoption move the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That with respect to any or all subjects to be considered by the special committee of the House on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, (before the reading of the resolution was concluded.) I desire to reserve the point of order whether the committee have the privilege of reporting this resolution at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the resolution will be concluded, after which it will of course be open to any point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it be understood that all points of order are reserved.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the resolution.

Mr. SPARKS. Upon the adoption of this resolution I ask the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the resolution is not a privileged one, and I object to it. It cannot be introduced now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let it be read again.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution proposing to confer additional powers upon this committee. It does not come within the leave given to the committee to report at any time in pursuance of the authority to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House in reference to a particular subject-matter. This is merely a resolution proposing to give the committee additional powers. If the resolution should be entertained, I would desire to say a word or two as to the necessity or propriety of adopting it; but it would not be proper to discuss that question at present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the resolution creating this committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The point which it appears to me lies against this resolution is this: standing and select committees have under the rules certain powers; and any resolution extending those powers must in effect be a suspension of the rules, and, therefore, requires either unanimous consent or (when a motion to suspend the rules is in order) a two thirds vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the original resolution creating the committee.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir; that should be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there are differences of opinion as to the proper mode of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and as to the manner of determining questions that may arise as to the legality and validity of returns made of such votes by the several States;

And whereas it is of the utmost importance that all differences of opinion and all doubt and uncertainty upon these questions should be removed, to the end therefore that the votes may be counted and the result declared by a tribunal whose authority none can question and whose decision all will accept as final: Therefore

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, to act in conjunction with any similar committee that may be appointed by the Senate, to prepare and report without delay such a measure, either legislative or constitutional, as may in their judgment be best calculated to accomplish the desired end, and that said committee have leave to report at any time; and that the Clerk of this House inform the Senate of the adoption of this resolution.

Resolved, That a committee of seven members be appointed by the Speaker of this House to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, and that said committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. My point of order is that this resolution is not a report from the committee on the subject-matter which they were authorized to investigate, nor does it claim to be. It is an independent resolution proposing to confer additional powers and privileges upon the committee, and must stand precisely as though for the first time it was proposed to create a committee or confer powers upon it.

It is a new proceeding relating to powers just as though it had never begun, and is in no sense a report from that committee on the subject-matters committed to it. They can only get this new power by unanimous consent, or by a suspension of the rules, and I object to unanimous consent.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Additional power, Mr. Speaker, was conferred upon this committee by a resolution of the House which was adopted Monday a week ago, on motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WILLIS,] and I suggest that it would be well to have that additional authority, or the resolution conferring it, read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause it to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States be, and said committee hereby are, instructed to ascertain whether any votes were given at the recent election contrary to the prohibition contained in the first section of the second article of the Constitution, and what ought to be done with them; and whether any, and what, provision ought to be made for securing the faithful observance in the future of said section of the Constitution; and also to inquire into any facts affecting the fairness or legality of any electoral vote certified to have been cast in said election; and that the committee, for the purpose of such ascertainment, and inquiry, have power to send for persons and papers, and examine witnesses.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That confers this power upon the committee now beyond all question.

Mr. SPARKS. The resolution last read confers upon the committee the power to send for persons and papers with respect to a certain examination mentioned therein. But with respect to the subject-matter of the examination as embraced in the original resolution of the rights, powers, and privileges of the House, the committee find an impediment in the way. They do not find, as they conceive, that they have the power conferred upon them by that resolution to carry out the objects of the examination by the way of calling for persons and papers. Now, to remedy that defect, to remove all obstructions in the way, they make this report of the facts to the House, and ask that this additional power be conferred upon them, in order that they may carry into effect the objects designed according to the spirit of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair conceives argument as to the propriety of adopting the resolution is not in order.

Mr. SPARKS. I am speaking to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the propriety of adopting the resolution is distinct from the point of order as to whether the committee has the power of executing an order heretofore given by the House.

Mr. SPARKS. We report these facts by the resolution now before the House and ask for its adoption in order that we may be enabled to give effect to the spirit of the resolution under which we derive our authority to act.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that discussion of a point of order would permit within its scope what he must respectfully describe as argument going to the merits of the question.

The Constitution of the United States, in a certain contingency, provides that this House shall elect a President of the United States, and the Chair considers that to be a question of the very highest privilege, going to the rights, powers, and privileges of this House. But in addition to that, by resolutions which have been read within the hearing of the House, power to report at any time has been expressly conferred upon this committee. The Chair therefore decides that the resolution pending before the House is a question of privilege, the committee having by authority of the House the right to report at any time, in addition to the fact that the question itself involves matters of the very highest privilege.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The Chair does not rule the point is not well taken: that is to say, that it is not the right of the committee under its resolution of appointment, but as an independent proposition and as a question of privilege, that the gentleman from Illinois has the right to report this resolution from the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states that under the Constitution of the United States, in a certain contingency, this House of Representatives elects the President of the United States. That clearly is a question of the very highest privilege. The question of the powers, duties, and privileges of this House in connection with that provision of the Constitution have been referred to this committee, and by resolution of this House that committee was given the power to report at any time. Therefore the Chair can reach no other conclusion than to overrule the point of order and to decide that the report at this time is in order as a question of privilege.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Constitution gives the House of Representatives power to make its own rules, and yet the Chair would not recognize any member to propose under that constitutional sanction any amendment to the rules, unless introduced on Monday and referred and reported back from the Committee on Rules. Here is the difficulty in which the ruling of the Chair will involve us. They do not report relative to the subject-matter, but they propose a suspension of the rules of the House in their report. I recollect one of your predecessors [Mr. BLAINE] ruled, when a constitutional point was raised, that he was called upon to rule upon the rules of the House, not upon the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only stated, and again repeats, that the Constitution of the United States provides in a certain contingency that a President of the United States shall be elected by this House of Representatives and that was of itself a question of the very highest privilege. There he stopped, so far as that point is concerned. But this committee is already empowered to report at any time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is true, but next Monday, when a motion to suspend the rules can be entertained, this thing would be in order.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but under the rules of the House that is a second branch of this subject. The House has given permission to this committee to report at any time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes; on the subject-matter referred to them.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I understand the ruling of the Chair it is this: that any resolution offered here that relates to the rights of the House concerning the election of President, must be privileged. I do not see how else he puts it. The Chair does not plant his decision on the resolution creating the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be able to read exactly what the Chair said, in the RECORD, to-morrow, and then he will be able to see that the Chair has not gone so far as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GARFIELD. I listened very attentively to the remarks of the Chair. The point I made was, that the report on the resolution offered is not a report touching the election of President, or touching the rights of the House in that regard; but is a simple resolution conferring an unusual power upon a committee; that it is just the same as a resolution which should be offered by the gentleman from Illinois himself, without the instructions of the committee behind him. The Chair rules that the point made so far as related to the mere question of privilege under the rule was good, but that the Constitution——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not make any such ruling as that.

Mr. GARFIELD. But that the Constitution made this a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will permit the Chair to interrupt him. The Chair did not make any such decision as the gentleman from Ohio has just stated. But the Chair is now willing to hear an amended point of order by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think that I want to amend the point of order; but I fear the Chair did not understand the point of order which I made, which was that this resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois has no privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know the Chair does. But my point is that this is not a report from that committee upon the subject on which they were authorized to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair was allowed to lay any weight on what was stated as matter of information, he might remark that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] distinctly stated that it was to execute their duties in connection with the subject confided to them that this resolution was offered.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the Chair allow me to inquire if the original resolution creating this committee was itself a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that it was.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not understand that it was privileged, because a committee reported it when it was called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was reported from the Judiciary Committee, as was shown by the reading of the resolution this morning.

The SPEAKER. By consent, and not in order; but the Chair thinks that is not material.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the original resolution creating that committee was not privileged, then this resolution giving additional powers is not privileged.

Mr. SPARKS. It is privileged because the original resolution authorized the committee to report at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. On the subject committed to them.

Mr. SPARKS. And what is that subject? The privileges, rights, and duties of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. They come and ask, as any other committee may, a special power——

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a question of order. Is this debate in order? Is there any point of order before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair wished to hear anything that the gentleman from Ohio desired to say on the point of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] now wishes to know if there is any point of order pending. There is not.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment? I desire on behalf of the minority of the committee to say a word.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask that the resolution may again be reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I ask my colleague to yield to me for a moment or two.

Mr. SPARKS. I would like to oblige my colleague of course, but there is serious objection all around me to doing so. I must insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The gentleman himself has the control of the resolution.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 138, noes 69.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I call for tellers; and pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, on a division by sound the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the noes had it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I will not insist on further count if my colleague will allow me a few moments.

Mr. SPARKS. How long does my colleague want.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Five minutes.

Mr. SPARKS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. All that I desire to say in regard to the pending resolution is that the original instructions under which that committee was formed merely referred a legal and constitutional question to the committee, namely, to ascertain what are the powers, privileges, and duties of the House of Representatives. In my judgment, there is no earthly necessity for sending for persons and papers to investigate that question.

Upon any other question referred to the committee there is full and ample power to send for persons and papers, and I cannot understand the necessity under that branch of the resolution for investing this committee with the power to send for persons and papers. We can have access to all the law-books in the country if it be deemed necessary, but the committee has, under the powers granted to it by the three resolutions which have been read, the power to investigate questions and to send for persons and papers to an extent which will occupy its time until the 4th of March next. It has power to investigate—and I will not say that it is not unwilling to exercise that power, for in doing so I might expose the proceedings of the committee—but I will say that it has the power to examine, and perhaps it will exercise that power to examine, all the questions referred to other committees, the committee on the election in Florida, the committee on the election in Louisiana, the committee on the election in South Carolina; all the questions relating to the fairness and legality of every election can be investigated by this committee, and they can send for persons and papers; and they may be willing to assume the exercise of that power and send for persons and papers and take jurisdiction of those questions which have been referred by the House to other committees, consisting of twenty-seven members.

The committee having all the work to do that it can do, being in fact overloaded with work, being ready and having the power to investigate all these questions which have been referred to other committees, I do not desire to have additional powers conferred upon and other duties imposed upon the committee. That, sir, is all I desire to say as to the reason why I shall vote against conferring these increased powers upon the committee.

The main question was then ordered, being upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 70, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bell, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Reilly, Rice, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Singleton, Spencer, Springer, Stephens, Washington Townsend, Waddell, Walling, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wigginton, and Willard—71.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WIGGINTON, and the gentleman from Oregon, Mr. LANE, are both detained from the House by sickness; if here they would vote "ay."

Mr. EDEN. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. SPRINGER, is absent serving upon the committee on the electoral vote; if present he would vote "ay."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 767) for the relief of Samuel B. Stanbar and others; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4155) amending the act of July 28, 1876, entitled "An act for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, of Saint Louis, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 1071) for the relief of H. E. Woodhouse & Co., of Brownsville, Texas; and

A bill (S. No. 967) for the relief of Nicholas Wax, Michael Granary, and Moline Lange.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. HOUSE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed for the use of the committee appointed to investigate the recent election in Louisiana certain testimony taken by that committee.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted.

RECUSANT WITNESSES—RETURNING BOARD OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. LYNDE, (from the Clerk's desk.) The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration the report of the select committee, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, in relation to the contempt and breach of the privileges of this House by J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Louis M. Kenner, in refusing to produce to said committee certain papers mentioned in a subpœna duces tecum duly served upon them and each of them, would respectfully submit the following report:

The committee instructed by the House to investigate the recent election in the State of Louisiana, and the action of the returning or canvassing board in said State in reference thereto, and to report all the facts essential to an honest return of the votes received by the electors of said State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and to a fair understanding thereof by the people, with power to send for persons and papers, have reported to the House that J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Lewis M. Kenner, claiming to be the returning board of canvassers for said State, have refused to obey a subpœna duces tecum, duly issued and served upon them, commanding them to appear before the committee now sitting in New Orleans and bring with them "all returns of elections, all consolidated statements of supervisors of elections, all statement of votes, and tally-sheets for each polling-place at the late election for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, together with all affidavits, depositions, protests, and other written proofs in their possession or under their control, touching the said election in certain parishes," naming them.

The witnesses refusing to obey the subpœna have sent a written communication to the investigating committee, claiming that these papers are "a part of the records of the returning officers of elections for the State of Louisiana and are in the possession of the returning officers in their official capacity;" and submit that "the board of returning officers of elections for Louisiana is a body created by the laws of Louisiana, with specific and well-defined duties, partly ministerial and partly quasi-judicial; that their action under the law of their creation is final to the extent provided by the law, and is not subject to review by any State or national tribunal."

Your committee do not feel called upon at this time to express an opinion upon the question as to whether "the action of the returning officers is subject to review by any State or national tribunal."

The Constitution of the United States, article 2, section 1, provides that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress."

This clause of the Constitution not only secures to each State the right to appoint electors in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct, but it secures to the United States the right to require that the persons claiming to act as electors for any State shall have been appointed in such manner as the Legislature of the State shall have directed. The power to ascertain that fact is, and must be, in Congress, and if legislation is necessary to carry out this provision of the Constitution, Congress alone has the power to legislate upon the subject.

Public rumor charges fraud and perjury and violations of law in the appointment of the electors in the State of Louisiana, and that the electors who have been returned were not appointed in such manner as the Legislature of the State has directed, and this House has decided to investigate these charges. The investigating committee has subpœnaed these witnesses for the purpose of ascertaining whether those papers show that the charges are true or false, and whether the electors returned by the returning officers have been appointed in compliance with the requirements of the Constitution of the United States. Your committee are of the opinion that these charges are within the power and duty of the House to investigate, and that the returning officers, either in their individual or official capacity, cannot conceal fraudulent acts or violations of law in the appointment of electors for the office of President or Vice-President of the United States under the claim that in perpetrating the fraud or violating the law they were acting in an official capacity as State officers.

Courts sometimes excuse public officers from producing papers in their possession and custody upon the ground of public convenience, and substitute secondary evidence or copies of such papers for the original. But it is a rule adopted for public convenience and is never applied when the original is necessary, as in a case of forgery or perjury, or when the original alone can answer the purpose and object of the investigation.

If it be true that frauds have been perpetrated and the law has been violated, and copies of the papers were furnished to the investigating committee without the opportunity to inspect the originals, it would be in the power of the board to conceal the frauds and cover up the violations of law. It is true that courts do not require public officers to disclose secrets of state, but here are no state secrets; these papers relate to the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States and are public in their character, and every American citizen is interested in them. Your committee do not recognize the right of any citizen or officer, whether Federal or State, to defeat an investigation of either House which may involve the existence of the Government by refusing to appear and testify. If a State officer can be compelled to appear before a committee of this House appointed to investigate a question involving the existence of the Government, then it is for the House to determine when the power shall be exercised.

This House having appointed a committee to investigate these charges, your committee are of opinion that J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Lewis M. Kenner, in refusing to obey the writ of subpœna duces tecum to appear and bring with them certain papers named in the writ, have violated the privilege of this House. They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House issue a warrant under his hand and the seal of the House of Representatives, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, either by himself or his special deputy, to arrest and bring to the bar of the House without delay J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Lewis M. Kenner to answer for a contempt of the authority of this House and a breach of privilege in refusing to produce to the special committee of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, now sitting in New Orleans, certain papers in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum which was duly served upon them, and to be dealt with as the law under the facts may require.

Mr. LYNDE. I now call the previous question on the adoption of the resolution which has just been read by the Clerk.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would inquire of the gentleman if it is his purpose to allow any debate on this question?

Mr. LYNDE. Yes; I will claim my hour and will give to gentlemen on the other side half of the hour to debate this question. I have already offered to give that time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] a member of the Judiciary Committee, who can divide it as he thinks best.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to suggest that this report is a very important one both in its legal and its constitutional relations. I ask gentlemen to let the report be printed and to allow a reasonable time for debate. For one, I am not willing that this House, with but one short hour for debate immediately upon the first reading of the report, shall proceed to its consideration and decision. And in order to save the time of the House, which will be far better saved in debating than in resisting immediate action upon this resolution, I hope the gentleman will allow the report to be printed and give a few hours for debate.

For one, I will not consent that this resolution shall now be acted upon, with the previous question as a gag upon it before we begin to debate it. I hope the gentleman will allow it to go over and be printed. I will say that three hours for debate will be enough, divided between the two sides of the House equally; certainly one hour is not enough. Let this resolution be made a special order for any time that the House may see fit, and let the report be printed, so that we can read the paper and see what will be left of the independence of the States if this resolution shall be adopted.

Mr. LYNDE. Gentlemen are well aware that the time is rapidly passing when this special committee should report to this House, and if any action is to be taken for the purpose of obtaining the evidence which the committee seeks to obtain by this subpœna duces tecum, that action must be taken very quickly. I think that an hour's discussion of this subject would enable the House to come to an intelligent decision as to its rights and privileges and the rights of these witnesses.

I therefore must insist upon my motion for the previous question, with the understanding that if the previous question shall be sustained I will have a right to an hour for debate upon this resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say for myself—not for anybody else, for I do not know what others may do—that I shall feel it my duty to resist to the utmost any attempt to put the previous question on this resolution now. If the gentleman will fix an hour to-morrow when this subject can be considered, I will consent that we should hold an evening session to debate it rather than to have any delay. I want to do nothing to delay an early decision upon this question; but I will not consent, so far as I am concerned, to allow the previous question to be put on this resolution without some brief time for debate.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Allow me to suggest whether, should the previous question now be seconded, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] would have any right, without an order of the House, to an hour for debate, he not having made any speech in opening, and there being no speech for him to reply to in the closing hour? My understanding of the rule is that he would not have that right. The gentleman under the rule has the right to an hour to open the debate, and if there is any reply made to him then, even after the previous question is called, he would have the right to close the debate. But having made no speech in the opening, should the previous question be now called and sustained, he would have no right to any time to close debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not suppose that any member would insist that, if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] now demands the previous question and it is sustained, he will not be entitled to one hour for debate. If required to do so the Chair would again hold that a gentleman occupying one hour before demanding the previous question, and then without there being other debate demanding the previous question, would not have the right to claim another hour to close the debate.

The Chair will now take occasion to say that on to-morrow he will give his views in length upon that point, as submitted to the House on Wednesday last. The Chair may as well now state that he remains of the same opinion that he expressed at that time, and will on to-morrow give a lengthy review of the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] to allow two hours for debate at this time, with the understanding that the previous question shall operate at the end of the two hours.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does not the gentleman see that every member who speaks on this subject would be glad to speak with a little more careful consideration than he can now give the question? By waiting until to-morrow, gentlemen would have time to acquaint themselves more thoroughly with the subject and would be able to speak more wisely, justly, and satisfactorily to themselves and to all interested, than they would if compelled to start into a debate sprung here without any other notice than the reading of the report at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the time now being occupied in arranging the order and duration of the debate will not be counted as part of the hour of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that there will be no objection to our going on and discussing this question for two hours now.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is important that the report should be printed so that we may see precisely what it is. Then, to-morrow, at as early an hour as gentlemen may please to fix, we can go on and discuss the question, thus giving us this evening to look over the general authorities and enabling us in the morning, after the RECORD comes out, to see what is the report in fact.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report is very brief and the points are very clearly presented, as the gentleman from Ohio must perceive.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, they are very clearly presented on that side.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is important in the interest of the public business, as well as in regard to the progress of this investigation, that this question should be disposed of as soon as possible.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think my suggestion that three hours altogether be allowed, to be divided equally between those opposed to the report and those in favor of it, is a reasonable one.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. LYNDE. I do.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, as the Chair understands it, is that debate shall proceed now, and that at the end of two hours the gentleman from Wisconsin shall be recognized to demand the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. That would give the gentleman from Wisconsin an hour after the ordering of the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It would, unless he should occupy an hour in opening.

Mr. KASSON. And the whole time is to be equally divided.

Mr. GARFIELD. If that be the understanding, I think it will be satisfactory. If it be understood that there are to be two hours for debate before the previous question and one afterward, we will consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then state that the understanding is that debate shall now proceed for three hours, when the adoption of the resolution shall be voted on.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be that the gentleman from Wisconsin may not desire to occupy his whole hour. If the debate closes at the end of two hours and he then calls the previous question, he will occupy so much of the hour as he thinks proper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, however, understands the gentleman from Wisconsin to claim the last hour.

Mr. LYNDE. I claim the disposition of the last hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. The last hour must not be cut off.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It seems to me very desirable that this arrangement should not include the right to demand the previous question upon the resolution without an opportunity to have a vote upon amendments. Now it may happen that it may be sufficient for us to direct the committee at New Orleans to ask for an inspection of the State records and permission to have a copy, without requiring the absolute production of the originals before the committee. What I desire is that there shall be an opportunity to offer amendments so as to modify the proposition of the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is entirely within the province of the House; the Chair has nothing to do with that.

Mr. KASSON. I will ask the Chair to state again the proposition, which I believe embraces everything that everybody desires. It is, I believe, that the debate shall be open for three hours and then a vote shall be taken on seconding the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The debate is to run for two hours, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. The understanding is that the debate shall run for two hours; that then the gentleman from Wisconsin will demand the previous question, and if it is sustained he will control the last hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. Which he agrees to divide equally between the friends and opponents of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with that; but if the gentleman from Wisconsin embraces it as a part of the proposition the Chair will repeat it.

Mr. LYNDE. The proposition which I accepted, and which I understand was submitted to the House, was to give two hours before the previous question for the purpose of debate. I cannot consent that these two hours shall be occupied for any other purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood and so repeated the proposition to the House. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] proposed to vary that; but the Chair did not understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. This arrangement does not preclude the right to offer amendments at all.

The SPEAKER. The power to allow amendments is entirely within the control of the House; it is not within the province of the Chair to control that subject. If the House should vote down the previous question, then of course the resolution will be open to amendment, not otherwise.

Mr. LYNDE. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

EMIGRATION.

Mr. HEREFORD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3853) to regulate emigration; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

RECUSANT WITNESSES—RETURNING BOARD OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, I do not take the floor for the purpose of discussing at any length the question which is now before the House; but as this appears to be a report of the Judiciary Committee, I wish to state that when the resolution was adopted no members on the republican side of the House were present in the committee-room. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] was necessarily with the House committee on the electoral vote; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] were necessarily detained before the joint committee; and I was called away just as the vote was to be taken. I do not speak of this as a censure at all upon the committee, because it was understood that they should proceed to consider the resolution and have a vote taken upon it. But it did seem to me necessary that as a member of the Judiciary Committee I should state to the House and to the country that, so far as I was personally concerned, I did not assent to this report. On the contrary, it seems to me that the doctrine announced in it is a monstrous one. What is it? It is that there is no paper, and no record, there are no archives, there is no officer in the whole United States of America, not subject to the control of a committee of this House of Representatives.

There is no sovereignty whatever anywhere which is not subject to be called before a committee of the House of Representatives and compelled to produce its records—all of its papers. Not copies, but its original papers and its original records.

I know that gentlemen say in the report that secondary evidence is not required and will not be taken in this case, because public rumor charges fraud upon the officers of the State of Louisiana who had this business in their hands to conduct. Well, sir, public rumor then, if the necessity comes for the production of papers, may charge fraud upon any officer in the United States of America and thus compel any officer, and any State, and any court to produce all of the originals, all of its records before a committee of the House of Representatives.

I know the report says that in case of forgery you must produce the original. Then all that is necessary under that report is for public rumor to charge forgery and then nothing is sacred against the committee whose duty it is to investigate.

Now, sir, I do not believe in that doctrine, and I cannot assent to it, no matter if the times do seem to require that information shall be had from the State of Louisiana.

I hold, sir, to the contrary doctrine, that this Congress has no more to do with the returning board of the State of Louisiana than I as an individual have. I hold that the returning board of Louisiana, having been legally constituted under the authority of the Constitution of the United States and having proceeded with its duty under the law of the State of Louisiana, having made its return, that return having been authorized by law, we are precluded from going behind it. And the only authority we have is the general good of the country, the public weal, in inquiring whether or not in the State of Louisiana there is a condition of things which Congress ought to take notice of. It is not whether or not the returning board of Louisiana have fulfilled their duty, and their entire duty, in counting the votes which were brought before them, but whether or not there is a condition of things in the State of Louisiana which calls for the attention of the Congress of the United States. On that question I should at once assent that there was a condition of things there which required congressional intervention, if we have a right to intervene, and prevent murder, and outrage, and every other barbarism known in the wide world.

Sir, the Constitution of the United States says that each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, &c. Under the authority of that Constitution the State of Louisiana, by its Legislature, provided for this very returning board which is now under discussion in this House.

I do not know of any particular in which that Legislature violated the Constitution of our country in creating that returning board. I do believe that a returning board, created as that has been and with the quasi-judicial powers that returning board has been clothed with, was an absolute necessity for a free exercise of the right of suffrage in the State of Louisiana. I do believe that there is a purpose, and for eight years has been a purpose, fixed, determinate, certain, absolute, that certain citizens in the State of Louisiana shall not be permitted to exercise the right of suffrage, notwithstanding the Constitution of the United States guarantees to them that right; and I believe, sir, that they are prevented from the exercise of that right by murder, by blows, by every conceivable outrage; and I say, and it has been proven over and over again—the witnesses are by the thousands and tens of thousands, and no man can doubt to-day—that those terrible outrages have been committed in that State for the purpose of preventing the exercise of that right guaranteed by the Constitution.

To protect American citizens in their constitutional rights, this Legislature made that returning board quasi-judicial in its character, and not only authorized, but compelled by law that returning board to investigate these questions of fraud, of intimidation, of murder. In certain cases, as the law prescribes, in the performance of the duty which the Legislature placed upon that State returning board, it was the law that certain returns should be made to it; that certain consolidated returns should be made to it; certain testimony should be taken before it. And this committee calls for returns of all the papers, of all the affidavits, that are in the hands and possession of the Louisiana returning board, a court created by the authority of the constitution by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana.

It has always seemed to me that in some things States were supreme, and that in some things the United States was supreme; that in the protection of its archives the Congress of the United States had no more authority to take those papers and records, and bring them out from the jurisdiction of the State and to the city of Washington, than the State of Louisiana has in return to take the papers of the United States and carry them to the State of Louisiana. And it seems to me that gentlemen on the other side have held to that doctrine for a good many years.

I believe that that is one of the rights of a State; and for State rights we have had one war. Now is it possible that the gentlemen who went into war for State rights have been so far converted by defeat in that war that to-day they are ready to say that a committee of Congress may go within the borders of a State, may go within its courts, may go within its returning board, may go within its governor and council, and take from them any records, any original papers they may desire to inspect? If they are, then that war taught them more than I have been supposing it did teach them.

Why, sir, in the case of Aaron Burr—which will be brought up in this discussion beyond any question—when a demand was made upon Thomas Jefferson to produce certain original papers before the court, Thomas Jefferson did not produce the papers. He never produced the papers. He produced copies, as this returning board has agreed it will do. Now, sir, I concede that Thomas Jefferson may have been a much greater man and a much better man than the members of this returning board.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether, in the case of Jefferson, the question was not whether he should appear, he being President, rather than whether the papers or copies should be furnished?

Mr. FRYE. One question was whether the President of the United States could be subpœnaed to appear, and the other was whether he could be compelled to produce papers, as I understand it; and I have his letter here before me in which he says that the Executive has certain rights which even Congress is bound to respect. In the latter part of his letter he says:

> With respect to papers, there is certainly a public and private side to our offices—

Not to the office of President, but "our offices"—

> To the former belong grants of land, patents for inventions, certain commissions, proclamations, and other papers patent in their nature. To the other belong mere executive proceedings. All nations have found it necessary that, for the advantageous conduct of their affairs, some of these proceedings, at least, should remain known to their executive functionary only. He, of course, from the nature of the case, must be the sole judge of which of them the public interest will permit publication.

Again:

> The respect mutually due between the constituted authorities in their official intercourse, as well as sincere dispositions to do for every one what is just, will always insure from the Executive, in exercising the duty of discrimination confided to him, the same candor and integrity to which the nation has in like manner trusted in the disposal of its judiciary authorities.

Now, sir, the reply to that here is, that public rumor says that the officers of the returning board have committed fraud. Prima facie officers do not commit fraud. Prima facie they stand here as Jefferson stood then; and until fraud is shown, certainly you have no right to assume fraud, and then to say under that assumption that you can command the production of the original papers, and will not be satisfied with secondary evidence, or the copies.

I do not cite Thomas Jefferson as authority. I only cite him to show that he held some very foolish antiquated notions. Now hear Andrew Jackson. Here is what he says:

> The heads of Departments may answer such requests as they please, provided they do not withhold their own time and that of the officers under their direction from public business to the injury thereof to that business. I shall direct them to devote themselves to their duties in preference to any illegal and unconstitutional call for information, no matter from what source it may come—

Even a congressional committee—> no matter from what source it may come and however anxious they may be to meet it. For myself, I shall repel all such attempts as an invasion of the principles of justice as well as of the Constitution, and I shall esteem it my sacred duty to the people of the United States to resist them as I would the establishment of a Spanish inquisition.

How unfortunate for the Forty-fourth Congress it would have been if Andrew Jackson had been President of the United States instead of Ulysses S. Grant. I do not cite Andrew Jackson as authority, because there seems to be no authority on earth to-day except the authority of a committee of the House of Representatives, against which there is nothing sacred, who even to-day are committing the indecency of demanding from national committees their whole manner of conducting a national political campaign, their whole correspondence, all of their telegrams, their whole money collections, all the dispositions of the money I suppose. I am happy to say as a member of the national committee of the republican party that my advice was to the witness to put in everything that there was—books, letters, telegrams, everything—for I knew perfectly well that there was nothing there which would indicate fraud in Louisiana or Louisiana returning boards, or in Florida or in South Carolina. I knew, sir, that we believe, as we believe in our existence, that we had carried those three States honestly and fairly, and that they would be counted for Rutherford B. Hayes unless the democratic party of those States and the United States stole by fraud the votes of those States from us. [Ironical applause and hisses on the floor and in the galleries.] I hope the galleries will not help that side of the House in this debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Or this.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER in the chair.) Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I do not think the gentleman has a right to charge the democratic party with stealing when his committee robbed the poor widows and orphans in the Treasury Department to carry on the campaign. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There must be order in the Hall.

Mr. LUTTRELL. He has no right to make that charge when they robbed in that way women working to support their families. When democrats control the Government, I trust they will never be parties to any such proceeding.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from California desired to ask me a question and I did not know when I gave him the liberty to ask a question that he wanted to insert here a little demagogical stump speech which would meet the approval of the galleries on the other side.

Mr. LUTTRELL What I stated is true. Do you deny it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman from Maine is on the committee, and he knows that an assessment was levied upon these poor widows and they were compelled to pay it or lose their places.

Mr. FRYE. There is a committee now made up of members of this House, intelligent members of this House, who are investigating that very subject and have summoned witnesses from the national republican committee to inform them whether they did steal money from these poor widows. Now, that committee will find out and answer that question.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman knows they did assess these poor widows, and they were compelled to pay it or lose their positions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor, and the gentleman from California has no right to interrupt him without his consent.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Well, sir, did not he bull-doze the Department clerks? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. Speaker, as this interruption has occurred, it compels me to say, and as I have been challenged to say it, compels me to say it, that we never did assess, demand, or ask for contributions from any such persons as the gentleman has described. On the contrary, we sent out a very polite request—— [Laughter and hisses upon the democratic side of the House and in the galleries.]

Hold on one moment before you laugh. We sent forth that polite request to gentlemen who had been commissioned by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate to help us run the campaign, and I believe, and I have not so much fear of civil service as to hesitate to say that I believe, that if there are any men who should contribute to run a campaign they are the men who hold public office by the gift of the President and confirmed by the Senate of the United States. I do not believe in levying contributions upon any man, but in asking for them.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Was it not understood that everybody who refused to make those contributions politely requested should be removed from office? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. It was not so understood, and I say further that there never was an office-holder asked twice to contribute.

Mr. LUTTRELL. No, sir; because he dare not refuse the first time. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. There never was a suggestion made that any man should make contribution, or that any man should be punished for refusing to make contribution, and there never was any contribution levied upon the Department clerks whatever.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been led so far away from the poor returning board of the unfortunate State of Louisiana that I will not attempt to retrace my steps, but will leave the further discussion of this question to abler men than I am, and men who have also examined the subject.

Mr. LYNDE. I yield now to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not design to answer what might be called rodomontade of the gentleman from Maine. He made no argument which in any way took from the force, tenor, and effect of this able report. He made no allusion which was not properly answered by the badinage of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] and by the ironical cheers of the gallery.

The point now before the House is simply this: Shall the authority of this House be disregarded by the returning board of Louisiana? There is no other question. We send out our committee. They have the right to send for persons and papers. They have the right to issue subpœna duces tecum. And if there be one thing which they should search carefully and faithfully, it should be with a subpœna duces tecum for the returns and reports made as to the Louisiana election. What else can they do but that? Name something that can be more relevant to this investigation than to bring forward these very original returns. Can the gentleman from Maine or any other member conceive of anything more thoroughly pertinent to the examination into a Federal election than an examination of the returns themselves? This was not a State election. This was an election involving the election of Federal officers who were to cast their votes for President and Vice-President of the Union. It involves the sanctions of rights and duties under the twelfth amendment of the Constitution. We are bound as Congressmen to see that these returns were fair and honest, and it comes with an ill grace from the gentleman from Maine, or from any gentleman on that side of the House, after their own committee from the Senate have gone down there and gone beneath the prima facie specifications, to say that you shall not have the originals of these papers.

Non constat that they are not forgeries; let us have them therefore to inspect. Non constat that they are not more or less mutilated; let us have them to inspect and find out if that be so.

For all that appears, for all that we know of this returning board, a priori we should infer that it was bad, bad all through, bad all over, the worst of all the boards we ever had in this country in connection with elections. A committee of this House heretofore have spoken of that board. Was the gentleman from Maine on that committee? And what did he say about it? Did he not say that he believed it was arbitrary, that it had acted illegally? Did he not believe that it was a bad board?

Mr FRYE. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I did not join in any report that said that that board was arbitrary; I joined in no report that said it was a bad board. The section of the committee with which I was associated declared—I may not use the exact words, but I give the substance—that in their opinion the members of that board were honest men, men who intended to deal honestly, and simply proceeded under a misapprehension of the law.

Mr. COX. That is it! [Laughter.] Has it come to this, that after that committee had indorsed that report which was read here, signed by GEORGE F. HOAR, chairman, with the word "adopted" written on it; when it was signed by two republicans and one democrat, if I remember aright—after all that, and when we ascertained by subsequent examination that there was something worse than mere misapprehension of law, when we found that this misapprehension of law was built on stubble, or worse, built on rottenness, then the gentleman from Maine comes forward and says to this House, that it was only "a misapprehension of law." Yes, there has been too much misapprehension of law on your side.

Mr. FRYE. Has there been any on yours?

Mr. COX. Certainly, very frequently, but not corrupt. But I am ready to show that by the report of your own committee, again and again adopted, according to a report made and signed by GEORGE F. HOAR, "the committee thereupon voted to adopt the report." The gentleman was one of the committee. What does the word "adopt" mean? Why, it means to swallow it whole. [Laughter.] What does that committee say? They say in their report:

> We are constrained to declare that the action of the returning board on the whole was arbitrary, unjust, and in our opinion illegal, and that this arbitrary, unjust, and illegal action alone prevented the return by the board of a majority of conservative members of the lower house.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. COX. I do not know how long my time is; that depends upon the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Mr. LYNDE.]

Mr. FRYE. The time of the gentleman was not limited. I suppose the gentleman does not want to misrepresent.

Mr. COX. Certainly not.

Mr. FRYE. Messrs. HOAR, WHEELER, and FRYE never agreed to and never adopted the language which the gentleman from New York has just read. That is contained in the report of Messrs. Phelps, FOSTER, and Potter, and as they were in the minority, Mr. HOAR'S name was put to it simply for the purpose of affording that minority an opportunity to bring that report before the House and have it printed. And this statement which I have just made has twice been made during the present session of this House.

Mr. COX. Now, I would like to know from republicans of this House whether Mr. CHARLES FOSTER is not a tolerable good republican? [Laughter.] And I would ask whether William Walter Phelps does not hold a fine position of standing in the republican party? Is he not your peer as a republican? Was he not the pet of a republican House? And of all the republicans of this House, who was looked to for advice and counsel, for beauty of face and elegance of deportment, if it was not CHARLES FOSTER, of Ohio? [Great laughter.] Yet the gentleman from Maine makes an attack upon this committee, a majority of them signing this subreport, and all of them voting to adopt it. Ah! methinks it comes rather late for the gentleman to now disavow what has been said so solemnly by the committee and what has been accepted by the country.

But my point was not so much to call in question at this time the returning board of the State of Louisiana. I rose at this time for the purpose of making this point: that a priori we might have inferred by reasonable probability and the antecedents that it was a bad board; that it needed overhauling; that the papers and returns and documents in the possession of that board should have personal inspection; that they should be made profert to your committee; that if necessary they should be brought here.

Sir, what depends upon this? Why, the inauguration of the President of forty-five millions of people. On it hang all our business interests, now suspended and paralyzed. On it hang our thirty billions of value. On it hang, I was about to say, peace and war. On it hang all the issues that belong to true honest government.

What can be more important than the ballot? It is the basis of all, the foundation of all liberty. Lord Holt (Ashby vs. White) two hundred years ago, I think—though in that I may be mistaken—in a leading case, in giving the right to sue for a ballot illegally rejected, said that it was the most transcendent right of man; that on it law was based, and personal liberty, life, and property depended upon it. Yet when all these great interests are involved, when with all their magnitude they confront us, we are told by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] O, you cannot see the returns of this pious, good returning board of Louisiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr COX] has expired.

Mr. LYNDE. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] for ten minutes.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I should have been glad if the proposition to let this debate stand over until to-morrow morning had been accepted. The question presented is so exceedingly grave in point of constitutional law that I feel it is a burden upon any gentleman of the House, not a member of the committee, to be required to confront it upon this short notice and upon the first hearing of the able report of the honorable gentleman from Wisconsin.

It has been my uniform desire, Mr. Speaker, while preserving the privileges of the House on these questions of contempt, to see that we did not complicate the precedents affecting personal liberty in such a way as to embarrass future Congresses. The question has presented itself to me in that light more particularly because of having served with varying majorities on this floor; and I need not say to gentlemen who have before served with me that we are, all of us, when acting with the majority, disposed to go by the leadership of the party organs, even against the rights of personal liberty.

In this particular case it is proposed not merely to arrest a private citizen of the United States, and to bring him a prisoner to the bar of the House, but the resolution proposes to take a portion of the officers of the State government of Louisiana and bring them as prisoners to our bar to answer for contempt. Hence, when the resolution was offered, I asked leave of the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to submit an amendment that the committee inquire into the question of the limitation, if any exists, upon the power of this House to arrest the persons and secure the papers of officers of State governments in this Union.

I forget Louisiana; I forget Florida; I think of New York; I think of Iowa; and I ask myself, can a committee of this House summon the governor of my State to come before them, leaving his official functions, to bring the papers of his office and deliver them to a House committee? Has that committee the right, being in possession, to bring them from the capital of Iowa to the capital of the nation at Washington? Has it the right to bring the governor of my State upon this floor and degrade him—a high officer of a State of this Union—by asking him to stand at the bar and answer for contempt, because he did not humbly present himself in person, and produce the records of his State before a committee of this House?

That is the question I ask of gentlemen on both sides of this House. If you can take one State officer, you can take another State officer. If you can take one State paper, you can take another State paper. You may plunder the archives of my State or the adjoining State of Missouri, and bring them here to Washington to abide the action of this House upon them as a part of the report of your committee.

I deny in the face of this honorable body, and of the American people, the right of a committee of this House, or of the House itself, or of both Houses of Congress, by resolution, or by law, with the President's sanction, to invade the executive office of my State where the official papers of that State are deposited by State law, and bring them away from the State capitol or from the custody of the officers to whom they are intrusted by State law. I challenge gentlemen to meet that proposition. It is not a question of discovering fraud in an election. It is a question whether there are any constitutional rights left in the officers or the government of a State of this Union.

It is true, sir, that the Constitution says the electors of President and Vice-President shall be appointed by the State "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." It is true that under this authority a State may choose electors by popular vote, or by legislative appointment, by ballot, by resolution, by the action of the supreme court, by a returning board, by any tribunal that the State designates, with or without the popular vote, as the State Legislature may determine. But that question belongs to another branch of the duties of a committee of this House and to another committee. The question now is as to our right to take possession of the papers of a State, required in obedience to State law, deposited for the use of a State and needed in adjusting State contests, held in the custody of State officers, and to take the officers themselves, who have those papers, and bring them here to stand before the Speaker of this House, abandoning their State functions to do so, and seized away from their State jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, if you assert that right, you may vacate the government of any State of this Union. If you may thus bring here these State officers, you may order Governor Packard, you may order the lieutenant-governor, you may order the members of the Legislature, to attend here as witnesses. In the same way the Senate may order the officers of the Nicholl's government. You may vacate the whole State government, including the judiciary, and bring all the officers here to stand before the bar of this House to answer for contempt.

The question is more serious, I submit, than it is represented even by the labored report of my honorable friend from Wisconsin. I dare not meet the proposition now except to oppose it; for it nullifies all the protection given to the State governments by the Constitution, not only in respect to the electors, but in respect to the supremacy over their local affairs and their local tribunals. This House cannot bring the officers and records of a State government outside of their jurisdiction by its own order. It is not sovereign to that extent. It has not the power even with the co-operation of the Senate to do it; it has not the power to do it even with the co-operation of the President; because between us and those State officers stands the Constitution, under the shield of which they hold their rights, and no power here can take those rights from them without their consent.

Mr. Speaker, I submit this view of the question for the purpose of having it fairly met. God forbid that on this or any other question arguments should be addressed on this floor to the unsworn galleries of this House. We are sworn to maintain the Constitution; we are sworn to do our duty as we see it. It is a question of constitutional right, not a question of the mere will of either a majority or of the whole of the House of Representatives.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LYNDE. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not follow in the very few remarks which I have to submit to the House on this subject the line of debate, or the course of debate, which has been indicated so far as I have heard from the gentlemen on the other side, and more especially shall I not follow in the course indicated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who has addressed the House on this question and who seeks to evade and avoid the plain, simple, principle embraced in the admirable report submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] from the Judiciary Committee by turning the attention of this body from the grave questions of violations of the privileges of the House by the refusal, by the contemptuous refusal of these witnesses to appear before the committee and bring the records of the returns of the votes in Louisiana before them. I say, sir, I shall not follow the attempt to avoid and evade the plain and simple question submitted by this report by referring to what has been the course of the people of Louisiana, or by stating with the emphasis which the gentleman from Maine did that he believed that for a series of years the great body of the people of the State of Louisiana had determined to deny the right of suffrage to certain classes of our people who are entitled to it under the Constitution of the United States. His belief may be ever so fixed and positive upon that question, but I imagine that no diatribe of his against the people of the sovereign State of Louisiana will affect the sense of the House in determining the simple, legal proposition which is embraced in the report of the committee. It stands before the country by investigation which has been repeatedly made, proving, sir, that there has been here and there violence, probably, in the State of Louisiana; but should I be justified in turning to the papers of to-day if I saw an act of violence committed in the State of Maine and hold the whole body of that people responsible because some one man has violated the law, outraged decency, and perpetrated crime? And yet, sir, I would be as justified to hurl against the State of Maine or New York accusations similar to those which fell from the lips of the gentleman from Maine against the people of Louisiana; I would be as fully justified as he is in taking isolated instances to refer to the State of Louisiana.

The committee have been very careful, sir, to let the House understand, in the able reports which they have made, what they desire of this returning board and the men who compose it, and on the second page of that report they recite from the terms of the subpœna duces tecum the purpose and object which our committee at New Orleans had in asking this board should come before them and produce their papers. They say these men should come before them and bring with them—what, sir? All returns of elections, all consolidated statements of supervisors of elections, all statements of votes and tally-sheets for each polling-place at the late election for President and Vice-President of the United States, together with the affidavits, depositions, protests, and other written proofs in their possession or under their control touching the State election in certain parishes, naming them. This was what the subpœna called for; and, sir, what is there that surrounds this returning board of New Orleans with a sanctity which shall prevent it from giving to a committee of this House the evidence of what has been the actual honest vote of the people of Louisiana in this presidential election? Why, sir, under the laws of my own State, and, I understand from gentlemen who are more familiar than I am, under the laws of Louisiana, any man who believes he has been deprived of an office has a right to contest for that office. Indeed so simple is the remedy in many of the States that the contest is made before the humble courts of justices of the peace, and there the question of the right to county office is determined in many of the States.

Suppose, sir, this returning board had returned that certain gentlemen (naming them) were elected State officers of the State of Louisiana, and there had a contest grown up under the laws of Louisiana as to whether those parties were actually entitled by the actual vote of that State to their offices; would it be said that the humblest court in Louisiana possessed not the power by authority of its subpœna to require this returning board with its papers, its votes, its depositions, its affidavits, and protests, to come into that court, however humble, in order that the court might intelligently decide who in deed and truth had received the vote of the State of Louisiana for the office of secretary of state or any other minor office? And, Mr. Speaker, if this power could exist in an ordinary court in which there was a contest between A and B as to who was entitled to official position, shall it be said that the grand inquest of the country investigating the question as to how the vote of Louisiana has been cast in an election which affects not only Louisiana but which affects every State in this broad confederacy from Maine to California, and from ocean to ocean—shall it be said when we have sent a committee for investigating how and in what manner and for what class of electors Louisiana has voted, and the people of Louisiana have voted—that it shall be said you are closed from investigating this question; the sole fountain source of information which can shed the daylight of truth upon this vexed question shall be closed to your committee, because the returning board is invested with sanctity; that the papers which it receives from the various returns of the various parishes of the State are so sacred that the committee sent to investigate this very question shall not have the privilege to inspect them? Sir, if they were subject to be produced in a court of justice in an ordinary contest between two officers, shall it be said now that they shall be surrounded with such sanctity that a committee of this House, sent to investigate that very question of how the vote of Louisiana was cast, shall be debarred the privilege and the power of inspecting these records?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOKER. I should like to have my time extended for one moment.

Mr. LYNDE. I yield the gentleman ten minutes further.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not desire so much time as that, but will close in a very few moments what I desire to say.

Under the ordinary powers of the House of Representatives in appointing committees, which have been exercised from time immemorial in our own country and which were also exercised by the House of Commons in former times, compelling the production of persons and papers before a committee, the rule of law upon the subject is that they have a right to the production of any papers which are pertinent to the subject-matter of inquiry. Sir, what papers could your committee find in the State of Louisiana that were so pertinent to the particular subject they were sent there to investigate and inquire of and ascertain the truth about—what papers could throw such a flood of light upon that, as the papers of this returning board; some of which, as was proven by evidence taken before the committee there, had an extraordinary facility of having their seals opened, there being absolutely found within those returns affidavits dated days after the returns themselves had been sent to the returning board?

What is the function of this returning board? It is to truthfully declare by the returns from the precincts, by the returns from the supervisors of elections as appointed by them all over the State, what, in truth and in fact, has been the vote of the people. And shall it be said, sir, that this returning board possesses the power, setting in secret in its adjudications, to cast out the votes from this parish or that parish or the other, at its own pleasure, or to alter and change this or that; and that there is no power to investigate the question whether they have acted legally in this matter; that their arbitrary actions in rejecting votes from one parish and receiving them from another are not the subject of inquiry? Should they say "this is the return from a certain supervisor in a certain parish," when in truth and in fact no such return had been made? Is their false finding of this return absolutely incontrovertible and not to be the subject of inquiry? I submit not, sir, by any rule binding this House as the highest quasi-judicature of the land in investigating a question particularly pertinent, not to the State of Louisiana—of whose rights and interests and State sovereignty the gentlemen upon the other side at a late day are becoming the defenders and advocates—but a question which, as I before remarked, involves the question of who shall hold the highest offices within the gift of the people, and which therefore goes out of the limits of the State of Louisiana and reaches every city, every town, every hamlet, every interest of this great country, now paralyzed by the terrible suspense which exists because we are not able to know and to find out what is the right in reference to this case.

The rule of law upon the subject, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the powers of the committee in the production of persons and papers, is laid down by Mr. Cushing in his work on Parliamentary Law, in section 634, as follows:

> It has always, at least practically, been considered to be the right of legislative assemblies to call upon and examine all persons within their jurisdiction, as witnesses, in regard to subjects in reference to which they have power to act, and into which they have already instituted or are about to institute an investigation. Hence they are authorized to summon and compel the attendance of all persons, within the limits of their constituency, as witnesses, and to bring with them papers and records, in the same manner, as is practiced by courts of law. When an assembly proceeds by means of a committee in the investigation of any subject the committee may be, and usually is, authorized by the assembly to send for persons, papers, and records.

And in section 936 the rule is further provided, which I shall send to the Clerk's desk to be read; and with these remarks I conclude what I have to say.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The order for the attendance of witnesses, or for the issuing of a Speaker's warrant to summon them, may also require the production of books, papers, and records. In the former case, the order ought to be as specific and to describe the books, papers, or records to be produced, with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit of; in the latter, the order may be in as general terms, as, for example, for such books or writings as shall be desired, as the order for issuing the warrant; but the warrant itself should be as specific and as certain as above mentioned. It does not appear to be necessary, however, that the name of the particular witness who is required to produce a paper or other document should be mentioned in the order or warrant, provided he be otherwise designated or may be ascertained with sufficient certainty. Thus the order may direct that the proper person or officer shall attend with the books, papers, or records desired, as, for example, a proper person from a banking house named, with their banking-books for a particular month; or the proper officer with a specified paper from one of the public offices; or a particular paper may be ordered to be laid before the House without specifying by whom it is to be done.

Mr. LYNDE. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. The strength of the case presented by the committee is found in these words of the report from which I will read. After quoting the article of the Constitution in relation to the power of the States to appoint electors of President and Vice-President, the committee say:

> This clause secures to the United States the right to require that the persons claiming to act as electors for any State shall have been appointed in such manner as the Legislature of the State shall have directed. The power to ascertain that fact is and must be in Congress, and if legislation is necessary to carry out this provision of the Constitution, Congress alone has the power to legislate upon this subject, and therefore the power to make the inquiries necessary as the basis of legislation.

I take it that there can be no stronger point made in favor of the power of the House to pass the proposed resolution than the one I have just read. I acknowledge its strength in so far as it is sustained by the Constitution.

I will read the only two clauses from which it is claimed that Congress derives any power whatever to inquire into the action of the States in appointing electors of the President and Vice-President. The second clause of the first section of article 2 provides as follows:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

And the third clause of the same section provides—

> The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

These two clauses contain all the powers conferred upon the States in appointing electors, and contain also all the limitations upon these powers. There are five expressed or implied limitations upon the power of the States, and only five. The limitations are either absolute in the Constitution itself or such as authorize Congress to fix limitations. And if Congress has any authority whatever to interfere with the action of the States in the appointment of electors, that authority must be found in some one or more of the five limitations.

Now what are these five limitations?

First. It must be a State that elects the elector; and, as Congress alone has the authority to admit new States into the Union, if there should be any political organization not a State that shall cast a vote for presidential electors, and if such pretended electors send a certificate of their vote, for President and Vice-President, the Congress would undoubtedly have the right to inquire into the right of such political organization to participate in the election. That is the first limitation.

Second. No State can have more electors than the number of Senators and Representatives to which that State is entitled in Congress at the time of the presidential election. If any State presumes to elect more, no doubt that can be inquired into. The surplus votes cannot be counted. That is the second limitation.

Third. The Constitution provides that no person shall be appointed an elector for President and Vice-President who is either a Senator or Representative in Congress or holds any office of trust or profit under the United States. Without doubt, a violation of this provision may be inquired into; for it is distinctly declared as a limitation of the authority of the State. That is the third limitation.

Fourth. Congress is empowered by the Constitution to fix the day when the States shall vote for electors; and as Congress has fixed a day, the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, the State has no right to vote for electors on any other day, except that, in case a State, having held an election on that day, has failed to make a choice, its Legislature may provide for holding an election on a subsequent day, in accordance with the act of Congress approved January 23, 1845. There is the fourth limitation. Doubtless the inquiry may be made whether the election was held on the day fixed by law.

Fifth. The Constitution provides that Congress may determine the day on which the electors in all the States shall give their votes for President and Vice-President. By the act of March 1, 1792, that fixed day is the first Wednesday of December, within thirty-four days of the date of the general election. From this it follows that all the steps which are necessary to complete the appointment of the electors must have been taken by the first Wednesday in December, when the electors are to vote for President and Vice-President. For the purposes of this debate I do not follow the process of electing a President beyond the appointment of the electors.

To sum up these limitations in brief: Congress, in obedience to the Constitution, fixes the day for choosing the electors and the day when they must vote. The Constitution prescribes that States only shall choose electors. It prescribes the number of electors for each State and limits their qualifications. These are the limitations upon the authority of the States in the appointment of electors of the President, and I defy any man to find any other limitation whatever upon their power. Every other act and fact relating to the appointment of electors is placed as absolutely and exclusively in the power of the States as it is within their power to elect their governors or their justices of the peace. Across the line of these limitations Congress has no more right to interfere with the States than it has to interfere with the election of officers in England. To speak more accurately, I should say that the power is placed in the Legislature of the State, for if the constitution of any State were silent upon the subject its Legislature is none the less armed with plenary authority conferred upon it directly by the national Constitution.

Now apply these considerations to the recent appointment of electors by Louisiana.

It is not denied that Louisiana is recognized by every department of the National Government as one of the States within the Union. It is not denied that on the day fixed by law an election for electors of President and Vice-President was held in that State. It is not denied that within the time prescribed by the national statute the officers empowered by the Legislature of Louisiana to canvass, compile, and make return of the votes at all elections held in that State, did declare that six persons, the number required by the Constitution, had received a majority of the votes for electors at said election and were duly elected. And it is not alleged that any of the persons so chosen were ineligible to such appointment under the Constitution. It is not denied that the electors so appointed met on the day fixed by law and cast their votes for President and Vice-President.

If any of these facts is denied, I have not heard of it. But the validity of the appointment of these electors is vehemently and passionately assailed. It is not a little remarkable that though their appointment was proclaimed on the 6th of December last, no statement has yet been made, so far as I am aware, of the authority on which Congress or either House of Congress claims the right to challenge the validity of the appointment. The intimation that somebody may forbid the counting of the votes which these electors cast for President and Vice-President is a topic quite apart from the validity of their appointment. It is incumbent upon those who question its validity to show their authority for so doing. They cannot find it in the Constitution or laws of the United States, unless their objection be based upon one or more of the five grounds I have mentioned.

If this House bases its right to inquire into the election in Louisiana upon any of these limitations, their inquiry might have some ground of authority; but if we presume to inquire as to any other point, we are absolutely violating the Constitution of the United States. The manner of appointment within these five limitations is absolutely and exclusively in the control of the State Legislature. The words of the Constitution declare it. The laws of Congress acknowledge it, and the ablest and earliest expounders of the Constitution confirm it. Listen to the words of Pinckney, one of the foremost members of the convention that framed the Constitution, and long a conspicuous member of the Senate. Seventy-seven years ago, while discussing the very clauses of the Constitution we are now considering, he said:

> Knowing that it was the intention of the Constitution to make the President completely independent of the Federal Legislature, I well remember it was the object, as it is at present, not only the spirit but the letter of that instrument, to give to Congress no interference in or control over the election of a President. * * *
> This right of determining on the manner in which the electors shall vote, the inquiry into the qualifications, and the guards that are necessary to prevent disqualified or improper men voting, and to insure the votes being legally given, rests and is exclusively vested in State Legislatures. If it is necessary to have guards against improper elections of electors and to institute tribunals to inquire into their qualifications, with the State Legislatures, and with them alone, rests the power to institute them, and they must exercise it.

Here is a plain and authoritative declaration that Congress has no authority whatever to inquire into the votes of a State for electors of the President; not even to provide against fraudulent and improper elections. This speech of Pinckney was made upon a bill then pending in the Congress of 1800, to prescribe a mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice-President. The bill, which in different forms passed both Houses, (but unfortunately failed to become a law,) contained, in all the various forms it assumed, one proviso which is most significant. I will read it, as found in the eighth section.

> Provided always, That no petition or exception shall be granted, allowed, or considered by the sitting grand committee which has for its object to dispute or draw into question the number of votes given for an elector in any of the States or the fact whether an elector was chosen by a majority of votes in his State or district.

From this it appears that the great statesmen, who lived in the early days of the Republic and acted under the fresh and immediate inspirations of the Constitution, disclaimed any authority on the part of Congress even to listen to a petition which had for its object to dispute or draw into question the votes of a State for electors. What more weighty or conclusive authority can be conceived against the position assumed by our Judiciary Committee to-day?

Now let us follow this line of thought a little further. It is none of our business how a State exercises this power to appoint electors so long as it keeps within the five limitations I have named. The Legislature of a State may itself choose the electors, as was frequently done in the early days of our history. A State may authorize its governor or its court to appoint the electors; it might allow a sheriff to appoint them. In 1796 the State of Vermont had no word in her constitution or her laws to regulate the appointment of electors. And no election of electors was held by the people. But when the day for the appointment of the electors came, the Legislature of Vermont, without any State law, without any constitutional provision on the subject, elected the electors. And their election was valid, and the votes they cast were counted without question. Why? Because that Legislature drew its authority directly from the Constitution of the United States, and its action was final and conclusive.

Mr. Speaker, I have never believed in the democratic theory of State sovereignty. I do not believe in it to-day. But if there be one power more sovereign than another, if there be differences between supreme acts, then I would say that the supremest act that a State can perform is the act of casting its vote for the President of the United States. And if that be done within the five limitations I have named, there is not a prince, a potentate, a power, a Legislature, a Congress, much less a committee of Congress, that can forbid or question such act. The pending resolution is based upon an assumption of power to break over the limitations I have named, to penetrate the very heart of State independence by arresting its own officers, seizing its own archives, and inquiring what votes were cast and whether they were honestly cast.

Now, I admit that an impure ballot-box is a fearful evil. A fraudulent election and a false count are sins that cry to Heaven. But anarchy is a greater evil, for it includes all others. And a violation of the fundamental law is the open door by which anarchy enters. And I warn this House that they are about to open a new and wide door and beckon the fiend to enter, if they pass this resolution. I wish to remind the House that never yet since we have had a Government has any Congress passed a law, or even proposed a law that should go behind the declared majority of the votes of a State for electors, to inquire how that majority was obtained. Such an inquiry as that never has been attempted; but not because there were no frauds. What careful student of American history does not know that in the year 1844 Henry Clay was robbed of the electoral vote of this same State of Louisiana, and by the most shameless, outrageous, and proved fraud and violence it was delivered over to James K. Polk? I refer, of course, to the Plaquemines fraud.

To show that I do not speak at random, I refer gentlemen to Senate Document No. 173 of the Twenty-eighth Congress, where the Committee on the Judiciary of our Senate embodied in their report, made however upon another subject, a long and exhaustive report of the Legislature of Louisiana, with all the testimony, in which it appeared that under the leadership of John Slidell a steamboat load of men, who had voted in New Orleans on the 4th day of November, went to Plaquemines, by violence and intimidation drove whig voters from the polls, and in shameless violation of the law and in collusion with the election officers of that place, voted by the hundreds, and many of them voted many times. They put into that ballot-box more votes than there were white male inhabitants within the precinct. They put into that box three times as many votes as were put into it at the presidential election four years before, and twice as many as were put into it four years afterward, when General Taylor, the pride of Louisiana, was the candidate for President. The judges of the election "counted all these ballots actually cast," as some gentlemen desire Louisiana to do now. And the contents of that box alone changed the result in Louisiana and gave its electoral vote to James K. Polk.

But there was not a statesman in this House or in the Senate of that day who claimed any right on the part of Congress to go behind the declared majority of that State, and to unearth and rectify even that outrageous and open fraud. The vote of Louisiana was counted in this Capitol for James K. Polk. Sad and disgraceful as that proceeding was, the vote was so counted, because there was no authority here to question it. Even on the five grounds I have mentioned, Congress has always been reluctant to question the action of a State. In a few instances the question has been raised whether a political organization which had thrown an electoral vote was really a State within the Union, but generally the benefit of the doubt has been given in favor of the right to be counted.

In many cases electors have been appointed who were disqualified by the Constitution; but no vote of an elector has ever been rejected on that ground. In one instance, the electors of a State did not cast their votes for President on the day fixed by law; but their votes were nevertheless counted.

In no instance hitherto has a Congress even proposed to inquire into the election by which the electors were appointed.

It seems to be reserved for this House, with its large majority of professed believers in State sovereignty, to go a thousand bow-shots beyond any of its predecessors and assume the power to revise the elections in any State it pleases.

Now I will go a step further and affirm, although I regret the fact, that under the national Constitution and laws Congress has no authority to contest an election of electors for President, except upon the five grounds I have named; and if it had the authority, the Constitution and laws have made it physically impossible to inaugurate and adjudicate such a contest.

Follow me for a moment, and I believe members of the House will agree with me. Our fathers intended that the election of a President should be a certain and summary proceeding. They required the vote to be taken everywhere on the same day. Then they required that within thirty-four days after the vote was cast the electors themselves should meet and vote for President and Vice-President. Why did they limit it to thirty-four days? If you will read the proceedings of the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States and of the early Congresses you will find that our fathers determined to make the time just as short as it was possible to get in the returns in the different States. And the fact is, that in many of our large States, even with our increased facilities for communication, thirty-four days is so short a time that the official returns are not complete until the very night before the presidential electors must meet. Therefore there is no time, it is physically impossible, to institute and conclude a contest after the appointment of electors and before the day when they must meet and cast their votes. I do not know of a single State in the Union that has provided for such a contest. The action of their returning boards in announcing the majority of votes has always been final. Nor is a contest possible after the electoral college has voted. The electors meet on the first Wednesday of December and ballot for President and Vice-President, and at once sign and seal up the certificate of their votes and deliver the packages to the President of the Senate. For two months and a half no human being has any right to break the seals. During that time no contest can be instituted upon their vote, because the only official evidence of their action is locked under the silence of their seals by the imperial command of the Constitution itself.

If a contest in regard to the appointment of electors cannot be made between the day of the election and the meeting of the electoral college, nor between the day of the meeting of the college and the opening of the certificates, can it be done after the seals are broken? Manifestly not; for two unanswerable reasons. Here also the language of the Constitution and laws of the United States is imperial and peremptory. The law requires that on one day of all the days of the year both Houses of Congress shall be in session. That day is the second Wednesday of February. And the law does not require them to be in session on any other day of February. One day they are to be in session to witness the opening of the certificates. Then comes the imperial command of the Constitution—

> The President of the Senate shall * * * open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.

"Then," "THEN!" Here is no time for a contest in regard to the appointment of electors? If the certificates disclose the fact that there has been no choice, the House shall immediately choose the President. In less than three weeks from the day the seals are broken the Congress ceases to exist. The whole proceeding was intended to be brief, summary, decisive. Read the record from beginning to end, and there will be found no time for a contest, and no authority for one if there were time. Review the long line of illustrious statesmen, and find, if you can, even one who before the present year ever claimed that Congress had the power to go beyond these five limitations I have named and question the presidential vote of a State. If we may question the vote in one State, we may question it in all. If we may examine one returning board, we may examine all the officers of elections in all the States. We may open every ballot-box and revise and count the votes of seven million voters. Such a view of the Constitution defeats its own provisions and renders the election of a President by the States absolutely impossible; because it would always lie in the power of one House or the other, by the brute force of numbers, or the power of party spirit, to object and examine and inquire until the arrival of the day when Congress would expire by limitation.

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with mighty issues. Gentlemen are proposing to seize, and bring to the bar of this House as prisoners, four officers of a State, who are not charged with having violated any clause of our Constitution; who are not charged with having violated any law of the United States; who are not charged with having failed in any point of their duty as defined in our Constitution or laws. But the House proposes to go beyond all this—to invade the clear, unquestioned rights of a State; to drag its officers fourteen hundred miles away from their capital, and bring with them a portion of the public archives of their State, and surrender them to us. These officers have tendered to our committee the free use of their archives to be copied; but they stand on their rights as the lawful custodians of these records of their State; and for that you propose to punish them. If the House can make this demand, we can bring to our bar every officer of every State of the Union; and we can make them bring all the archives of all the States. We can thus cause the State to die by inanition, by holding all its officers prisoners at your bar, and turning over all its archives to the committees of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the defense I am making be the defense of State rights, then I am for State rights within those limits; I believe I have always been to that extent at least a champion of the rights of the States.

How we swing like a pendulum! Seventeen years ago, in the name of State sovereignty, it was proposed by a great party in this Hall to break the Union in pieces. Seventeen years ago, in the name of State sovereignty, it was declared that a certain portion of our people would never submit to an election that declared Abraham Lincoln President, and now, in defiance of all State rights, it is proposed that these great communities, these thirty-eight sisters that you call sovereign, though I do not, shall be chained to the wheels of this congressional chariot and dragged in fetters to the national Capitol as vassals of the imperial will of—what? A party in the House of Representatives, [applause in the galleries,] not the nation, not the Congress, not the House, but a partisan majority of the House, bent upon the accomplishment of a party purpose.

Now, gentlemen, in the name of our common country, as you revere the glories of its great past, and would preserve all that is worthiest in the possibilities of its great future, I beg you to pause before you commit this fatal assault upon whatever there may be of sovereignty in the thirty-eight States of the Union.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAVIS. Before the gentleman from Ohio takes his seat, may I be allowed to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman says that within the five limitations which he has named no power whatever can interfere with the States. I desire to ask him why it is that committees have gone to Louisiana, and especially why it is that partisans sent down by President Grant went there? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the galleries will give their sovereign leave, I will answer. The gentlemen who went down to Louisiana at the request of the governor of Louisiana, made through the President of the United States, went there only as invited witnesses; and on our arrival we were asked by a democratic committee to join them in helping to secure the count of all the votes "actually cast." We answered that we were not there to secure anything, but least of all were we there to direct or influence anybody in Louisiana to violate the laws of the State by counting ballots which the law declared were not votes; that the execution of the laws was the business of the officers of that State, and not ours. Is the gentleman answered?

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Why was it——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS. They went down there—by what authority did they go there? By what authority did the President invite them there?

Mr. GARFIELD. When the gentleman learns by what authority an American citizen travels anywhere in the United States he pleases he will know the authority by which I went to Louisiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. Why was it four years ago your party threw out the votes of several southern States? [Laughter and applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HOAR. It is only within a few months that the practice of interrupting the proceedings of this House by applause, either on the floor or in the galleries, has grown up.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. Now, without regard to the question upon which that applause is manifested, I beg leave to call upon the Speaker of the House, before any matters which may excite the applause of members of the House shall present themselves, to enforce rigidly the rule, and to have it understood that any member who unites in such applause is guilty of disorder, and that the galleries will be cleared if it is attempted there. I suggest this to both sides of the House.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is very proper. The Chair, however, thinks that the practice has not grown up as he alleges within a few months, but that the practice is an evil which previous Speakers have found it necessary to check and which the present occupant of the chair uniformly, since he has occupied the chair, has checked, and with great respect to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the House he will say that he will continue to check hereafter as he has done in the past.

Mr. MILLS. That was more than was done in the Forty-third Congress, and more than any Speaker offered to do in the Forty-third Congress when these interruptions were continuous.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. But is it more than any Speaker should do to check it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask for the reading of Rule 9.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw absolutely the remark that this practice has grown up in the past few months, as we all seem to agree in the desirableness that all manifestations of applause in the galleries should in future be prevented.

Mr. MILLS. The galleries have only changed their opinions in the last two years.

Mr. COX. You ought to have made the point when the applause was on that side of the House.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for the reading of Rule 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

In case of any disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or lobby, the Speaker (or chairman of the Committee of the Whole House) shall have power to order the same to be cleared.—March 14, 1794.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite aware of the rule. He is also aware of the fact that the applause to-day commenced on that side of the House.

Mr. HOAR. If that is true, it is quite right then that the reproof should come from this side of the House also.

The SPEAKER. The best way is the harmonious way.

Mr. COX. The gentleman ought to have made the point of order when the applause was on his side.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I believe the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be altogether proper. I think it one which should be sustained in earnest by both sides of this House. We have had examples in other times and in other countries of the vicious practice of applause of what was said in legislative bodies. It is pernicious. I think it should be summarily stopped; and I hope the members of this House on either side who respect themselves and the dignity of this presence will join together with not a dissenting voice in having the galleries summarily cleared, if this occurrence shall happen again during this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in justice to the galleries that sometimes this thing of applause occurs by reason of having the example first set on the floor. [Laughter.] The Chair will hereafter, however, rigidly prevent applause as far as he is physically able, whether upon the floor or in the galleries.

Mr. LAMAR. I have only a word, sir, to say about this matter which has been brought up by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] I agree with him entirely as to the desirability of order in our proceedings; and I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] also as to the impropriety of any manifestation of excitement in the galleries or on the part of persons who do not participate in our deliberations. But, Mr. Speaker, I submit, respectfully, there is danger of going too far in this direction. The right of the members of a parliamentary body to manifest their approbation and disapprobation upon the floor in the House by applause or by murmurs of dissent is coeval with the history of Anglican and American institutions. But I think, sir, that while it is proper that order should be observed there may be a pressing of this matter of suppressing and repressing manifestations of concurrence and dissent a little too far.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that under Rule 2 he is authorized to preserve order and decorum.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave of the Chair to say one word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi that the precedents of the English House of Commons are in favor of the practice to which he alludes. Debate is suppressed by coughing, cat-calls, hisses, groanings, and other methods of expressing dislike; and, on the other hand, debate is encouraged by applause in that body. But I believe the uniform American opinion, or nearly so—I ought not to say entirely so—is that it is a disorderly and disgraceful practice which prevails in the English House of Commons, a body in other respects so dignified and so careful of propriety; and it is a practice which our ancestors who founded our Government and their successors down to the present time have practically abandoned. It would not be endured by the gentleman from Mississippi or by any other gentleman on this floor, that he should be interrupted in expressing his opinion to this House in the mode to which members of the British House of Commons are compelled to submit.

Mr. LAMAR. I will just say that I was not referring to their modes of manifestation. Different assemblies have different modes of manifesting their approbation and their dissent. The French Parliament has its mode; the German its; and the Americans manifest their approval by applause and their dissent by indications perhaps more decorous than the practices to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has alluded, but none the less significant and emphatic.

Mr. LYNDE. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not count it against the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin or as against the time allowed for the debate.

Mr. LYNDE. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I regret very much that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in closing his remarks upon this resolution should have spoiled what was certainly a very ingenious argument from his stand-point by a mere partisan allusion, in my judgment entirely unnecessary to a proper discussion of this question. I want, sir, in a question of this magnitude, novel in this House and in the halls of legislation in this country, entirely original in its results and character—I want in the discussion of this question no partisan influences or reflections. If possible, sir, I want it determined upon principles higher than those that enter into the conflicts of the day with which we are now surrounded. It is not a mere proposition to hold a witness in contempt. It does not necessarily involve solely those considerations which pertain to the refusal of a witness to answer certain questions. But it does relate to the relations of the Federal Government to a State government, so far as the appointment of presidential electors is concerned. And it is the first time within the history of this Government that this particular question has been raised.

Now I propose, sir, in the few remarks that I shall submit for the consideration of the House, to confine myself very much to the proposition that the relations of the Federal Government to the States with reference to the appointment of electors stand in an entirely different attitude from that of other questions between the States and the Federal Government. Before the adoption of the Constitution Congress had the sole and exclusive power, executive and legislative. We had no President, we had no executive authority until the adoption of the Federal Constitution; and all the powers that the States possess on the question of electing a President are delegated by the Constitution. They are not, so to speak, inherent and original. They were not only delegated by the Constitution, but in the adoption of a Constitution by the States they gave up absolute power over that question under the limitations of the Constitution. Therefore it is not delegated authority, but it is a limited, restricted authority. The States have not the unrestricted power to elect or to appoint the presidential electors. They have power to appoint them subject to certain limitations, qualifications, and restrictions enunciated in the Constitution itself, and it necessarily follows by implication that there devolves upon Congress, and upon Congress alone, the duty to ascertain whether those powers thus delegated and qualified have been executed and performed according to the Constitution.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has told the House that he admits that there is imposed upon the States a limitation of the exercise of that power to certain considerations and conditions; and he enumerated them as being five in number; and he denied the right of Congress to institute any investigation over any other questions than those particular five to which he specificially referred. In the first place let me say to the gentleman that he would place a limitation upon Congress, whereas the Constitution places the limitations upon the States. There is no limitation upon the power of Congress as to its course of inquiry into the fact whether any State or any individual or any other portion of the Government outside of the Federal Government itself has properly executed its delegated powers under the Constitution. There is nothing in the Constitution to limit the authority of Congress to institute any investigation and ascertain any fact bearing upon that question. And not only that, sir, but I will remind the gentleman that the President of the United States, the head of the executive department of the Government, issued a military order at Philadelphia, on the 10th day of November, to General Angur, in which he required him to proceed to Louisiana and do certain things with reference to the integrity of the election, which was an assumption on the part of the President that there was full authority on the part of the Federal Government to institute an investigation into anything involving the integrity of the returns and canvassing of the vote of a State.

Again, sir, the other branch of Congress—although it is not perhaps strictly parliamentary to refer to it—has recently summoned the governor of Oregon here to answer certain inquiries here as to the recent election in that State. Therefore, with the Executive of the United States and the Senate of the United States on full record to the effect that it is within the full power of the Federal Government to institute searching inquiry into everything relating to the appointment of electors, I cannot conceive that there can be any limitations to our powers in that direction.

I have very hastily, Mr. Speaker, written at my desk certain statements of fact which will sustain the position I now take upon this question. Within fifteen minutes it could not be expected that I could discuss any question of this magnitude, but I will read as a portion of my remarks the points which I have noted down in reference to this matter.

1. The power of the States to appoint electors is a delegated power by the Constitution.

2. The authority to appoint electors is qualified and conditional.

3. The States cannot appoint members of Congress or any person holding an office of trust or profit an elector.

And the electors so appointed must discharge their duties under certain specified rules laid down in the Constitution.

4. A necessary implication is that upon Congress devolves the duty of ascertaining whether all of these rules and conditions have been complied with by the States. The electors report to Congress, the certificates being presented to both Houses in joint session by the President of the Senate.

5. As preparatory to an ascertainment whether in the State of Louisiana all requirements of the Constitution and laws have been complied with and both Houses of Congress have appointed committees of investigation.

6. In the discharge of their duties they are clothed with ample authority to look into and examine anything appertaining to the appointment of electors by that State.

7. Neither the Constitution nor laws place a State government above the power of either House of Congress in any matter relating to the inquiry whether the right to appoint electors has been exercised in accordance with the limitations and qualifications declared in the Constitution.

8. In pursuance of these considerations the returning board of Louisiana cannot withhold any information, papers, or documents necessary to the inquiry.

These are my views. If I had time to elaborate them I feel confident that I should be enabled to establish them conclusively to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. LYNDE. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to allow me to move that the House adjourn. It is near our dinner hour and I hope the gentleman will let us adjourn.

Mr. LYNDE. After the previous question shall have been seconded I am willing that the House shall adjourn.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as an addition to the resolution reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is now in order, under the order of the House in regard to the debate upon this resolution.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let it be read for information.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Unless the said witnesses shall permit the committee to inspect the original papers required to be produced and to have or take copies thereof, in which event no arrest shall be made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection is not necessary, as an amendment cannot be entertained under the order of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If it be the desire of the House, I shall now make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. LYNDE. I do not yield to the gentleman for a motion to adjourn. I wish to have the previous question seconded, and then I shall have no objection to an adjournment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will then proceed. When the report and resolution now before the House were considered in the Committee on the Judiciary this morning I was not present, for reasons which have already been stated. I wish now to say that I dissent from the purpose of the resolution reported by the committee, and I will state very briefly why I do so.

The questions presented for the determination of the House in the resolution now before us are two: First, as to the power of the House to arrest the officers named in the resolution; and second, if we have the power, as to the expediency of exercising it. The question of power may be briefly stated in this form: Has this House the power to arrest State officers for a refusal to take public archives and records from the repository prescribed by law, against their convictions of duty and public interest? That is the question which we are to determine; and it will be perceived at once that it is one of the gravest moment and of the greatest importance as affecting the relations between the National and State Governments.

Have we power to summon the governor of a State and to require him to bring the archives of his State here to the Capitol in Washington? If we have that power, then we can require him to take them to Alaska, if a committee of Congress were sitting there. Can he take with him the journals of a legislative body while the Legislature is in session; take them away from the proper custody prescribed by law and to the detriment of the public interests of the State? That question is to some extent involved in the resolution now before the House.

I think it is very well understood in this House that I concede to committees of Congress large powers for purposes of investigation. I agree that this House has large powers to enforce the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, as my speeches and votes in this House abundantly prove. But I do not believe that for any purpose now sought by the investigation of the committee sitting in New Orleans this House has the power to compel the production of the papers asked for in the resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee.

What is the object of the production of these papers? It is not to enlighten Congress with a view to legislation. It is not to enlighten this House and to enable us to determine whether it is expedient to submit to the people an amendment to the Constitution. The investigation does not relate to any duty or act to be performed by the House or by Congress. But as I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] it is to ascertain how the vote of the State of Louisiana has been cast for electors for President and Vice-President, and with a purpose that the two Houses of Congress may decide if the electors were duly appointed and authorized to cast their votes as they did for Rutherford B. Hayes for President.

Now I deny that this House has any power to go into that question for the purpose indicated. The question who were duly appointed electors for President and Vice-President for the State of Louisiana was by law intrusted to the State board of canvassers, and their determination is final and conclusive. Neither this House nor both Houses acting together can go back of the decision of the board of State canvassers to ascertain if they erred in the decision they have announced or otherwise failed to decide correctly as to what electors were duly appointed.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. If it shall appear to the House that the returning board of Louisiana has violated the provisions of their State constitution and their statutes, then does the gentleman say that this Congress has no power to question their action?

Mr. LAWRENCE. This House has no power to change the determination of the State board in their declaration as to the persons duly appointed electors. Congress cannot set aside the determination of the State board of canvassers as to the electors duly appointed. They are the final judges upon that subject. Their judgment is conclusive upon this House and upon Congress. That is the position I take.

Now, sir, I undertake to say that not one single authority, not one, decided by any court, can be produced to controvert the proposition I have stated. On the contrary, every determination by the legislative bodies of this country and by the courts of this country has been to the effect that the decision of a duly authorized canvassing board made in the forms prescribed by law declaring an officer elected vests in him a title to the office, and this decision is final and conclusive until otherwise determined in a court or tribunal authorized to hear a contest or to try again the title to the office. But neither this House nor the two Houses of Congress can entertain any contest or pass upon the title to office vested in the electors for President and Vice-President for Louisiana by the board of canvassers for that State.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Does the gentleman include the electoral vote of the State of Oregon?

Mr. LAWRENCE. If you take all the records that will come from Oregon, they will show that the republican electors who cast the vote for that State cast it legally. There were two electors whose election was duly certified. These filled the only vacancy that existed, and the three electors then cast the authorized vote of the State. There was no other duly appointed elector, and all this will sufficiently appear of record.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. How will the gentleman get the records from Oregon? Does he propose to summon the governor in order to get them?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The records will appear in the certificates that will come with the returns. All will sufficiently appear from the record returned by the lawful electors, and by those who only assumed to act as such, if all be taken together. I hope these interruptions will not come out of my time.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me one sentence, I will say it for myself alone. If the fraud in the State of Oregon has been so committed that we have no power to inquire into it without violating the limitations of the Constitution, then I hope Mr. Tilden will be counted in by fraud and installed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have no trouble about the Oregon vote; that can be reached without any difficulty, and I will not consume my time in discussing it now. That can be discussed hereafter.

Let me return to the point I was discussing, that the electors declared to be duly appointed by the State canvassers in Louisiana are legal electors and neither this House nor the two Houses can call in question their authority. I will cite a memorable authority from the State of New York, one of the earliest authorities in our history, and it is valuable because it grew up in our early history. On the 20th of April, 1777, New York adopted her first constitution. By that constitution it was provided—

> That the supreme executive power and authority of this State shall be vested in a governor; and that steadily once in every three years, and as often as the seat of government shall become vacant, a wise and discreet freeholder of this State shall be by ballot elected governor, by the freeholders of this State, qualified as before described to elect senators; which elections shall be always held at the times and places of choosing representatives in assembly for each respective county; and that the person who hath the greatest number of votes within the said State shall be the governor thereof.

On the 13th of February, 1787, the Legislature of that State passed an act for regulating elections. By the eleventh section of that act it was provided—

> That a joint committee shall be appointed yearly and every year, to canvass and estimate the votes for governor, lieutenant governor, and senators, or such of them as are then to be chosen; which committee shall consist of twelve members, that is to say, six to be appointed by the senate out of their body, and six to be appointed by the assembly out of their body; and such committee shall be annually appointed by resolutions of each body, respectively, and shall meet at the office of the secretary of this State, on the last Tuesday of May; at which meeting the said joint committee, or a major part of them, or the survivors of them, or the major part of such survivors, shall, on the said day, and on so many days next succeeding thereto as shall be necessary for the purpose, proceed to open the said boxes, one after the other, and the inclosures therein contained, respectively, and canvass and estimate the votes therein contained.

Well, sir, in April, 1792, an election for governor took place in New York. The candidates were Governor Clinton and Chief-Justice Jay. The former was re-elected.

By the then existing laws of New York, which I have read, ballots that were taken in the several counties were, immediately after the election, transmitted to the office of the secretary of state and there kept till the second Tuesday in May, when the board of canvassers were to convene and canvass them.

The board of canvassers was a joint committee of eleven appointed by the senate and house of assembly of New York from themselves, and its duty was to canvass the votes cast for governor, lieutenant-governor, and senators, and to announce the result. The board of canvassers consisted of David Gelston, Thomas Tillotson, Daniel Graham, Melancton Smith, David McCarty, P. V. Courtlandt, Jonathan N. Havens, Samuel Jones, Isaac Roosevelt, Leonard Gansevoort, and Joshua Sands.

The joint committee threw out and destroyed the votes of Clinton, Otsego, and Tioga Counties, thereby electing Clinton governor.

The subject was fully discussed by many prominent men of both parties, among them Rufus King, Stephen Lush, Cornelius Bogart, Aaron Burr, Pierpont Edwards, John Lawrence, Jonathan D. Sergeant, Robert Troup, Edmund Randolph, Asher Miller, and Dudley Baldwin. The greatest interest was felt in the result throughout the United States, and an attempt was made to bring the matter before the New York house of assembly.

The greatest interest was felt in this matter, as I have said, and that body adopted the following preamble and resolution:

> Whereas by the eleventh section of the act for regulating elections it is enacted that all questions which shall arise upon any canvass and estimate, or upon any of the proceedings therein, shall be determined according to the opinion of the major part of the said canvassing committee, and that their judgment and determination shall in all cases be binding and conclusive: Therefore,
> Resolved, As the sense of this house, that the Legislature cannot annul or make void any of the determinations of the said committee.

Whether this committee acted in accordance with law I do not undertake to say; but the principle announced in this preamble and resolution has been followed in all the States and by all the courts.

It is the doctrine of the courts. McCrary's Law of American Elections, page 275, and sections 81, 82, 84, 373; State vs. Steers, 44 Missouri, 223; People vs. Van Slyck, 4 Connecticut, 297–323. Ex parte Heath, 3 Hill, 47; Morgan vs. Quackenbush, 22 Barber, 77; Thompson vs. Ewing, 1 Brewster, 77; Attorney-General vs. Barstow, 4 Wisconsin, 749.

In some of the States special tribunals are created with power to decide certain contested elections, and in some or all, as to certain officers, the right to an office may be tried on quo warranto. When the title to an office is vested by the proper certificate of canvassing officers, it can only be divested by a tribunal or court clothed with power to make inquiry back of the result as declared by the canvassing officers. The power to do this is judicial. This House has not been clothed with any such power. The two Houses have not been clothed with such power.

If they even had the authority to count the votes of the electors, this in the light of the authorities is ministerial power—not judicial. No special tribunal has yet been created to contest the due appointment of electors, and no court has attempted to do this as to the electors for Louisiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LYNDE. I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr LYNDE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. ABBOTT, for four days on account of important business.

To Mr. CROUNSE, an extension of his leave of absence for one week.

To Mr. POWELL, for one day on account of important business.

COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed the following members as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3741) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery:" Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. HENDEE, and Mr. HARDENBERGH.

APPOINTMENT ON A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WAIT to fill a vacancy on the Committee on Public Lands.

THE RECUSANT WITNESS E. W. BARNES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 16, 1877.

To the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives:

The undersigned would respectfully represent that he intended the answer he made to the demand made by the Speaker of him when he was last at the bar, to be understood that he was entirely willing to produce all the messages demanded by the committee to the utmost extent of his power; and if allowed an opportunity he would honestly and in good faith use every effort in his power to regain possession of said messages for that purpose. He wishes to repeat that he is now willing so to do if he shall be afforded an opportunity, and that if he should fail he will still be amenable to the action of the House upon a view of all the facts which have occurred or may transpire. And he now respectfully asks the opportunity to make the effort to produce the messages to the committee, which he cannot do while he remains in custody.

Yours,

E. W. BARNES.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the communication be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESS—WILLIAM ORTON.

Mr. HUNTON. I offer the following as a privileged resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he hereby is, authorized and allowed to permit William Orton, a witness now in custody, to return home to New York for consultation with and treatment by his attending physicians, in the company of the Sergeant-at-Arms or his deputy, to return on Friday, the 19th instant, to Washington.

If there is an objection to the resolution I desire to say that the Committee on the Judiciary has possession of three certificates from eminent physicians in New York, in which they state that Mr. Orton is in a condition that requires medical treatment. We therefore think that this privilege ought to be accorded to him.

The resolution was adopted; and then, on motion of Mr. COX, (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Caroline M. Egbert, widow of Daniel Egbert, deceased, late medical director in the United States Navy, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BAKER, of New York: The petition of citizens of New York, for the repeal of the tax on deposits, circulation, and capital of banks, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of Mrs. Laura A. Bartlett, mother of Edward B. Bartlett, deceased, late a private in Company G, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANDLER: The petition of Louisa Walker, of Fulton County, Georgia, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army in 1864, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COX: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, renewing its recommendation and request made in May last, that the Government and Congress in their discretion institute the necessary measures for convening an international monetary conference, to fix the relative values of gold and silver coin, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CUTLER: The petition of citizens of New Bedford, Massachusetts, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. DAVY: The petition of citizens of Monroe County, New York, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of William McKelvey and citizens of Huron County, Ohio, that he be granted a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: The petition of J. K. Hickey, for the difference of pay between a first-class fireman and third-class engineer United States Navy, from July 1, 1860, to July 22, 1863, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HAYMOND: The petition of citizens of Flora, Carroll County, Indiana, asking Congress to enforce the provisions of the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, by the purchase of the telegraph lines of the United States by the General Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HOSKINS: The petition of Rollin Church and John Pierson, for compensation for seventy-three bales of cotton seized by the custom-house officials at New Orleans, in 1862, and sequestered, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of Charles Secor, and 100 other business men of Manistee, Michigan, for an appropriation of $30,000 for the extension of piers at the entrance of the harbor at Manistee, Michigan, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LORD: The petition of J. M. Butler, S. S. Lowery, A. J. McIntosh, C. McKinney, and other citizens of the counties of Oneida and Broome, New York, for the repeal of war taxes on banks, both State and national, excepting on circulation, and that the subject of taxation of banks be remitted to the States and Territories as before the war, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAPHAM: Resolutions of the Boston Board of Trade for the passage of the Senate bill extending the time in the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. MUTCHLER: The petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, relating to the purchase of telegraph lines by the General Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PAYNE: The petition of J. H. Merrill, for compensation for services rendered and moneys advanced by him while acting as sheriff of the court created by the alcalde during the outbreak at San Francisco, California, of the desperadoes called the Hounds in 1849, and for other services rendered the United States, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAINEY: The petition of Francis Lynch, of Cheraw, South Carolina, for compensation for supplies furnished General Sherman's command in 1865, to the same committee.

By Mr. JOHN REILLY: The petition of citizens of Bedford County, Pennsylvania, in favor of the removal of the limitation in the pension laws, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting for the information of the Committee on Commerce a copy of a letter from Major D. C. Houston, of the Corps of Engineers, suggesting the advisability of a repeal or modification of the "Act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers," approved March 3, 1875, so far as relates to damage for flowage, particularly flowage from works constructed before the work became the property of the United States in 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of Major G. Weitzel, Corps of Engineers, on the superintendence, management, and repair of the Louisville and Portland Canal for the year ending December 31, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WHYTE presented the memorial of Allen Dodge, Dorsey Claggett, W. H. Collins, and others, praying for the passage of a law for the protection of fish in the waters of the Potomac within the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a petition of J. C. Hoadley and 30 others, citizens of Lawrence, Massachusetts, praying that the questions arising from the late presidential election may be dealt with in a spirit calculated to harmonize conflicting views; which was referred to the select committee to devise a mode to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of David W. Place, E. D. Eldridge, and other citizens of Rockwell's Mills, New York, asking for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, also for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the chiefs of the confederated Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea tribes of Indians, praying for the repayment to them of certain sums of money claimed to have been wrongfully diverted from their trust funds, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1142) to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Interior to adjust and settle the account of the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians.

The bill was read twice, and, on motion of Mr. CLAYTON, recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Ann Lynch, orphan child of James Lynch, late private in Company A, Sixty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, praying to be granted arrears of pension, reported a bill (S. No. 1143) for the relief of the legal heirs of Ann Lynch; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin Holladay, asking to be indemnified for losses to property sustained by Indian depredations while transporting the mails on the overland mail route between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, from 1860 to 1866, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1144) referring the claim of Benjamin Holladay to the Court of Claims.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Warren Mitchell, of Kentucky, praying to be refunded the proceeds of seven hundred and thirty bales of cotton seized by officers of the United States at Savannah, Georgia, and covered into the Treasury, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1145) for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I give notice that I will call the bill up to-morrow or as soon thereafter as possible.

HOUSE COMPILATION ON ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth the reserve and stitched copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote, have instructed me to report it with an amendment. The amendment is marked in brackets toward the latter part of the resolution. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "stitched," to strike out the words "and reserve;" so as to read:

That the Public Printer be authorized and required to bind in cloth, at the earliest time practicable, for the use of the two Houses of Congress, the stitched copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote, except such copies as are required for distribution to public libraries.

Mr. ANTHONY. The object of the amendment is to preserve the reserved copies of the documents, which are all bound in leather, and not have the edition interrupted by binding in cloth. This document would be stitched without any legislation, and the object of the House is to have it bound, to which there can be no objection; but in applying it to the reserved copies as well as to the copies for distribution, it would put into the reserved copies a number of books bound in cloth, while all the others are bound in leather. I should say that, although this is not a very large appropriation, when it may be the pleasure of the two Houses of Congress to order any additional printing it is necessary to make an appropriation therefor. The appropriation for public printing made at the last session of Congress was manifestly insufficient for the work which the law required and which Congress was certain to order. This I stated at the time, but it was the pleasure of the two Houses of Congress to pass the restricted appropriation. Now, having passed a limited appropriation, Congress goes on and orders work to be done for which there is no money appropriated; and unless the appropriations are made when the work is ordered, Senators should understand and we should all understand that the work cannot be legally performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the resolution read the third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth the stitched copies of the House compilation entitled Counting the Electoral Vote."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1146) for the relief of John H. Russell; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1147) for the punishment of persons making or having in possession dies, molds, &c., for manufacturing counterfeit coin; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on Finance, and that it, together with certain official letters which accompany it, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1148) for the relief of William H. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHAFFEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1149) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Denver, Colorado; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1150) granting a pension to A. K. Belt; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1151) granting a pension to Anna Blair Lancaster; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, it was Ordered, That Black Beaver, a Delaware Indian, have leave to withdraw the papers on file in the Senate in support of his claim, by leaving copies of the same.

EDWIN EBERT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 940) for the relief of Edwin Ebert. It is a very small case. The bill has passed the House and was reported from the Committee on Claims in the Senate by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.] All agreed to it in committee; there is no dispute about it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the payment of $110 to Edwin Ebert, late a contract surgeon in the United States Army, as compensation for a horse, his property, lost in the service of the United States at Springfield, Missouri, January 8, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARVEY B. KILBORN.

Mr. INGALLS. There are a few private pension bills on the Calendar, and I will ask the Senate to consider them now.

I move, first, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1850) granting a pension to Harvey B. Kilborn, a private in Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS A. M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Louis A. McLaughlin.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M'COLLY.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2242) granting a pension to George McColly.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELSON AINSLIE.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3560) granting a pension to Nelson Ainslie.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. AMY KING.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bill (S. No. 1118) granting a pension to Mrs. Amy King.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Amy King, widow of James King, a soldier of the war of 1812, who enlisted in Captain James Douglas's company of South Carolina militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT S. TOLAND.

Mr. INGALLS. I now move to take up House bill No. 2842.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2842) granting a pension to Robert S. Toland was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARSILVIA F. WOODARD.

Mr. INGALLS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1123.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1123) granting a pension to Marsilvia F. Woodard, mother of George R. Woodard, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. H. MATHIS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 931) for the relief of H. H. Mathis, of Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $6,628.50 in full compensation for twenty-seven bales of cotton of H. H. Mathis, seized by order of Colonel Jacob Fry, commanding United States forces at the post of Trenton, Tennessee, which cotton was taken and placed in the fortifications at that post.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. Caperton, from the Committee on Claims, on the 21st of June, 1876:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of H. H. Mathis, praying compensation for cotton taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, have had the same under consideration, and report:

The petitioner represents that in July, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company F, West Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and after serving the full period of his enlistment was honorably discharged; that in December, 1862, while he was serving with his command, at Trenton, Gibson County, Tennessee, there were taken from him twenty-seven bales of cotton, weighing in the aggregate 13,257 pounds, by Frank Traves, first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster Second West Tennessee Cavalry, acting under the order of Colonel Jacob Fry, commanding United States forces at that place, for the purpose of using the same in the fortifications at that point; that soon after the cotton had been thus disposed of, the place was attacked by General N. B. Forrest, who succeeded in capturing it, together with all the stores and shot-proof cotton; that as soon as he was able to do so he applied to the claims commission, a board sitting at Washington City, claiming compensation for his cotton thus taken and used; that the said commission rejected his claim solely upon the ground that "it was not a proper charge against any of the appropriations for the War Department, and that claimant's remedy was before Congress." (See certified transcript of the record of proceedings furnished from the War Department.) Petitioner now claims that he is entitled to be paid for the cotton so taken at the rate of sixty cents per pound.

The proof of petitioner's loyalty is full and satisfactory. In support of his allegation that the cotton was taken to be used in the fortifications he files the receipt of the officer before mentioned, setting forth that it was taken and the purpose for which it was taken. He also proves by several witnesses that the cotton was destroyed by General Forrest after the surrender of the post. The witnesses are shown to be creditable witnesses, and say they were eye-witnesses to the destruction of the cotton.

That the Government is bound to make full compensation to the owner, under such circumstances, seems to have been settled by the case of Mitchell vs. Harmony, (13 Howard, page 134,) as well as the case of Anderson, reported from this committee; and it remains only to ascertain the mode or measure by which that compensation shall be fixed. This committee has heretofore held that the market value of the cotton at the time it was seized is to be taken as the measure of compensation.

The evidence of Oppenheimer, Dunaway, and Fuller, in relation to the price of cotton at the time of the impressment, varies somewhat. While Dunaway states the range to have been from 40 to 55 cents, in gold, Oppenheimer puts it at from 50 to 60 cents, and Fuller proves that claimant actually bid and paid for this very cotton the price of 60 cents per pound, in gold.

In addition to this evidence the counsel for petitioner has referred to the price quotations at that time, as taken from the Shipping and Commercial List on file in the Bureau of Statistics, which fixes the market rates between 52 and 68 cents, according to grade. The mean of these extremes is 60 cents, but the committee, in view of the other testimony, are disposed to adopt 50 cents per pound as the price to be allowed.

The receipt given to petitioner places the number of bales taken at twenty-seven, which amounted, according to the sworn statement of the petitioner, in the aggregate to 13,257 pounds, being an average of 491 pounds per bale.

For this quantity, and at the price of 50 cents per pound, the committee think the petitioner should be compensated, and accordingly report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB SENSENEY.

Mr. WRIGHT. I believe that perhaps the last report that was made by the late Senator Caperton to the Senate from the Committee on Claims was on Senate bill No. 947. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 947) for the relief of the estate of Jacob Senseney, of Winchester, Virginia, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim upon the part of the estate of Jacob Senseney, deceased, for rent of buildings in Winchester, Virginia, and for which a voucher was given, now on file in the Treasury Department, and to allow and pay to E. J. Senseney, surviving executor of Jacob Senseney, deceased, $1,087.50.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

I. M. MICOW.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of I. M. Micow.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 109) for the relief of the estate of I. M. Micow, of the State of Alabama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and settle the claims of the estate of I. M. Micow, of the State of Alabama, for rent of buildings accruing after the suppression of hostilities in the late war, and for which a voucher was given, which is now on file in the Treasury Department, and to allow him $685.67, the amount named in the voucher.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETERS & REED.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2287) for the relief of Peters & Reed, naval contractors at the Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the bill being taken up, but I shall want the report read. It seems to me that here is a very large amount, and it is an important claim to be considered now. I know that claim was up here not long ago and opposed by some Senators who are probably better informed about it than I am.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It was opposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.] The claim is all right, I think, and ought to be paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts is here to look after it, all right.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask that the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. JOHN ROBBINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs in the House of Representatives on the 25th of February, 1876, which has been heretofore published in the RECORD.

Mr. CRAGIN. This bill has twice passed the House of Representatives, once during the present Congress and once at a former Congress, and has been twice reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate favorably. I believe it to be just and proper, although personally I have not examined the case. It went to a subcommittee and they reported it favorably, and the whole committee agreed to that report.

As I understand the case, this was a contract existing just prior to the war; it had not been entirely completed; but by the appropriation bill passed in February, 1861, which would not go into effect until the 1st of July following, an appropriation was made sufficient to pay this identical claim. Before that time arrived the navy-yard at Norfolk had been taken possession of and destroyed by the confederates, and there being no disbursing officer at that point the money was not paid over to these claimants, but was used by the proper bureau for other purposes. I have been informed at the Department that in their belief this is a claim existing against the Government and a proper one, one that should be paid. Such being my belief, I hope the bill will pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ROAD IN DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2653) making appropriation for the improvement and repair of the military road between Springfield and Fort Randall, in the Territory of Dakota, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $2,500, to be expended by and under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War, for the improvement and repair of the military road leading from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to Fort Randall, in the Territory of Dakota; the same to be expended between Springfield and Fort Randall.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS M. SIMMONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 948) for the relief of Thomas M. Simmons, which was reported from the Committee on Claims unanimously.

The bill was read. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to Thomas M. Simmons $5,994.83, in full payment for the use and occupation of the premises known as the Alabama Press-Yard No. 2 and the Crescent City Press in New Orleans, Louisiana, in the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, by the United States troops, and in full satisfaction of any and all liability of the Government for rent, use, occupation, or damage.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the report read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL from the Committee on Claims on the 28th of June, 1876:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas M. Simmons, with the accompanying papers, have duly considered the same, and report as follows:

The evidence submitted establishes the loyalty of the claimant, Simmons, and that he was the owner of five-twelfth parts of the Alabama Press Yard No. 2 and the one-half part of the Crescent City Press, situate in New Orleans, Louisiana, from 1861 to 1866, and that John P. Moore was the owner of the other interests; and that the Alabama Press-Yard No. 2 was used and occupied by the United States troops, under proper orders, from February 26, 1863, to May 31, 1865, twenty-seven months and eight days, and that the rental value during this term was $40 74½ per month, amounting to $5,582 97, and claimant's share, five-twelfth parts, amounts to $2,326 24. And that the Crescent City Press was so used and occupied, under proper orders, by the United States troops, from January 21, 1863, to May 31, 1865, twenty-eight months and nine days, and that the rental value was $7,337 17, being $259 25½ per month, and that the claimant's interest was $3,668 59, being the one-half part. The rental value of claimant's interest in all said property for said times was $5,994 83, the amount claimed by him in his petition.

Your committee addressed a letter of inquiry to the Secretary of the Treasury, which was referred to the Secretary of War, who made a full report to your committee, and furnished all the orders and papers in his Department in relation to this claim and the claim of said Moore. Under date January 19, 1864, Major General N. P. Banks, commanding at New Orleans, Louisiana, issued special orders No. 16, as follows, to wit:

[Special Orders No. 16.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, January 19, 1864.

* * * * * * *

29. It appearing to these headquarters that there is great difficulty in providing quarters for troops on their arrival here, that abuses, detrimental to the public service and the rights of neutrals and citizens, accrue from the present mode of occupying cotton-presses and other valuable property by detachments of troops, many of whom require instant repose and shelter, the following named officers are hereby appointed a military commission and board of administration: Brigadier-General Richard Arnold, chief of artillery; Lieutenant-Colonel W. S. Abert, assistant inspector general; Captain C. B. Chittenden, assistant quartermaster.

The duties of this board shall be, after careful considerations of military necessities and the economy of military administration, and the rights of citizens and neutrals, to determine, subject to the approval of these headquarters—

First. What property in the city of New Orleans and Algiers shall be exempt from military occupation, and what shall be taken for barracks, stables, and storehouses.

Second. The proper enrollment of the buildings selected, with the order of succession for their occupation as they may from time to time be required, and with a view to the least private annoyance consistent with public interests.

Third. The fixed rent to be paid during occupation by the Government.

Fourth. The alterations and repairs, more or less permanent, required by a true military economy.

Fifth. The proper consolidation of occupation, and the surrender of all buildings not required by military use, specifying the buildings surrendered and the commands to be consolidated in quarters.

By command of Major-General Banks:

GEO. B. DRAKE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Under date March 7, 1865, the following order was duly issued, to wit:

[Special Orders No. 63.—Extract.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, March 7, 1865.

* * * * * * *

10. Brigadier-General M. Brayman and Lieutenant-Colonel J. G. Chandler are appointed a commission to examine into the validity of all claims against the United States, which may be referred to them from these headquarters, or by Colonel S. P. Holabird, chief quartermaster of the department.

They will keep full records of their proceedings, and will be authorized to summon witnesses and take testimony under oath, from persons in or out of the service, whose testimony may be material.

Office room and fixtures, stationery, and the necessary clerks will be furnished by the chief quartermaster of the department. Weekly reports of business done will be made to these headquarters.

By command of Major-General Hurlbut:

J. C. STONE,
Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General.

The board of administration appointed January 19, 1864, as above, reported May 27, 1864, the occupation of the premises, and estimated the rental value at $400 per month.

The claims commissioners appointed by said Order No. 63, March 7, 1865, made a full report, and found the ownership of the premises in Moore and Simmons, and the occupation and use of the premises for the terms and the monthly rental value as first stated in this report. Their report was dated June 7, 1865.

On July 19, 1865, their report was approved by order of General Canby, and the chief quartermaster was ordered to settle the claim upon the claimants' furnishing evidence of having taken the amnesty oath.

The claimant Moore was paid the rent for his interest in November, 1865, amounting to $6,925.31. The present claimant, Simmons, was not paid, because his evidence of his loyalty was deemed unsatisfactory. Additional and satisfactory evidence of his loyalty has been furnished.

Your committee can see no just reason to refuse the prayer of the claimant, and therefore recommend that his claim be allowed at the sum of $5,994.83, and report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.) Is there objection to taking up the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. If a single objection will prevent it, I will object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. The question is on that motion.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of this bill. I ask for a division. The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims unanimously, and it will take but a moment to dispose of it.

The question being again put, there were, on a division—ayes 20, noes 4; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No business is in order, there being no quorum present.

Mr. INGALLS. By unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for a call of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves a call of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is in order now to debate this matter, I will state the reason why this bill ought not to be taken up to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order now. The Chair will put the question again and ask Senators to vote, as it is believed there is a quorum in the Chamber. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Missouri.

The question being again put, there were, on a division—ayes 24, noes 5; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves a call of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Cannot we have the yeas and nays on this proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If they are called for.

Mr. INGALLS. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Chaffee, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Eaton, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelley, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Paddock, Price, Randolph, Spencer, Teller, Wallace, West, Whyte, Windom and Wright—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Dorsey, Morton, and Sherman—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conkling, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Withers—36.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is taken up; but the morning hour has expired, and it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will continue the consideration of the bill just taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin.

Mr. WEST. I understand that the Senator having charge of that bill does not desire to press it now.

Mr. GORDON. I was going to remark that the Senator on account of whose absence the bill was postponed is still absent; and I move, therefore, that it be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia move that it be postponed or ask that it be passed over informally?

Mr. GORDON. Let it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is passed over informally.

Mr. WEST. I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill it took up just at the close of the morning hour.

INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORTON. I desire, Mr. President, in justice to myself, to exonerate myself from responsibility, to make a statement. The money appropriated by Congress to pay the expenses of investigations to be made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections is exhausted. The investigations are not nearly completed. In a bill sent here by the House a week or two ago an amendment was placed appropriating $25,000 more for the expenses of these investigations. That bill hangs in the House. We have an investigating committee at New Orleans whose investigation is not complete, a very important one; but it cannot go forward without money, it cannot go forward upon credit.

I make this statement for the purpose of exonerating myself from any responsibility in connection with the suspension of these investigations. An amendment was put into the House bill appropriating $25,000 for the expenses of the committee. That went back to the House and there has been hung up for some days.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would ask the Senator if there is no money in the contingent fund.

Mr. MORTON. No, sir.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 685) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry; and

A bill (S. No. 1040) to authorize sundry allowances to James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia, in the settlement of his accounts.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending "An act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery," asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ADLAI E. STEVENSON of Illinois, Mr. GEORGE W. HENDEE of Vermont, and Mr. AUGUSTUS A. HARDENBERGH of New Jersey managers at the conference on the part of the House of Representatives.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of forty-five hundred copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1875–'76.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4437) to remove the political disabilities of Frank S. Armistead, a citizen of West Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4439) to remove the political disabilities imposed upon John H. Forney, of Calhoun County, Alabama, by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

The Senate proceeded to conside: its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

TROOPS AT PETERSBURGH ON ELECTION DAY.

Mr. MORTON. I rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of moving the reconsideration of the resolution passed yesterday referring the message and the resolution in regard to the presence of troops at Petersburgh, in Virginia, to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do that for the purpose of submitting some remarks in answer to the speeches that were made yesterday by the Senators from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT.) Does the Senator from Louisiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves the reconsideration of the resolution adopted yesterday referring the message of the President of the United States to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS. I presume the Senator only enters the motion for the purpose of making remarks. Neither of the Senators from Virginia is now in his seat.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to say what I have to say now.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the Senator wished to speak on some future day.

Mr. MORTON. No, sir; I wish to speak to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is reconsidered and is again before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to examine whether the construction of the laws touching the elective franchise, promulgated by the Attorney-General in General Orders No. 96, of date September 7, 1876, be correct; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I profess myself somewhat surprised this morning in reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to find two elaborate speeches made by the Senators from Virginia yesterday, containing a formal indictment of the President of the United States for sending troops to Petersburgh, Virginia, during the last fall.

The President of the United States, upon a request made by the marshal and district attorney of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, and to carry out the circular which was published by the Attorney-General for the purpose of securing peaceable and fair elections in the Southern States and to execute the acts of Congress, ordered that a captain, lieutenant, and twenty-four men be sent to Petersburgh, Virginia, where they were quartered in the custom-house. They were not near the place of holding the election, were not in the presence of the polls, took no part there whatever, but were simply quartered in the custom-house. For this the President has been formally and strongly indicted by the two distinguished Senators from Virginia; and I think it would not be proper to let this pass without taking some notice of the circumstances under which these troops were sent to Petersburgh, and also calling attention to the law as it was stated by those Senators.

The President, in his message on this subject, uses this language:

> It may be, the presence of twenty-four United States soldiers under the command of a captain and lieutenant, quartered in the custom-house, at Petersburgh, Virginia, on the 7th of November, at a considerable distance from any polling-place, without any interference on their part whatever, and without going near the polls during the election, may have secured a different result from what would have been obtained if they had not been there, (to maintain the peace in case of riot,) on the face of the returns.

The Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] in the course of his remarks used this language:

> A careful consideration of the message itself will leave us at a loss whether most to admire the perspicuity of its diction, the independence with which it sets at defiance the ordinary rules of grammatical construction, the felicitous innuendo whereby it conveys an insinuation against the character and good name of the people of Virginia as gratuitous as it is slanderous, or the bold avowal of a principle which, it admitted and accepted unchallenged, will with its inevitable and unavoidable corollary, put an end to republican institutions and utterly subvert and destroy the fundamental principles of our Constitution.
>
> Mr. President, the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States conveys all the powers which are granted to the Government of the United States under any circumstances to march their troops into the interior of any State. It is as follows:
>
> "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence."
> It will be thus seen that by the provisions of the Constitution the United States is authorized only in one single instance without qualification to occupy the territory of a State with its armed troops; that is, to repel invasion. On the application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature is not in session, it is also authorized to march its troops into the territory of the different States.

Mr. President, I entirely dissent from the law as stated by the Senator from Virginia. It is, I think, without any authority or foundation in the Constitution or in the statutes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not know whether the Senator is alluding to my remarks or my colleague's.

Mr. MORTON. Your colleague's just now.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague has been called to the Treasury Department on business for an hour or two, and I prefer that the Senator should wait until his return.

Mr. MORTON. I will say to the Senator that his colleague will have an opportunity to read what I have to say, and as there was some reply made to me yesterday by his colleague who did not wait for my presence, he will excuse me for saying now what I have to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. MORTON. The proposition here is, Mr. President, that the President of the United States cannot send troops to the interior of a State, "march them," in the language of the Senator, into the interior of a State, unless to repel invasion or unless he has been called upon by the governor or by the Legislature formally to suppress domestic violence against the State. That is the proposition, and from that I dissent utterly. The President cannot intervene to suppress domestic violence against a State unless formally called upon as prescribed by the Constitution and laws; but to say that he cannot march troops to the interior of a State or across a State or encamp them where he pleases without thus being called upon or to repel invasion, is entirely without authority. On the contrary, every President of the United States from the foundation of the Government has exercised this power and must continue to exercise this power. To march troops to a point in Virginia, or across Virginia or into or across any other State, is one thing; it may be done in time of peace whenever it is required by health or convenience, or for any other purpose; but to interfere to suppress domestic violence against a State does first require a call made according to the law and the Constitution; so that here are two things commingled that have no application to each other whatever. But the President of the United States has the right to march troops into any State, to have them at any point for the purpose of enabling the officers of the United States to serve or to enforce process, or to enforce the law of the land in regard to the fourteenth amendment; and he has authority directly under the statutes of the United States to have them present at the polls to preserve the peace. I read from section 2002 of the Revised Statutes:

> No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

He is expressly authorized to have them at the polls in the presence of an election if it is necessary for the purpose of keeping the peace; but this was not done in the case referred to. They were not present at the polls; they were not in sight, and they took no part whatever in the conduct of that election. The President of the United States has a right to quarter his troops wherever he pleases so as not to interfere with private or public rights in any State or Territory, in any town or city, and to say that he cannot march them upon "the sacred soil of Virginia" or the sacred soil of any other State or across it without first having been required under the law to interfere to suppress domestic violence or to repel invasion, is entirely without foundation or authority.

So much for that. Now I come to a quotation made in the speech of the Senator from Virginia of the proclamation of the governor of Virginia in regard to this matter. It begins thus:

> Information has just been received, from authentic sources, that a detachment of the United States Army was this day quartered at Petersburgh, with orders to remain until after the elections and to be under the sole direction of Federal officials. The voting-places at Petersburgh are being surrounded with a cordon of bayonets on the eve of the elections.

Of course the executive of a State would not state what he did not believe to be true; but he must have been greatly excited, and his imagination greatly distempered if merely putting twenty-four men into the custom-house, at a distance from the polls, could be the placing of a cordon of bayonets around the voting-places in the city of Petersburgh. But he goes on to say:

> It is provided by the Constitution of the United States that the Government thereof shall protect each of the States, on the application of the Legislature, (or the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.
> No domestic violence, no breach of the peace, no molestation of any citizen in the exercise of any right, exists, or is threatened, or apprehended, or likely to arise in this Commonwealth. Perfect peace, order, and security reign throughout all our borders. Every citizen, of whatever race, color, or condition, is protected and will be protected, and will be protected in all his personal and political rights, privileges, and immunities by all the authorities of this State.

Here the governor goes upon the same idea, that there is no power to march troops into Virginia or across Virginia unless the President has been required by the Legislature or by the executive, in accordance with the Constitution and the act of Congress. I have already said all that I need to say in regard to that assumption.

Now, sir, as it has been sought very elaborately to place the President of the United States in the wrong in regard to this matter, and to show an intention on his part to interfere with the freedom of elections, I desire to refer to the President's message and the accompanying documents. While complaint is made about the invasion of State rights and of a purpose to interfere with the freedom of elections upon the part of the President of the United States, the causes which led to that being done which was done are ignored or passed over with very little attention indeed. Now I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to what it was that led to sending this small body of men to the city of Petersburgh. I ask the Secretary to read the affidavits and accompanying papers sent by the President with his message, beginning on page 8, as I have marked. Read those which I have marked with pencil.

The Secretary read as follows:

Affidavits, &c., relative to the necessity for troops at Petersburgh.

This is to certify that, on the morning of the 25th day of May last, I commenced the issue of republican tickets in the fifth ward, this city, of which I am a resident and qualified voter, at a room provided for that purpose fifteen to twenty rods distant from the polling-place. During the day rumors reached me from various sources that the conservatives, well armed with pistols, stones, and clubs, were organizing and drilling with a view to make an attack upon the premises which I occupied, and secure the books in my possession which contained the republican tickets. These facts I reported to the republican headquarters, and when an opportunity presented itself forwarded a duplicate of each ticket issued to headquarters, each one having attached a coupon showing the name of the party to whom the original ticket was issued. Between the hours of three and four o'clock, as well as I can remember, an organized company of men, armed as above stated, filed in front of the building of which I was the sole occupant, and halted, when one Emmet Richardson came to the door and demanded to know "what in hell I was doing in there?" I replied that I was issuing republican tickets. He said, "Hand me that book," referring to the book which I held in my hand and which contained the republican tickets. I tore one from the book, which I handed him. He said, "I want to see the rest," when I handed him the coupon. The same he tore up and threw on the floor, saying, "God damn it, I want that book," which I refused him. He then went away and joined the company, and the order was given to forward march, the company going up the street a few rods, when, turning around so as to face the building I was in, started upon a run and made an immediate attack upon a few defenseless negroes who were standing around the place from which I had been issuing tickets, with clubs and stones, which they used without the semblance of mercy, besides shooting one man in the face, after having knocked him down with a stone. These men had interfered with no one. I succeeded in getting out of the building at the beginning of the attack and was immediately arrested, carried before the judges of election, (one of whom I recognized as one of the city police,) who committed me to jail for "inciting a riot," without giving me any hearing whatever or taking any testimony for or against me. When brought before his honor the mayor no one appeared against me, and I was discharged.

I hereby further certify that I firmly believe that a large proportion of the republican voters of this city will not go to the polls on the coming election-day unless the Government will furnish them ample protection, by sending troops here for that purpose, as they are fully convinced that their lives are positively endangered by so doing, and that they fear violence and bloodshed.

The above I certify to, as being substantially true and correct.

GEORGE F. MARBLE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of October, 1876, at Petersburgh, Virginia.

J. L. WATERMAN,
United States Commissioner, Eastern District of Virginia.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Eastern District of Virginia, ss:

Personally appeared before me Moses Norman, who made the following statement:

That he is a citizen and voter in the fifth ward of the city of Petersburgh; that on the day of the election, May 25, 1876, he came to the private room occupied by George F. Marble, the republican-ticket distributer at the fifth ward precinct. One of Marble's assistants, Beverly Younger, handed him the tally-book containing the republican tickets. Before he could get out his ticket one Emmet Richardson, one of a democratic gang who attacked the said room, demanded the tally-book of him. He refused to give it up. Some of the gang then called a rally on him, seized him, took the tally-book from him, beat him over the head, and five or six pistols were directed at him. Then Jim Eames grasped him by the arm, and some one in the crowd called on Eames to let go of him. On turning around he saw a man with a pistol directed at him ready to shoot. Jim Eames said, "Don't shoot him; you have got the book now; what do you want to shoot him for?" and Mr. Thomas Williamson, his employer, said, "What do you want to shoot him for? He has done nothing." The man then said, "If you say don't shoot, I won't." Policeman Deaton came up during the melee and commanded the peace, but some answered, "We haven't got the tally-book yet." Upon which he turned his back and left him in the hands of the ruffians.

When the gang gathered around him, under the order to rally, they commenced firing pistols at the colored men standing about the office.

Personally appeared before me William White, who was the owner of the shop from which the republicans distributed the tickets on the day of election, (May 25, 1876;) he says.

That he is a resident and voter in the fifth ward of the city of Petersburgh. On the day of election was at a blacksmith-shop, several rods distant from his shop, in which the republican-ticket distributer was stationed, when the riot commenced. The rioters were regularly organized, and were under the command of Jim Eames. They maneuvered and drilled about and around the shop before advancing on it. I saw them seize Moses Norman and attempt to wrest the tally-box from him. I saw —— Stoner fire at and shoot Edward Edwards in the head, who fell, then rose up and ran a short distance and fell again, when he was struck with a rock. Stoner ran up again and kicked him about.

Stoner was never punished for his offense. I do not believe that the colored people will dare to come out and vote unless we have protection.

Daniel R. Butts, fifty-five years of age, resided on the 25th day of May last in the first ward of the city of Petersburg; being duly sworn, deposes and says that, on the above election-day, the 25th day of May aforesaid, he rented a room of his house to the distributer of the republican tickets. During the afternoon word came to the house of this deponent that there was a contemplated raid on the house for the purpose of capturing the republican books, upon which they locked the doors; that soon after a gang of roughs broke in the doors with an ax and three of them entered; one of them, George Hinton, brother of William E. Hinton, democratic candidate for Congress. As they entered they asked of this deponent, "Where are those books?" One of them then went up to this deponent and knocked him down and commenced stamping him with the feet, and all joined in beating and kicking him till they left him for dead, and broke all his furniture to pieces; that no arrests were made, no examination was made, and no one has been punished, and this deponent has not yet recovered from the injuries received on that day.

And this deponent verily believes that the colored republicans in particular will not dare come out on election day without the assurance of protection.

Personally appeared before me, J. L. Waterman, a commissioner in and for the eastern district of Virginia, Edward Edwards, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a resident voter in the fifth ward of the city of Petersburgh; that on the 25th day of May last, that being the day of election for the municipal officers of the city of Petersburgh, that a company of persons, about twenty-five to thirty in number, who seemed to be under the drill, as captain, of one James Eames, a resident of said ward, having on the day above cited been drilled in a field called Battersea, and within a distance of thirty yards of place of voting, made an attack on this deponent by first striking him with a rock, and before recovering shot this deponent in the head.

This deponent further deposes and says that the said company, commanded as aforesaid, on returning from the place of drill, halted on a bridge in front of where the republicans were distributing the tickets or ballots, when a Emmett Richardson, as lieutenant, and John Gill, as sergeant, came up to the window where the ticket-holder was, and beckoned to the remainder of the company to come on, and gave the order to rally and go for them, meaning the republicans in and around the house; and as they commenced the charge by throwing rocks, one of which struck this deponent as aforesaid, then shot at this deponent twice, the second shot taking effect in the right side of the head and burying itself in the flesh, which felled him to the ground, rendering him insensible, and had to be carried home in a wagon, where he lay in a critical condition for five weeks under the care of a physician, five pieces of bone having been extracted from his skull and latterly the pistol-ball was extracted.

And this deponent further states that one —— Stoner fired the pistol, the bullet of which took effect in the head of this deponent; and this deponent further states that, inasmuch as no criminal proceedings were ever taken against the said Stoner, no republican is safe to come out to vote at any election without protection, and believes they will not come out to vote.

This 16th day of October, 1876, personally appeared before me, J. L. Waterman, United States commissioner, William Green, who deposes and says he is a resident and voter in the first ward of the city of Petersburgh, State of Virginia; that he was present at the republican ticket-holder's office, in the first ward, on election day, Thursday, May 25, 1876.

That about five o'clock p. m. a raid was made upon the building by a crowd of democratic roughs, who obtained entrance by breaking in the door with an ax, and with loud yells and curses came in and demanded the "books." Mistaking Daniel R. Butts, the tenant of the house, for the ticket-holder, they knocked him off his chair, and beat and stamped him in an unmerciful manner, crying "Kill the d—d nigger." While they were beating him this deponent made his escape through a window with the portion of the book containing the names of those having voted, having torn it apart, and left the other part for them, to throw them off the scent, and thus prevent them from pursuing him until he could get out of harm's way. Upon getting out he saw a policeman standing at the entrance of the alley with a drawn pistol, saying, "Stand back, you d—d black sons of bitches," to those who were attempting to go to the rescue. He returned the next day, and found Mr. Butts lying upon his couch, unable to help himself, and beaten nearly to death; also found all his furniture broken in pieces. The old man did not get about for months. This deponent was compelled to keep hidden for several days subsequent, not daring to sleep at home for over a week on account of threats of violence to his person if they could get hold of him.

For this outrage, perpetrated in broad daylight, with policemen aiding and abetting it, no arrests were ever made, and no one punished. Colored republicans say to this deponent daily that they dare not go to the polls at the November election unless troops are stationed here to guarantee protection to their lives and persons; that they believe, from democratic threats that they hear uttered daily, that the democrats intend to override by force all civil authority, and that no force of United States marshals or deputy marshals will suffice to preserve order and protect the lives of voters, and there is no use in attempting to hold an election without some guarantee of protection.

OFFICE UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
Culpeper, Virginia, September 16, 1876.

SIR: I inclose herein an editorial from the most influential democratic paper south of James River, in Virginia, which speaks for itself. I desire only to say that any intelligent man acquainted with the course of the democratic politicians and strikers in Petersburgh for the last three years will readily understand the force and meaning of the inclosed article. At the last State election held in the city of Petersburgh (for State senators) the present democratic nominee for Congress was counted in by a large majority over his competitor, who was undoubtedly fairly elected by a majority of hundreds. I am, from my knowledge of the character of that and other elections held in Petersburgh, prepared to say that, unless the marshal is furnished with a better and more reliable posse than he will be able to summon to his aid from residents of the city, the election on the 7th of November in that city will be a farce as gigantic as it will be fraudulent. I am not now prepared to express the opinion that the presence of troops to act as the marshal's posse will be essential to the preservation of order and to insure a fair election at other points in the eastern district of Virginia, but of the necessity of their presence to prevent bloodshed and secure a fair election in Petersburgh I think there cannot be a shadow of doubt. I deem it my duty to say so in advance, in the hope that precautions may be taken to prevent the scenes that will occur there if the hands of the marshal are not strengthened by the co-operation of the military.

At the request of the marshal I am now engaged in preparing a statement of the powers and duties of special deputy marshals and supervisors of elections, in which their attention is particularly called to certain provisions of the election law of Virginia, which it is very desirable they should understand and closely follow.

I shall earnestly endeavor to render all the aid in my power toward securing the due execution of the election laws and the prevention of disorder and fraudulent voting.

Very respectfully,

L. L. LEWIS,
United States Attorney.

Hon. ALPHONSO TAFT,
Attorney-General.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, Virginia, October 31, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to state that it is the understanding here that United States attorney for this district, L. L. Lewis, esq., and other official and non-official citizens of Petersburgh, have represented to your Department that troops will be needed to protect the rights of citizens and the United States officials on election day. That opinion is doubtless based on the history of elections in that city for the past two years, which have been anything but orderly. Even in the little municipal election last spring for mayor, &c., the most disgraceful outrages were perpetrated. Troops can do no harm to well-disposed citizens, and in the light of experience I am of opinion that they will be needed. Their presence will be, I think, promotive of good order.

I have appointed many deputy United States marshals, and shall be present on election day, and have requested the presence of the assistant district attorney for this district.

Some apprehensions are expressed as to the condition of Norfolk and Portsmouth; but they are so near to Fortress Monroe that I do not think serious disturbances are likely to arise. The troops at the Gosport navy-yard might be held in requisition for the latter, and the marines for the former in case needed.

In this city no disturbance or disorder is anticipated. Shall advise you if developments are made.

Respectfully,

C. P. RAMSDELL,
United States Marshal.

Hon. ALPHONSO TAFT,
Attorney-General.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA,
Petersburgh, October 31, 1876.

SIR: I am this moment in receipt of information from Portsmouth, Virginia, as follows:

Last night a meeting at which Mr. Segar, candidate for Congress in that district on the republican ticket, and Mr. Ball, of Alexandria, attempted to speak, was broken up, and on their going out a regular assault was made on them by the democratic roughs, and Mr. Dezendorf, who attempted to speak in the hall, was beaten, and burned by the powder of a pistol discharged at his head. Segar and Ball were hurried off while Dezendorf's manly defense was occupying the attention of the scoundrels. About twenty pistol shots were fired. Mr. Segar is satisfied that they will not let him be elected if ruffianism and fraud can prevent.

I have appointed deputy marshals in Portsmouth, Norfolk, and in some of the counties of that district. I spoke in Portsmouth about four weeks ago at an open-air meeting. There was some disturbance, but not serious.

I have made a thorough canvass of the fourth or Petersburgh congressional district, traveling between two hundred and three hundred miles, and speaking at the court-house in each of the eleven counties. Deputy marshals have been appointed in each county, and every possible precaution made to preserve the peace and secure the citizens in their rights under the Constitution; but I am prepared to witness and hear of violence in this part of the South. The truth is this:

The white people are generally opposed to colored suffrage, and regard any means justifiable to render that vote nugatory.

Regarding Petersburgh as the most critical locality on day of election, I thought of remaining here unless it be thought advisable for me to be at headquarters in Richmond.

Very respectfully,

C. P. RAMSDELL,
United States Marshal.

Hon. ALPHONSO TAFT.

P. S.—I addressed a communication to you to-day as to troops. The Portsmouth affair only confirms my anticipations.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, these representations were made to the President or to the Attorney-General by the marshal of the district and by the district attorney, and were supported by six or seven affidavits, presenting a condition of things at Petersburgh that would have justified the President in sending a much larger detachment of troops there and in taking more stringent measures than he did for the preservation of the peace. On the 25th day of May last, only a few months preceding the presidential election, this bloody riot had taken place in the streets of Petersburgh. Nobody had been punished. Half a dozen republicans had been nearly killed; others were stoned and fired at; but all this is to be ignored, no attention is to be paid to it, and the President is arraigned as having violated the law and the Constitution for having sent twenty-four soldiers there under a captain and a lieutenant simply to preserve the peace at the polls. They did not interfere, did no unlawful, improper, or intrusive act; did their duty quietly, unobtrusively; and no complaint has been made in regard to their action there that day.

Here comes in the trouble, that this violence, these murders so often committed, the attempt to murder on that day at Petersburgh, these outrages and crimes committed in the Southern States, are not regarded as crimes; they are not regarded as any justification or excuse for any attempt on the part of the President to preserve the peace and protect the lives of citizens of the United States. Violence is regarded as a legitimate idea, a legitimate thing. That these things were done is not to be disputed, and yet they are not admitted as furnishing the slightest excuse or justification for what the President has done. A half dozen republicans are brutually assaulted, an attempt is made to break up the election and deprive a large body of men of their rights, and when the President, appealed to by the proper authorities, supported by affidavits, unquestioned evidence, sent a few men there to preserve the peace he is arraigned in the Senate of the United States as a criminal, as having violated the Constitution and law, and, as was said by the Senator, establishing a principle which will be the destruction of this Republic. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] did pay some attention to this evidence and I call the attention of the Senate now to the way in which he disposed of the evidence that I have had read, the communications from the marshal and from the attorney-general. The Senator says:

Appended to these letters of Mr. Ramsdell and Mr. Lewis we find a certain number of affidavits, testifying in the main to violent scenes which are said to have occurred at the municipal election there in May last. Marble, the principal witness, is a custom-house official, whose character, I understand, is not of the best, though I know nothing of him personally, and consequently do not wish to impugn it—

Of course his testimony is disposed of; character said to be none of the best.

The others are, I believe, without exception colored people.

That, of course, disposes of their testimony!

I do not impute to these colored people any desire or design of falsifying any statements which are embodied in these returns; but I do assert that, owing to their ignorance and their credulity, they are entirely at the mercy of any person in whom they have confidence who will represent to them that a paper contains any given statement, and they will attach their signatures to it. Therefore the affidavits of this class of persons are always to be received with many grains of allowance. I have a striking evidence of the fact in the case before me, because I find here that one of the strongest affidavits which are embodied in this report purports to be signed by one William White, a blacksmith, who lived near the scene of the reputed act of violence, and yet this very man has furnished this affidavit:

"This is to certify that I, William White, blacksmith in fifth ward, did not authorize any one to sign my name to the affidavit published in the Washington Republican, nor did I sign it myself, and hope the citizens will not regard it.

his
"WILLIAM + WHITE."
mark.

Whether Mr. White was bull-dozed when he signed the first affidavit or when he signed the latter, we may infer perhaps from some other circumstances:

Witness:
E. M. WILLIAMSON.
JAMES C. BAIN.

This 6th day of November, 1876, personally appeared before me William White, blacksmith in fifth ward of Petersburgh, and made oath to the truth and correctness of the above certificate, witnessed by E. M. Williamson and J. C. Bain, and swore to the answers to the following questions:

Question. Are you afraid to vote the republican ticket on the 7th of November?
Answer. No.
Q. Do you know of any one who is afraid to vote it?
A. No.
Q. Do you think it necessary for any military force to be here for the protection of any citizens in their rights to vote?
A. No.

J. R. QUARLES,
Justice of the Peace.

Now, this very thing upon its face bears the evidence that he had fallen into the hands of his enemies and was compelled to make these statements; but the thing that discredits the whole is that he does not say that the statements in the first affidavit were false. He says so nowhere; and that is all the affidavit that they attack. There are six affidavits besides to which no reference is made, over which no discredit can be thrown, or is thrown, except to say that one of them is said not to have a good character and that the others are colored men. When they come to White's affidavit they say that he did not sign the affidavit, but they did not get him to say that the statements in it were not true. Now I come to the mayor:

And yet it is upon the testimony of this man in part that this action is predicated. I ask also, in this same connection, to rebut the statements embodied in these affidavits, the assertions made by Mr. C. P. Ramsdell and Mr. Lewis, to read the affidavit of the mayor of the city, Mr. W. F. C. Gregory, who was mayor of the city at the time this alleged act of violence occurred, to wit, in 1876. It is as follows:

"I, W. F. C. Gregory, do hereby certify that on the afternoon of the 25th day of May, 1876, while seated in the mayor's office attending to official business Dr. Jorgenson came in and in an excited manner stated that a serious fight was going on at the election precinct in the fifth ward. The captain of police being in my office, I directed him to go at once and attend to the matter. Thinking it however best I entered a carriage and went in person directly to the place, and found no fighting there; but from the testimony heard by me as mayor it appeared that there had been a fight such as occurs in many cities on like occasions."

Of course that disposes of it.

"I, Nathan Stoner was brought before me, as mayor, charged with shooting Edward Edwards; several witnesses were examined, among them A. W. Archer, a justice of the city, who was present at the time of the fight, who put an end to it by commanding the peace. It was in evidence that a pistol was fired by an unknown party, but that the prisoner could not have shot Edwards from the position which he occupied. The physician who examined the wound could not say whether the wound was caused by a pistol-shot or with a brick or some such thing. Stoner was discharged. I have been informed that Edwards soon recovered and is now well.

"I regarded the whole affair as the result of free use of whisky on the election day, and not a premeditated affair.

"Given under my hand this 19th day of December, 1876.

"W. F. C. GREGORY."

Now, Mr. President, any one can see that the statements made by this mayor are no answer to these charges whatever. He says when he got there there was no fight. I suppose the fight was over and the injury had already been inflicted. It is smoothed over, passed over as lightly as possible. This body of testimony has not been impeached, nor has it been affected by what was stated here. The President acted upon the statement of the proper authorities, of the district attorney, of the marshal of the State, supported by six or seven affidavits, showing a bloody outrage, and the very attempt that is made to mitigate that outrage admits, and admits strongly, that it did take place. To prevent the recurrence of a like outrage, and upon being properly requested, the President sent this small body of twenty-four men, who behaved themselves discreetly; and for that he is arraigned as having violated the Constitution. When the time shall come that these outrages are admitted, and not justified, when they are no longer excused or palliated, then they will cease to exist; but when the crime is made to consist in trying to prevent outrages, when it is made a crime to protect citizens of the United States in their lives and in their dearest rights, and the men who inflict these crimes and perpetrate these enormities are excused and ignored, so long as that is done these things will be continued.

Mr. President, so far as the facts are concerned, I give them as they were laid by the President before the Senate; and so far as the law is concerned laid down by the two Senators, I dissent from it utterly. It is not supported by any dictum, it is not supported by any provision of the Constitution or of the statutes. The President in doing what he did had a right to do it, whether he had these affidavits or not. Whether he was called upon by the marshal and the district attorney or not, he had a right to send troops into Virginia and give them summer quarters or winter quarters in Petersburgh, or anywhere else, so that it did not interfere with the rights of private property and with the rights of the people. He had a right to do this thing, with or without this application. But looking at it in the light of the evidence, in the light of the demand made by the proper authorities, we find that the action of the President was entirely justifiable and that there is no ground whatever for this assault upon him.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Indiana. If the Senator means to say that I am any apologist for crime or outrage he does me a very great injustice, and I deny the statement positively. If I were satisfied and believed that any outrage had been committed in Petersburgh or Richmond or anywhere in Virginia, I would be as quick and as fierce to denounce it as the Senator himself; but I deny positively that the crimes imputed in the papers he has read were ever committed. The testimony is false, it is manufactured; and because we attempt here to repel what we believe to be a false charge upon our State and upon our people, is it to be imputed to us that we are apologists for crime and outrage? The Senator himself, who is the great receptacle to whom all reports of outrages are directed, to whom information is conveyed of everything that looks like an outrage in the Southern States, had never heard of this affair until the resolution of my colleague was introduced in the Senate and was under discussion early in this session. Mr. Jorgenson came upon the floor and prompted that Senator, and I suppose that was the first information he had in regard to these alleged outrages in May, 1876. If they had existed, if these things had really occurred, the Senator, as the great expounder of these outrages in the South, would have been the very first man to whom they would have been communicated. But the Senator seems to have forgotten what he said on the former occasion. He is very much like Falstaff, who saw so many men in buckram. They grow as the case goes along. In the remarks which he made when prompted by Jorgenson on a former occasion the Senator only referred to three republicans who were damaged on that occasion. Now he makes the declaration that half a dozen republicans were nearly killed. The evidence from which the Senator has read does not show that half a dozen republicans were nearly killed, or that any republicans were nearly killed. Taking all to be true that the Senator has read, it does not support the Senator's extravagant assertion that half a dozen republicans were nearly killed on that occasion. But admitting all that to be true, let us look at these affidavits a little. Let us take William White's affidavit as a specimen. He comes after the alleged date of that affidavit and makes another. The Senator says that White's last affidavit does not dispute the allegation of the first affidavit. He does positively dispute the allegation made in the first affidavit. In the first affidavit he says:

Stoner was never punished for his offense. I do not believe that the colored people will dare to come out and vote unless we have protection.

That is the allegation that he makes in the affidavit read by the Senator from Indiana. In the affidavit of White read by my colleague yesterday he says this:

Question. Are you afraid to vote the republican ticket on the 7th of November?
Answer. No.
Q. Do you know of any one who is afraid to vote it?
A. No.
Q. Do you think it necessary for any military forces to be here for the protection of any citizens in their rights to vote?
A. No.

The Senator says that the man was bull-dozed, or insinuates that he was, when he made this second affidavit. That affidavit was given when these twenty-four troops were in the city of Petersburgh. No republicans could be bull-dozed then. They had not only the twenty-four troops with their officers, but they had two hundred and fifty special deputy marshals to protect the people in their rights, if necessary. The idea that the republicans could be bull-dozed with United States troops in the city and two hundred and fifty special deputy marshals there is absurd. The affidavit must have been voluntary, and it must be taken as true; and the other one which the Senator relied upon was false. If the Senator will take the trouble to analyze these affidavits a little, he will find how much they conflict with one another. They were not got up with that skill which ought to have been used in order to make an impression. The people of Petersburgh looked for the men who made the affidavits, and White was about the only one they could find. They found him, and when found they ascertained from him that the alleged affidavit purporting to be made by him had never been made by him, but that it had been manufactured. I do not care for the present purpose whether it was true or untrue, for if the President is to be influenced in his action in sending troops to a State by manufactured evidence, whether true or false, I submit that it is a great wrong. If White never made the affidavit, and if parties in Petersburgh manufactured in his name an affidavit and sent it to the President as a basis of action on his part, it was a great wrong, a great outrage, and a great violence to our institutions. It was a thing that the President himself should punish if he has been willfully misled in that way. White does swear that he never made the affidavit, and the Senator brings forward and reads an affidavit which the man himself swears he never made. It is a matter of little consequence in that point of view whether it was true or false. If it was false, of course the whole thing goes to the ground. If it was manufactured, if it was forged, if it was got up by parties unknown to White, it goes to the ground likewise. It makes no difference as to the merits of the case. Whether it is supported by false affidavits or manufactured affidavits, equally the case goes to the ground. If Senators will take the trouble to read these affidavits, they will find that the man who got them up did not display the skill he might to have done when he wanted to manufacture affidavits in order to make an impression. If you will read them you will find that they contradict each other expressly; that they give different versions of the same affair; that one man who witnessed certain transactions swears to outrages by a man named Richardson; another man who witnessed the same thing, or swears he witnessed it, says the outrage was committed by Jim Eames. One man swears it was committed on Marble and another man swears that it was not committed on Marble at all, but that it was committed on a man named Moses Norman. These affidavits which thus give different versions of the same transaction are relied upon as proof to sustain the allegations made by the Senator from Indiana.

These affidavits, purporting to be of parties in Petersburgh, are manifestly false, because one deputy United States marshal went into the city of Petersburgh alone, and arrested some six or eight men without help, and took those men through the streets of Petersburgh and brought them before an officer. That was done when there were no United States troops there, when, if violence was premeditated, it could easily have been practiced. This officer walked with half a dozen prisoners, without any guard, through the streets of Petersburgh and carried these prisoners into custody. Yet that is the city in which the Senator says that a man who has been outraged, has been shot and beaten, dare not apply for redress.

I do not propose to dispute for a moment the right of the President to send troops into Virginia. It is not the fact of sending them there that I comment upon, but it is the purpose for which they were sent there that I consider. If the President wants to send a regiment or the whole Army down to Virginia merely to stay and be entertained and to be well treated, I am content. I have no objection to that, and I think he has a right to do it. We should be very glad to have them there. The Senator forgets that the President himself says he did not send them there for the mere purpose of keeping them there, of having them there, but that he sent them there for a specific purpose. He tells what that purpose was, and it is that that we object to; not to the mere presence of troops in the State. The President sent these troops there a few days before the election. Let me read once more what I read yesterday. Here is the order of the President as printed in the RECORD. The Senator talks about our objecting to troops going there merely for the purpose of passing through the State and being in the State. The Senator certainly thinks we have much less knowledge than we ought to have to be in the position we are, if we appear to object to the passage of troops through the State. With this order of the President before his eyes, he overlooks the fact that both my colleague and myself made objection to the purpose for which the troops went there. Here is the order:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, November 4, 1876.

To Hon. R. W. HUGHES,
United States District Judge of the Eastern District of Virginia:

Whereas I have reason to believe that offenses are likely to be committed within said judicial district against the provisions of chapter 7, of the title "Crimes," of the Revised Statutes of the United States, you are, therefore, hereby requested and directed to attend at Petersburgh, Virginia, on the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th days of November current for the purposes mentioned in section 1988 of said Revised Statutes.

U. S. GRANT.

The judge was sent there for that purpose. The Army was sent for the same purpose. The objection is that the President sent troops in the State for the purposes indicated in the letter to Judge Hughes that he had reason to believe that offenses were likely to be committed, or had been committed, against chapter 7 of the title "Crimes," and he sent them there for the purpose of executing the laws in that respect. It is in that respect that my colleague and myself insisted that the President had no right to do it under the circumstances that were laid before him. He had been deceived by these identical men on the very occasion to which I referred, in which a United States deputy marshal Caldwell went into Petersburgh alone and arrested election judges. On that identical occasion the same complaints had been made to the President that were made now. Affidavits were then manufactured. Negroes were got to swear that they apprehended violence and had heard that a mob was going to attack the United States property. These affidavits were submitted to the President, but they proved to be wholly without foundation. Nobody in Petersburgh except the men engaged in manufacturing those affidavits ever heard of the intention to do the thing complained of. Caldwell went to the city. He found the city quiet, people engaged in their every-day business, and everything going on peaceably; no riot, no mob, and no talk of a mob or riot. He went into the city alone, arrested the judges of election, and carried them away from the city, and subsequently to that some of the very persons who appeared to have made affidavits came out and said they had never made them. I recollect distinctly one affidavit in which a colored man swore that he had been taken to the custom-house and there had been given a paper done up in an envelope and had been told to take that paper somewhere and swear to it, and he did take it and swear to it, and he never knew what was in the paper at all. That was a specimen of the way in which the affidavits were manufactured.

Now, Mr. President, the only ground upon which these parties, Mr. Lewis—who I do not believe was in that part of the State at all about that period—and Mr. Ramsdell, or any of these people proceeded was the fact that there had been a riot in the city, as they say, nearly six months before. To garrison the city on account of that riot was manifestly improper. The affidavits state that the rioters came out in companies, went into the streets and drilled, went through the performance of drilling in the streets preparatory to making an attack on the polls; went out to a place called Battersea and there drilled. Such a statement is surely improbable. That a company of roughs should, if they desired to make an attack on the ballot-boxes, go into the streets in advance, when it was known United States marshals and commissioners were in the city, and drill, and thus give the public warning of their purpose, is manifestly untrue. Nothing of that sort could have occurred. Why go through the ceremony of drilling? Why go out into the streets and make their men shoulder arms and carry arms, right face and left face, in advance of making an attack on the polling-places? It is manifestly absurd. Nothing of that sort ever could have occurred or ever did occur.

But, Mr. President, when we find that the only thing that these parties claim as a reason for this movement is the fact that there had been an alleged riot six months before, I deny that that was any ground for sending troops to Petersburgh. That there had been a riot there then was certainly no reason why there should be one now. Surely the fact that on one occasion from some cause there had been an outbreak, or a mob, or a riot, was no reason for believing there was going to be one again. The gentlemen who sent these letters ought to have given some reason, not an account of what had occurred but what they believed was going to occur, then based on something they knew or heard, not based on their mere fears and suspicions. Mr. Ramsdell, who writes the very letter we are talking about, is not only marshal, but chairman of the republican committee. He says in his letter, to be found on page 14 of the document:

> I have made a thorough canvass of the fourth or Petersburgh congressional district, traveling between two hundred and three hundred miles and speaking at the court house in each of the eleven counties. Deputy marshals have been appointed in each county, and every possible precaution made to preserve the peace and secure the citizens in their rights under the Constitution; but I am prepared to witness and hear of violence in this part of the South.

He has been in every county, traveled two or three hundred miles, spoken in every county, and yet he does not testify to any violence. He says he had taken the steps necessary to preserve the peace, that he had appointed deputy marshals in all these counties, invested with their great and immense power; and yet the same man who had traveled over the district unmolested and had spoken in it unmolested, who had canvassed every county in the district unmolested, who saw no man in arms, who testifies that he heard no threat, saw no outbreak, saw no violence, that same man says, "Well, send troops to Petersburgh." It is manifest from Ramsdell's own statement that he had no reason to fear any outbreak in Petersburgh, and that the object was not to prevent an outbreak, but for the purpose we have indicated, of having a force there which he thought might overawe the voters.

If there was a question of conflict between the citizens of Petersburgh and twenty-four soldiers and that was all of it, there would have been a very short conflict, of course; but the citizens of Petersburgh respected the twenty-four troops because they were the representatives of the law. It is not the number, it is the threat that such a force implies. It is as much as to say, "Now, these twenty-four men are not sufficient to put down a mob, but at the back of these twenty-four is the whole United States Army." If there had been a mob, a riot, certainly twenty-four men would have been very insufficient to put down four or five thousand; and the mere fact of sending such a small number of men there showed that the parties who got them there that day really knew and believed their presence was not needed to suppress a riot. Could twenty-four men suppress a thousand, if it was a question of mere force? Of course that could not have been the purpose.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, so far as any attempt to make this matter personal to myself is concerned, it will utterly fail. The Senator says that I am the great receptacle for charges of this characters. I was not the receptacle of this. It was not sent to me except as it was sent to the Senate by the President of the United States. But I would rather be the receptacle of evidence of outrages of this kind than to be their defender, very much.

Now the Senator says in his speech that he admits that the President had a right to send these troops there; that he and his colleague admit that, but that they do not like the purpose for which the troops were sent. Mr. President, the Senator's speech of yesterday, if I have read it aright, (and it is in the RECORD for everybody to read,) is an argument that the President had no right to do it at all. The Senator has certainly changed his ground right about face.

Mr. JOHNSTON. By no means, sir.

Mr. MORTON. O, yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I did not say the President had a right to send them there for that purpose. I say he had not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON. He had a right to send them to pass through the State and to stay there to be entertained; but I deny, as I did yesterday, that he had a right to send them at the time of the election for the purpose of controlling the election.

Mr. MORTON. My friend will find his memory very much at fault if he will only review his own remarks made yesterday as to the right of the President to send his troops there; he will find that his whole argument went against that right. The argument was that the law itself was unconstitutional, and then he referred to the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution, the same section quoted by his colleague, that the United States shall protect each State against invasion, and on the application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence, and finally the third article of amendments, "that no soldier shall in time of peace be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law," and he then said:

> Take all these provisions—their purpose, intent, and spirit—and how does section 2002 of the election law agree with them? The duty of keeping the peace in the States belongs to the State and municipal authorities.

And so on the Senator can read through and see the drift of his argument; he will find it all tending in the same direction. His colleague, as I read—and I am glad he is here now and can speak for himself—did argue directly that the President had no right to march these troops into the State. He said:

> Mr. President, the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States conveys all the powers which are granted to the Government of the United States under any circumstances to march their troops into the interior of any State.

That is, the United States cannot march troops into the interior of any State unless the President has been called on to repel invasion or suppress domestic violence. Now the Senator says they do not stand on any such doctrine as that. I can only say that he and his colleague ought to have consulted about their position before coming to an expression. The Senator [Mr. WITHERS] then quoted the fourth section of the fourth article and said:

> It will be thus seen that by the provisions of the Constitution the United States is authorized only in one single instance without qualification to occupy the territory of a State with its armed troops; that is, to repel invasion. On the application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature is not in session, it is also authorized to march its troops into the territory of the different States.

So that, as I understand, both the Senators did argue that in the absence of a call such as is provided for by the Constitution and the law, the President has no right to march the troops into the interior of a State. But it is enough that the Senator [Mr. JOHNSTON] says now that he does not contend for any such doctrine. He has the right, most undoubtedly, to change his opinion.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator says that he denies positively that these crimes took place in Petersburgh. How can the distinguished Senator do that? He was not there. How does he know they did not take place? Here is the statement of the district attorney saying they did take place; he was satisfied of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON and Mr. WITHERS. He was not there.

Mr. MORTON. He was not there, but he acted on his best information, and so the marshal acted on his best information, and they give it as what they believed. Then here are half a dozen or seven affidavits stating that those things did take place. I see that they got Mr. White to say he did not sign his affidavit as published in the National Republican. I do not know what the affidavit was that was published in the National Republican. It may have been this one, or it may have been another, for it was just as easy to procure him by force or by fraud to make the last statement as it was to make the first; and if I am called upon to say which statement he was bull-dozed into making, I believe it was the last one.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Bull-dozed with the United States troops in the city?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule must be observed, that no Senator can be interrupted without addressing him through the Chair.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator says he denies positively that these things occurred in the face of those affidavits and in the face of the affidavit of the mayor of Petersburgh, who says there was a riot. He says a pistol was fired, but he says when he got there the fight was over. I suppose it was. He says it was not proved that the man whose name is given here fired the pistol, but somebody else fired it, and the testimony was before him. But the man who was shot in the head swears positively who fired the pistol. The mayor admits that a man was shot or wounded, but says he understands he has got well. The mayor admits the difficulty; he smoothes it down; he glosses it over as well as he may; but he admits the existence of the trouble, and those men swear positively to fact after fact, and yet the Senator from Virginia says he denies positively that these things took place. He has a right to do it; I am not going to question his sincerity at all; but that is the difficulty we have with all these southern outrages. They are denied; they are ignored. Here is the testimony piled up mountain high, and thousands and thousands of affidavits taken before competent committees—I see some of them sitting here now—have been taken this year and years before, and yet they are all ignored or positively denied. That is the trouble we have had all the time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understand the Senator to say that White was bull-dozed when he made the last affidavit, that is, the affidavit dated the 6th day of November, 1876. At that time Judge Hughes was holding the United States court in that city; the United States troops were in the city; there were two hundred and fifty special deputy marshals in the city. Now, I ask the Senator if he believes it possible that the democrats bull-dozed a colored man in the city under those circumstances?

Mr. MORTON. I think that is not a very satisfactory answer, because the judge might have been holding a court and there might have been deputy marshals. It is not a very satisfactory answer to what we know is the favorite method of the Ku Klux in doing business, visiting houses at night, going in gangs, killing men, shooting them—not referring particularly now to Petersburgh, but I am speaking of the general habit of the Ku Klux, the way in which they do business—compelling men to do whatever they want them to do to save their lives, and to save their families from danger and their property from destruction. So, if we are to assume that this man was compelled to make one or the other of these affidavits, there is very much more reason to suppose that he was coerced into making the last one, and I believe he was. It is in conflict with the other; in conflict with the testimony of five or six other men. There is the statement of intelligent officers in which, as gentlemen and as public officers, they have called upon the President of the United States to act.

But the Senator read from the letter of Ramsdell, and he gives credit to that part of it that suits him, in which Ramsdell says:

I have made a thorough canvass of the fourth or Petersburgh congressional district, traveling between two hundred and three hundred miles and speaking at the court-house in each of the eleven counties. Deputy marshals have been appointed in each county and every possible precaution made to preserve the peace and secure the citizens in their rights under the Constitution; but I am prepared to witness and hear of violence in this part of the South.

That is the plain reading; but the Senator did not place the emphasis there. He says deputy marshals were appointed in each county. Why? Because of the apprehension of violence. He says:

I am prepared to witness and hear of violence in this part of the South. The truth is this—

And here is where the Senator stopped reading—

The white people are generally opposed to colored suffrage, and regard any means justifiable to render that vote nugatory.

And there comes the whole trouble, Mr. President. He there states what he believes to be the great fact, that they are opposed to colored suffrage, and that they regard any means that would render that vote nugatory as being justifiable.

Regarding Petersburgh as the most critical locality on the day of election, I thought of remaining here unless it be thought advisable for me to be at headquarters in Richmond.

Very respectfully,

C. P. RAMSDELL,
United States Marshal.

And the same officer, writing another letter on the same day, makes use of the following language to Mr. Taft:

I have the honor to state that it is the understanding here that United States attorney for this district, L. L. Lewis, esq., and other official and non-official citizens of Petersburgh, have represented to your Department that troops will be needed to protect the rights of citizens and the United States officials on election-day. That opinion is doubtless based on the history of elections in that city for the past two years, which have been anything but orderly. Even in the little municipal election last spring for mayor, &c.—

The very one I have been referring to—the most disgraceful outrages were perpetrated. Troops can do no harm to well-disposed citizens, and in the light of experience I am of opinion that they will be needed. Their presence will be, I think, promotive of good order.

I have no doubt their presence was promotive of good order.

I have appointed many deputy United States marshals, and shall be present on election day, and have requested the presence of the assistant district attorney for this district.

Some apprehensions are expressed as to the condition of Norfolk and Portsmouth; but they are so near to Fortress Monroe that I do not think serious disturbances are likely to arise. The troops at the Gosport navy yard might be held in requisition for the latter, and the marines for the former in case needed.

In this city [Richmond] no disturbance or disorder is anticipated. Shall advise you if developments are made.

Respectfully,

C. P. RAMSDELL,
United States Marshal.

So, Mr President, this officer, whose testimony the Senator reads in part, states the whole case very strongly. I have here an article which I will read an extract from; it is from the Virginia Citizen, of October 7, 1876, a republican paper published in Virginia:

It is a well-known fact that gamblers were imported from Richmond in May, 1874, to instruct the "reformers" of this city in the method of stuffing ballot-boxes, and that the city, with a republican majority of 500, was carried by our opponents by over 1,000; that at the congressional election in the fall one of the supervisors was ejected by force from one of the registration rooms; that on election day a deputy United States marshal was assaulted, and that ballot-box stuffing with the "sugar-kiss" ballot was again resorted to.

I have been shown a specimen of these "sugar-kiss" ballots. I am told they were found in great numbers. They were stuffed into a box.

Coming down to the election of 1875 for State senator, when from five hundred to seven hundred independent democrats united with the republicans in supporting Colonel Robert Bolling as an independent candidate for the State senate, the republicans had not a single representative on the board of election judges in any ward of the city, and when the Bolling men applied to the judge of the hustings court for the appointment of one of their friends wherever a vacancy existed, they were refused; that the city authorities refused to appoint any of their friends as special policemen; that the democrats claimed the right at sundown to close the polls, and shut everybody out of the room but the judges themselves.

Is it any wonder that the democrats carried the city by 1,052 majority, notwithstanding the fact that 700 of their voters united with the republicans, who already had a majority? The only measure of safety the Bolling men had was to station one of their men at the polling-place to take the name of each voter as he deposited his vote. Surely this peaceful proceeding was not sufficiently belligerent or incendiary to justify the assaulting, knocking down, beating, and then the arrest of the challenger after getting possession of his book, and locking him up in jail, refusing bail, and keeping him there over night, as was done in the case of Bass in the first ward. The other wards were reconnoitered by gangs of roughs; but ascertaining that they would meet with a warm reception at some, while at others the books had been sent away, these challengers were not molested. Such was the feeling created by these high-handed proceedings, which the municipal authorities made no effort to check, that a number of Bolling democrats said "My God, what are we coming to? We ought to have troops here!" It was their ox being gored then.

The Senator speaks of troops being sent to control elections. I can only say that whether it be in Virginia, Louisiana, South Carolina, or Florida, I know of no case of that kind.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I regret that, important business having called me to one of the Departments this morning, I had not consequently an opportunity of hearing the assault made by the distinguished Senator from Indiana upon the remarks which I had the honor to submit to the Senate yesterday. I hear that his attention was called to the fact that I was not present, but he defended himself for continuing his remarks upon the ground that he was not present yesterday when I addressed the Senate. There is this difference, however. There was a week's notice given by me publicly on the floor of the Senate, notifying the Senate that I proposed to address them yesterday upon the subject of this occupancy of Petersburgh by the military. Therefore the Senator cannot say that he had not notice of my purpose.

It would be impossible for me of course, in the absence of specific knowledge as to the positions taken by the Senator from Indiana, to reply to them to-day; but I will take the earliest occasion to examine them in the RECORD, and to-morrow will ask permission of the Senate to reply to such portions of them as in my opinion require an answer. I have, however, this to say, that I made no statement yesterday which I do not think I am prepared to verify; and I took no position yesterday which I am not prepared to day or at any time to maintain.

As to the quotations from the letters of the United States marshal and chairman of the republican executive committee of Virginia, upon which the Senator appears to rely as containing imputations calculated to damage the fair name and fame of the people of Virginia and of the city of Petersburgh, to wit, that the whole of the white people of Virginia are opposed to negro suffrage and are willing to take any steps to prevent their enjoyment of that right, I deny the statement in its whole length and breadth. I take occasion here to repeat what I have said heretofore on the floor of the Senate in connection with that subject, that while the opposition was wide-spread and almost universal among the white people of Virginia to granting the right of suffrage to the negro population at the time it was given them, because they believed that their intellectual and their moral condition was not such as to enable them intelligently to exercise it, yet, after the amendments to the Constitution were adopted, no man, to my knowledge, within the broad limits of the State expected ever to see that right taken from them. And as the politicians of Virginia, in common with the politicians of the South generally, have usually had some reputation, at least, as men of ordinary sagacity, they realized at once that there were some countervailing advantages that they would enjoy by this investment of that portion of their population with the right of suffrage. They were also fully cognizant of the fact that at a time not very distant in the future, owing to those irrefutable and irrefragable laws which control elections, the colored vote of the South would be cast in accordance with the views of the majority of the white people of the South. That is a fact which only a few more years or a few more months probably will demonstrate to the satisfaction of the whole people of this country. In fact recent events I think have pointed so conclusively to such a result that I already see indications on the part of leading Senators on this floor, notably the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Indiana, of a latent purpose on the part of the republican party, if in their power, to divest the colored people of this right which has been given them by an amendment to the Constitution. Certainly, if certain measures and resolutions which have been introduced and adopted on this floor have any significance whatever in that direction, they point to the results which I have indicated; and I venture the prediction here to-day that many months or many years will not have elapsed before we shall find the strongest advocates of negro suffrage upon this floor in the ranks of the democratic party and the most formidable assailants of that right in the ranks of the republican party. No, sir; we do not propose that our colored people shall be deprived of the rights with which you have invested them, and if this invention has, like others, returned to plague the inventors, it is a righteous retribution from which they cannot now hope to escape.

Sir, this is the only portion of the speech of the Senator to which I designed replying to-day, because I have heard little of what has passed except his remarks when he was last up, and they were marked not by a broad and statesman-like consideration of the question, but by quibbles and pin-hooking that would be better exhibited in a mayor's court than in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Virginia has imputed to me in his closing remarks an idea that never entered my head, and that is a desire to deprive the colored people of the right of suffrage. I never thought such a thing. That right is written in the Constitution, and it is and will be the supreme law. Up to this time these colored people have by violence and crime been deprived of the elective franchise; they have been controlled by force and violence. If left to themselves, especially as their minds are enlightened by freedom and education, they will naturally vote the republican ticket. They will naturally vote for that party which gave them liberty, gave them the right to participate in the government of the country, gave them the right to protect their wives and their children from purchase and sale. Their is no doubt about it. The history of the whole South shows that when the negroes are left to their unbiased judgment or their natural instincts, they will vote with that party that secured for them their liberty and their rights; and, sir, experience has shown that in many of the States they have only been induced to vote the democratic ticket by means that would compel white people, and intelligent white people, also to forego their right to a free vote.

No, sir; we do not want to withdraw that right. I assure my honorable friend from Virginia that although we did not expect the scenes that have followed the fifteenth amendment, we would not repeal it. Let it stand as the law. The time will come when these negroes will have the courage and the intelligence and the force and the power to assert the freedom of the ballot-box, and then your crumbling hopes will melt like snow before the melting sun. Give the negro the right to vote unbiased, give him intelligence and education——

Mr. WITHERS. That is all we ask.

Mr. SHERMAN. And we are willing to risk the issue upon his vote

Mr. WITHERS. So are we.

Mr. SHERMAN. All we claim, Mr. President, and all we have said is that the South have subverted his right while taking his franchise for their own benefit. They have wielded his political power and deprived him of his political rights. That is the point, and that is the whole of it. If it is not so, if we are in error about this, there is no trouble. If the white men of the South seek to use the political power conferred upon the negro and vote him against his will, we will resist it by appeal, by every effort that is peaceful and proper; and we will awaken the attention, not only of the people of the South, but of the North, to the necessity of securing to the negro the unbiased freedom of the vote, and then we will risk his vote All we have complained about is that you have not given him that right.

Now, sir, permit me to say a few words only about this matter, in regard to which my friend from Virginia feels very sensitive. I have from the beginning, from the time this subject was first introduced, regarded this as a mole-hill manufactured or endeavored to be elevated into a mountain. What is this whole Virginia case? General Grant, I suppose, had but very little to do with it. All there was of it can be briefly stated. It seems that this military division is under the command of General Hancock, under the general supervision, as a matter of course, of the General-in-chief of the Army, and supremely under the power of the President of the United States. There was a part of a company, composed of twenty-four men, stationed at Fort Foote, which is down the Potomac. Reports were made to the Attorney-General by the marshal of Eastern Virginia that, on account of some violence or tumult or trouble which had occurred some time in May last, there might possibly be, and there was a fear that there would be, a riot or trouble in Petersburgh at the election. The Attorney-General, having received this intelligence through his subordinate officers there, mentioned to General Sherman, the commander of the Army, that there was some fear, some ground of apprehension that they would not have a peaceable election in Petersburgh, and asked that a few troops might be sent there, simply so that if a call should be made in pursuance of the Constitution and laws they might be at hand to preserve the peace. Thereupon General Sherman applies to General Hancock, the commanding officer of the division, and asks him if he has not got a small force of a few men that he can detail for this temporary duty, to be sent down there to preserve the peace in Petersburgh. Now, the State of Virginia is in the United States of America; no doubt of that; and the President of the United States is Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, and for any lawful purpose the President may send, or his General may send, any portion of the troops of the United States anywhere in the United States, and he alone is the judge of the propriety of it, the judge of the evidence on which that order shall be made. Provided the order was legal, he must judge.

Now, my friends seem to dispute. They say President Grant has made a mistake and that this negro man whom they quote here, William White, says it was not necessary to send them there. If this is a question between William White and Ulysses S. Grant, all I can say is that Ulysses S. Grant is made the judge as to where he shall send the Army, provided it is for a lawful and proper purpose, as to preserve the peace at the election.

This application was made to General Sherman. No doubt he consulted the President, perhaps he did not; but probably he did. Here is the simple narrative of what occurred:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1876.

SIR: In compliance with your reference of the 7th instant of the resolution of the Senate calling for a report "whether troops of the United States were stationed in the city of Petersburgh, in the State of Virginia, on the 7th of November, 1876, and, if so, under what authority and for what purpose," I have the honor to report that Company D, Captain Breckinridge, of the Second United States Artillery, was posted at Petersburgh, Virginia, from November 4 to November 13, when it was recalled to its proper station, Fort Foote, Maryland.

To a more complete understanding of the case, I will add that on the 24 of November a gentleman came to me from the Attorney-General, representing that there was reason to apprehend a breach of the peace at Petersburgh, Virginia, and asking a detachment of troops to be sent there. You being then absent—

It seems the Secretary of War was absent—

I saw Judge Taft in person, and he advised that a company of soldiers be sent to Petersburgh, if practicable; and the next day, being in New York City, I saw General Hancock in person, and, after some inquiries as to the troops available, I ordered him to send the above-designated company to Petersburgh, to remain during the election of November 7, and then to return to its post.

I inclose a copy of his orders; also copies of General Orders Nos. 85 and 96, which include all the orders and instructions made to troops serving in districts where disturbances were apprehended.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

W. T. SHERMAN,
General.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

These innocent United States soldiers went down the river no doubt, were put in the custom-house, quartered there, remained a week, and returned to their post at Fort Foote. This was the invasion of the State of Virginia! This was the invasion upon the rights of the State of Virginia; for that is all there was of it. There was not any intention to stir up an insurrection or any violence, or to produce long speeches in Congress, but simply a small body of troops was sent down there on the, perhaps unfounded, supposition that there was to be a riot and that their presence might prevent a riot or prevent a breach of the peace if they went there.

Mr. MORTON. And no doubt it did.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend says no doubt it did. They were sent there I believe for a lawful purpose. The very law itself which my friend reads from the statutes of the United States, section 2002, expressly gives the right:

No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls.

The whole of these papers show that the only object was to prevent any tumult or riot or disturbance at the polls. They did not go near the polls. As General Sherman says and these papers show, they did not go near the polls. They were put in the custom-house, which was built by the United States; they were in quarters there, and they disturbed nobody. They were kindly and hospitably received by the people of Virginia, according to the statements in these papers. They did not arrest anybody; they did not hurt anybody; and yet that was an invasion of the rights of the State of Virginia, and the two honorable Senators from that State have felt it their duty, in defense of the rights of Virginia against this most gross and unconstitutional outrage on the rights of Virginia, to entertain us a whole day! I must confess I heard both those gentlemen during a portion of yesterday, and I looked over these papers and I thought on the whole it was not necessary to say anything more about it. I assure my friends that if Virginia is never in any danger except from such outrages as these it will be safe for all time to come. I know troops are stationed in Ohio at different points. We have a small detachment stationed at Columbus, and the great anxiety of our people is to have more of them, because it is quite an advantage really to have them.

Mr. WITHERS. Were they sent there to control an election?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. WITHERS. That is what we complain of.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were not sent there to control the election. They were sent there simply to preserve the peace. You might say it is an insult to Virginia to have a constable or sheriff.

Mr. WITHERS. Sent by the United States, I think it would be.

Mr. SHERMAN. Virginia is part of the United States just as much as is Ohio. My friend must get over the idea that Virginia is beyond the limits of the United States.

Mr. WITHERS. With the permission of the Senator, as I do not want to be misunderstood, I should like to interrupt him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state this position, that the State of Virginia, the government of Virginia, is fully competent to preserve the peace within its borders, and until it shall have evinced its inability to do so or shall have requested aid from the President of the United States according to the provisions laid down in the Constitution, it is improper for the military to be sent to that State, particularly upon the day of an election. Although the President states they were not at the polls, as was the case, the application for them requested that they should be sent there to be present at the polls. The President himself in his message asserts that because they were present near the polls a different result was obtained in that district from any other district in the State.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, you ought to treat your officers of the Army with a reasonable degree of moderation and a reasonable degree of fairness. The law expressly says that the Army may be used to preserve the peace at the polls. That this was a lawful order I do not think there can be any question. The troops of the United States, Senators might as well understand, can be stationed anywhere in the United States; in Virginia as in Massachusetts; in South Carolina as in Ohio. It is not to be presumed that because troops are sent to a particular place they are intended for an unlawful use, to interfere with the lawful rights of the people of any State or community. They are to be used lawfully wherever they are, and you cannot use officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States for an unlawful purpose. When that is done, bring us a case of the use of the Army for an unlawful purpose and we will join with you in becoming very indignant about it; but until then we must insist that the United States have the supreme right in this country within the limits of the Constitution.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not deny that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The flag of the United States, the Government of the United States, the President of the United States, the Army of the United States, and the courts of the United States extend over every foot of our soil wherever the flag floats. All this idea about State rights interfering with the lawful exercise of power by the United States, I hoped had been buried forever. The United States is the supreme authority in all this broad country; but no officer of the United States has a right to interfere with the lawful rights of the States or the duties of the States. The powers of the United States, not only the legislative power, the judicial power, and the power of the President, but the power of the Army, extend everywhere over the United States, to be used in strict accordance with law. Upon the case made by these gentlemen, with the exception of the extravagant remark made by the Senator from Virginia who was last up, that the Army could not be sent anywhere except to suppress an insurrection or repel an invasion, it seemed to me only an effort on the part of these honorable Senators to repel what might be regarded as an imputation upon the State of Virginia; that is, that the State of Virginia was not able or willing to protect the elective franchise. It may be true that the State of Virginia can in all cases protect peace at the ballot-box and prevent frauds. I am not here to dispute that, although perhaps the Committee of Elections of the House, especially at the last session, furnished some pretty strong evidence that in this very district there was very great wrong and fraud; but I have not to pass upon that question.

Mr. WITHERS. There was no allegation of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if there was an allegation made by an officer of the United States that there was danger, or fear, or reasonable ground to apprehend a disturbance of the peace at the polls that would prevent the people of Virginia from voting for officers of the United States, as members of Congress or electors of President, and a reasonable ground was laid, then it was the duty of the President to keep his military force in such position as that it could be used; and when he did that he did not invade the right of Virginia any more than the governor of the State of Virginia would invade the rights of a county by sending a company of militia or an officer or a sheriff or anybody else to aid the local authorities in putting down riot or tumult or a disturbance.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question just there?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. Does the Senator consider the relations of the county to the State precisely similar to those that the States occupy with regard to the General Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, not at all.

Mr. WITHERS. Then your illustration is not a fair one.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the authority of the United States is of a different kind entirely and a different character, but the authority of the United States is supreme.

Mr. WITHERS. Under the Constitution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly, it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the authority of the county officers within their sphere, subject to the judgment of the people, is supreme. The authority of the sheriff, the authority of the constable, as long as the law stands, cannot be interfered with by any one. As a matter of course I do not compare the United States of America to a county; but according to the theory of the honorable gentleman the United States have not as much authority as a county sheriff or a county constable or any local authority.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator seems to have misunderstood me. I did not design, certainly, to be understood as comparing the position of the United States with that of a county. When the honorable Senator stated that the United States Government possessed the same power to send its troops and its officers into any State that the governor of a State had to send State officers into any county, my inquiry was addressed to the point whether he considers that the States in their relation to the General Government occupy precisely the same relation that counties do to the government of a State.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think so. I am frank to say that I think a county is a subordinate municipal government, dependent upon the constitution of the State.

Mr. WITHERS. That is what I supposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator should ask me what the constitution of Virginia is as to the counties, I could not tell him.

Mr. WITHERS. It is not necessary.

On the 18th of January Mr. WITHERS, by permission of Mr. BOGY, of Missouri, who was entitled to the floor, made the following announcement:

Mr. President, it will be remembered that I yesterday gave notice that I would endeavor to-day, after an opportunity should have been afforded me, of informing myself of the character of the strictures made upon my speech by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] to say something in reply. But as the Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor, and I do not desire to interfere with his purpose of discussing at length the questions connected with the affairs of Louisiana, I will reserve for a future occasion the remarks I intended to submit.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that in Ohio a county is a mere municipal corporation for the convenience of a certain community. The county organization, however, is protected by the constitution of Ohio. The county in Ohio does not depend at all upon the legislation of the State, but it is regulated and its powers are regulated somewhat by the constitution of the State itself. I regard States, counties, cities, and the Government of the United States as simply subdivisions of the great power of the people of the United States to govern themselves. They use the United States to regulate certain great powers of government; they use the States to regulate other lesser, but highly important, powers of government; they use counties to regulate mere local matters, confined to little regions; and township authorities, and school districts, and wards have still subordinate duties. The great authority is the people of the United States, and all these are but subordinate agencies of theirs. I have no jealousy at all of the powers of the Government of the United States. That is the difference between the schools in which the honorable Senator and I have been reared. I think that the powers of the Government are essential to the liberties of the people of the United States, all of them exercised to their fullest extent sometimes. Sometimes it may be necessary to exercise these powers to their utmost limit, as we had to do during the recent civil war. Those powers are just as essential and necessary to the liberties of the people of this country as the powers of a State. There is no such sanctity in my mind around the powers of the State governments as to make me worship them at the expense of the powers of the Government of the United States. I think that this whole controversy has been magnified, and that a simple order by an officer one week before the election to send twenty-four men down to Petersburgh, an important and thriving city of the State of Virginia, to preserve the peace at the polls, has been converted into a great invasion of the rights of the State of Virginia. I do not think there is anything of it.

Mr. MORTON. I desire simply to state that I made the remarks I did this afternoon because I was here. I have been out of the Senate almost continuously for some days and may not be here again for several days to come; but I had a leisure afternoon, and for that reason desired to say what I did. Certainly I did not want to take any advantage of the absence of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] and I knew very well he could read what I had to say.

The Senator imputes to myself and to the Senator from Ohio the purpose of abandoning negro suffrage and becoming its opponents. I am very sure he cannot find any very lively evidence of that fact. I have been struggling for some years to do what I could to secure the enjoyment of that right. The Senator says that the colored people will soon vote the democratic ticket. I think they will when they are compelled to do it by starvation, by violence, and intimidation. That they will willingly vote with those who formerly oppressed them and who but for the accident of war would hold them in slavery to-day, and continue to do so, and against those who made them free and gave them equal rights, I certainly shall not believe until I see it; but that they may be compelled in some States or in localities by various influences to do that is very likely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THOMAS M. SIMMONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask now that we finish the consideration of Senate bill No. 948.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate continue the consideration of the bill temporarily laid aside.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 948) for the relief of Thomas M. Simmons was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. BOGY. If I am in order, I move that the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] some days ago be taken up. The resolution is now on the table, and I desire to reply to the speech made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on Louisiana affairs at the time when the resolution was presented. As it is growing late and I think there is nothing pressing before the body at this time, I should like to say what I intend on that subject to-day.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator. Does he desire to go on this afternoon? I had thought of calling up the report of the Committee on Rules and concluding its consideration to-day, which I think we can do. It is now three o'clock, and perhaps it will suit the convenience of the Senator better to postpone his remarks until to-morrow and take up the Louisiana resolution then. I throw this out as a suggestion. I am not disposed to occupy the floor or seek it if the Senator from Missouri desires to make his remarks to-day.

Mr. BOGY. If I can be assured that I shall get the floor to-morrow I am disposed to yield.

Mr. FERRY. The Louisiana resolution might be taken up at the conclusion of to-day's session and left as the unfinished business, so as to come up to-morrow at one o'clock, and then the Senator from Missouri can take the floor. I will yield for that purpose, if we are not through with the rules at the close of to-day's session.

Mr. BOGY. Very well.

RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the report of the Committee on Rules be taken from the table for present consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the Committee on Rules is before the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the first rule be read, as that is one of the rules asked to be reserved by some Senator, I do not now remember by whom. I move that the Senate concur in the first rule. I ask that it be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

1. The presiding officer having taken the chair and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall then be read, and any mistake made in the entries may be corrected. The reading of the Journal shall not be suspended unless by unanimous consent; and when any motion shall be made to amend or correct the same it shall be deemed a privileged question and proceeded with until disposed of by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This rule was reserved, as it was understood, for consideration in the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. In consequence of several Senators having raised the point that this rule is different from the old rule and raises the question of the quorum being dependent on the qualification of members, in order to avoid any issue upon that question I propose to offer as an amendment the language of the old rule. I move to insert after "quorum," at the end of the first line, the words "which shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn;" so as to make the rule read:

The presiding officer having taken the chair and a quorum (which shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn) being present, the Journal, &c.

It is simply replacing the language of the old rule.

The amendment was agreed to.

The rule, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. FERRY. I do not know that there has been any issue in the consideration of these rules except upon the question of compelling the attendance of absentees; and, if there be no other question in the recollection of any Senators present, I ask that the amendments be concurred in in gross save that rule which contains the clause relating to the attendance of Senators, which is the third rule.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will pardon me. I have not the rules before me, but I believe objection was made to some rule that made the duty of voting obligatory upon the Vice-President.

Mr. FERRY. That is true. I agreed to reserve that rule at the instance of some Senator; but it escaped my recollection. There was a point on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is to concur in all the rules except in these two instances mentioned.

The rules, as agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in, with the exceptions stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two reserved rules are now before the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. The first one is Rule 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

3. No Senator shall absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave of the Senate first obtained. Whenever it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel, the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and, pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no motion, except a motion to adjourn, nor debate, shall be in order.

Mr. WHYTE. I proposed an amendment to this rule when the subject was under consideration before. I think a better amendment than the one which I proposed, which I now withdraw, would be the old rule. The old rule as it stands, it occurs to me, is a far better rule than the rule as proposed by the committee. The Senate has acted under that rule since the 25th day of June, 1798, and I have never known an instance in which the Senate suffered under the operation of that rule, certainly not during my service in the Senate during portions of two terms. It occurs to me that we had better preserve the old land-marks for the governance of the Senate. I hope that the committee will not press this rule as proposed by them now, but will allow us to remain under the rule passed in 1798.

Mr. FERRY. I would suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he would reach his object and test the sense of the Senate by striking out the words "and, when necessary, to compel." That would leave the rule substantially what it was before.

Mr. WHYTE. That was my motion the other day.

Mr. FERRY. That would leave simply the power to request the attendance of absent Senators, the same as the old rule.

Mr. WHYTE. I have no objection. It occurred to me, however, in reading the rule rapidly, that there was a distinction between the new rule and the old rule besides the point of compulsory attendance.

Mr. FERRY. There is very little difference except the question of excuses, which the committee thought best to leave out.

Mr. WHYTE. And the matter of expenses, and so on?

Mr. FERRY. Yes, sir, and expenses.

Mr. WHYTE. Then I am quite content to withdraw the amendment just proposed and offer again the amendment which I before proposed, to strike out the words "and, when necessary, to compel."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the words "and, when necessary, to compel."

Mr. HAMLIN. I think when the Senator from Maryland shall have occupied a seat in this body a little longer he will not be able to say what he has uttered this morning. He has told us truthfully that while he has held a seat upon this floor he has seen no inconvenience under the old rule. Such I suppose to be the fact; yet there is no Senator upon this floor who has occupied a term who will not tell that Senator that time after time during a session we have found ourselves without a quorum in consequence of the voluntary withdrawal of Senators from their seats. There ought to be, I frankly admit, that honorary obligation, that high sense of duty upon every Senator, which would restrain him from doing that. I believe I never left my seat for any such purpose; but it is done. If you adopt the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland, it is true that you restore the rule to what it was, and to what it has always been; but you will involve yourselves in the difficulty of being obliged to adjourn again and again if you do not have the power to compel the attendance of members.

Mr. INGALLS. The power exists under the Constitution.

Mr. HAMLIN. It exists under the Constitution in the body; but the body must clothe the minority with the mode and manner of exercising it before it can be exercised. It has been the construction of the Constitution that less than a quorum could not exercise any other power than to request the attendance of absentees unless a quorum, a legally constituted body, should have first prescribed the rules under which the power could be exercised by a number less than a quorum. Such, however, has, I believe, always been the rule of the other House. The necessity I suppose would be somewhat commensurate with the number constituting the body. I can well see that that particular rule might have been earlier adopted there than here; but we know that this body has grown from twenty-six members up to its present number, seventy-six, when we are all here, and we are getting to be quite a body in number. It is designed to avoid the necessity of being compelled to adjourn without a quorum, and that necessity occasioned by the voluntary withdrawal of Senators from their seats. The committee gave to it a very careful consideration, and we were unanimously of the opinion that we should clothe this body with the authority, when it should find itself with a number less than a quorum, to exercise that power which the Constitution has vested in us.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Is not that power already conferred upon a minority of this body by the Constitution itself, without the necessity of adopting any such rule?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the Senator was not in his seat when I said that by the construction of the Senate, uniformly adhered to, it has been held that it has not that power until the rule for exercising it shall have been prescribed by a full Senate. The question has been again and again raised here, and the decision of the Chair, I believe, has been uniform that a number less than a quorum cannot arrest and bring here by the Sergeant-at-Arms a member without the express authority to do so having been first granted by the Senate. That has been the construction, and the committee have acted on that. Whether that be a correct construction of the Constitution, I do not undertake to say; but I adopt that construction which has been uniformly the one that has controlled the Senate; and under that view I for one think it is not only wise, but I think it is demanded of us at this time to make our rule effective.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, we have all been taught to have a veneration for the Senate of the United States, and I believe that one of the very reasons why we have venerated this body in the past has been the high sense of honor which has been supposed to govern the actions of those members that composed this body. Speaking for myself, I presume that every other Senator would discharge with perfect fidelity the duty that he owed to his State and to the country by being personally present when that duty called him here. I do not believe any Senator would absent himself from this body to avoid the performance of his public duty; and if there be such a Senator for whom we should be compelled to send the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring him here, I presume he would be tricky enough to hide himself in a spot where the Sergeant-at-Arms could not find him.

I believe in holding Senators to their high responsibility, not by compulsion but by honorable obligation; and I do not believe the time has yet arrived in the Senate of the United States to use compulsory process to force Senators to discharge their duties. If it has come, then I am sorry for the condition of the people of the United States. No, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not depart from that rule which in 1798 was found to be sufficiently binding upon the honor of Senators, and that this Senate will be content to try the same expedients that our forefathers resorted to to carry on the public business in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. FERRY. I am not disposed to discuss this question much; but at the same time I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland and other Senators to the fact that this body is gradually growing larger and larger; and incident to that fact is another pertinent one to the question at issue, that many Senators in consequence of that feel that they can be away and leave the Senate to a fewer number who are left from time to time to transact the business of the Senate. We have been found repeatedly in a minority, and then attempted, under force of the existing rule, to compel the attendance of sufficient members to enable us to progress in the business of the Senate, but such attempts have generally failed. If official obligation will not bring Senators here, the business of the Senate must progress, and the Senate should adopt some more stringent rule which will bring Senators present, so that the business of the country shall not be arrested. It was with that view the committee thought it prudent not only, but rather imperative, that they should submit this amendment to the Senate in order to avoid the contingency which we frequently find ourselves in when we are anxious to progress with business, and find ourselves without a quorum. I need barely recur to instances to remind Senators of the fact that Senators have risen, when we have been without a quorum, to move the compulsory attendance of absentees, and it was found impossible, under the rule, without giving a day's notice. Finding themselves in that hopeless and helpless condition, the committee have been driven to report this amendment in order to give the Senate the option. This is not compulsory. It is left entirely to the Senate. They can either direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to compel the attendance of Senators, or direct him to request their attendance as now. So the adoption of this rule will not compel the Senate to do just what the rule expresses, but will leave it to exercise its option. It is not left to an option now, for it is unable to compel the attendance of Senators who are absent.

It would seem to me a wise rule that when the absence of a quorum is disclosed those present at that time, when they feel the necessity of attendance, should have the power to enforce the attendance of absentees; otherwise we are left to the next day, and when the next day arrives doubtless a quorum will be present and the necessity will have passed. Senators appear here ready to discharge their duty, remain hour after hour, and sometimes until late at night, and as we shall soon be approaching the close of the session, we shall be compelled to hold our sessions at night, and those Senators who remain to transact the business of the Senate will be compelled to be occupied here from twelve o'clock noon until perhaps twelve o'clock at night, and may then find themselves without a quorum. Perhaps they have been all day engaged upon a bill, and when they come to the final vote they find themselves without a quorum and are compelled to break up until the next morning. Now, it would seem not unwise and surely not unsafe to give the Senate this option under the rule proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HAMLIN. Just one word. There can be no controversy between the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] and myself in relation to what are the duties and obligations of Senators. I concur in every word he has uttered in relation to those duties and obligations; I feel them as he feels them; but there stands before us the startling fact—because it is a fact within the experience of every Senator in this body—that the provisions in this rule are requisite and necessary to compel an attendance of a quorum in this body. While I do not wish to say anything in the spirit of prophecy, but rather in the light of the past, I do want to say to my friend from Maryland, that before he shall close his term here, so sure as that Senator lives, he will concur with me in the sentiments that I express now. When he shall have found himself involved in a debate and seen a vote of the Senate defeated by the voluntary withdrawal of men to the cloak-room—for it becomes necessary to speak of facts as they are, unpleasant as it may be—so that there is not a quorum voting, and when the vote has been declared see them return to their seats; when he has seen that as often as I have, yea, a tenth part as often as I have myself, I am very sure the Senator will agree with me that it is most appropriate that this language be retained in this rule.

Mr. WITHERS. I would inquire of the Senator from Maine whether in the happening of a contingency such as he has described the rule if adopted in its present form would furnish an adequate remedy. In other words, should such a contingency occur in the conduct of the business of the Senate as to induce a sufficient number of Senators to withdraw and by their absence prevent a quorum and cause the failure of the measure under consideration, I ask whether if we had the power under the rules to compel the attendance of those Senators, it would improve the matter? Would it not, in other words, be another illustration of the old adage that while one man can carry a horse to water, forty men cannot make that horse drink? If there be Senators who have sufficient reasons to induce them in their own minds, to justify them to their own consciences in withdrawing from the body and destroying a quorum, when you arrest and bring them here under the care of the Sergeant-at-Arms what process will you resort to in order to compel them to vote when you have a quorum and got them here?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, it is utterly impossible for a man to tell precisely what will be the effect of this rule; but the Senator illustrates it by a reference to the horse. I do not know that the horse understands the English language quite as well as we ought to understand it, although a horse is a very intelligent animal and I think he does understand pretty well very much that is said to him; and I think if he could understand a little more of the English language and could be told in so many words that if he would not drink from obstinacy his provender should be withheld from him, it would affect the action of the horse very much. [Laughter.] Now, then, if we apply that same reasoning to the Senator, and say to him "You shall suffer a penalty," and that follows if we see fit, and it becomes in the judgment of the Senate a proper act to do, that he shall be fined any sum within the discretion of the Senate for his misconduct, I only say in reply to the Senator from Virginia that I think it would generally bring us a quorum of members here. Nay, I think if the rule is passed, we shall find its good effect without enforcing it; it will enforce itself. That is my judgment. But I can see, when this body has got to its present number, no reason why we should not have the power the Constitution gives us. I think that the illustrations which have been so often furnished are an admonition to us that, if we act wisely and well, we shall put the power where it may be used when necessary.

Mr. WITHERS. I presume, then, I am to infer from the reply of the Senator from Maine that if the rule be adopted in its present form, it will be necessary for some legislation to be enacted empowering the Senate to either withhold the property of Senators, mulct them with a fine, or subject them to personal imprisonment, or subject them to some other pain or penalty to compel them to do that which they are disinclined to do. I am not prepared to admit that the passage of the rule in its present form would give to the Senate any such power. I do not believe they could rightfully exercise any such power even if the rule be enacted in its present shape.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, my first impression was against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, because I believed that the power to compel the attendance of members existed in full force by virtue of the Constitution itself. A more minute inspection of section 5 of article 1 convinces me, however, that I am mistaken. The language is that—

A majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties, as each House may provide.

It is therefore apparent that this power that is lodged by the Constitution in each House is dormant and inoperative until a majority of each House has prescribed the method of its exercise.

Mr. WITHERS. Exactly.

Mr. INGALLS. Therefore, I am convinced that the Committee on Rules is right in incorporating into the revision that it has submitted a provision for requiring the compulsory attendance of members. I do not myself believe that that power, if confided to the Senate, would ever be improperly exercised. To suppose that would be to impute to the Senate those modes and those methods of action that those Senators who have spoken have been most anxious to avoid. It may become necessary, as the Senator from Maine has said, sometimes to exercise that power; and inasmuch as under the Constitution it is dormant and cannot be exercised until the House has provided for its exercise, it is therefore necessary that we under the rules should render that constitutional power effectual. I shall, therefore, oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland and vote for the rule as reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Maxey, Robertson, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Hamlin, Ingalls, McCreery, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Patterson, Price, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Windom, and Wright—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Thurman, Wadleigh, and West—33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the rule.

Mr. GORDON. I want to move to reconsider the vote which adopted the amendment to Rule 1.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us dispose of this first.

Mr. GORDON. I thought we were on the final adoption of the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in Rule 3 as it stands.

Mr. GORDON. Very well; I withhold my motion for the present.

Rule 3 was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Another rule was reserved, the Chair thinks.

Mr. FERRY. Rule 19 was reserved.

The Chief Clerk read Rule 19, as follows:

19. When the Senate shall equally be divided, the Vice-President shall, by his vote, determine the question.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Constitution says that—

The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

The Vice-President is not a member of the Senate. He is an independent officer of the Government. He is no more under the control of the Senate than the President of the United States is under the control of the Senate; and we have no authority by any rule or declaration of ours to impose upon him any duty or confer upon him any right that does not exist under and by virtue of the Constitution. It is my opinion that the Senate has no more control over him in the way of compelling him to vote, than it has over the President of the United States to compel him to sign a bill. I should regret to have the Senate do an idle or an ineffectual or a nugatory thing. It is very evident that if we pass this rule and the Vice-President sees fit to disobey it, and under some circumstances that may occur in the case of a tie to refuse to vote, we should place ourselves by the enactment of a provision like this in a very absurd and preposterous attitude. We certainly cannot fine him, we cannot expel him, we cannot incarcerate him, we cannot impeach him. Therefore this rule would in no sense whatever be effectual, and, in my judgment, the Senate ought not to adopt it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I do not call to my mind now a case where there has been an equal division of the body when the presiding officer, where he has been the Vice-President of the United States, has ever neglected or refused to give the casting vote. I do not regard the rule, therefore, as very material. That we have the power to make a rule which shall be as binding upon the officer who presides over us as it is upon ourselves, I can have no earthly doubt; else the Vice-President when he occupies that chair is not obliged to enforce the rules which we make for our own order and observance. I will not run through those rules, but the rules are full of instances where duties are imposed on him. We require him to decide a question of order. By what authority? He shall decide it, we say. It is compulsory upon him. He may call a member to order, or if a member called to order by others, he shall decide questions of order subject to an appeal to the body. I will not take up the time of the Senate, but I think there are many other instances in the rules where we make it mandatory upon the regular presiding officer to do a certain thing. The Constitution gives to him this power. I think we have an equal right in the rules of the body over which he presides, to prescribe rules for him as well as for ourselves; and while we say Senators shall vote we may say the presiding officer shall vote, as much as to say that he shall decide questions of order, or shall do this thing or that other thing which we command him to do all through these rules.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the word "equally" be stricken out where it is and placed between the word "be" and "divided." The rule now reads:

When the Senate shall equally be divided.

I move that it be transposed so as to read:

When the Senate shall be equally divided.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator wishes to have it right, it would be better to say "divided." "Equally" is only as to the nature of the division.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am just following the Constitution, which says "unless they be equally divided."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will submit to the Constitution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want it in the language of the Constitution.

Mr. FERRY. I have no particular objection to that; but the Senator will observe, in looking through the rules, that the committee have put the verbs in together. This is simply sandwiching the adverb in between. It expresses the same thing, but it preserves the harmony of construction. Let it pass as it is, notwithstanding the Senator from Missouri has quoted the language of the Constitution. Still I bow submissively to that phraseology and will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the rule as thus amended.

A division was called for.

Mr. HAMLIN. We may find ourselves in trouble here. I think we had better let the rule stand as it was before. I do not think there is any very material necessity for the change, while I think we have undoubtedly the power. The word "may" in the Constitution, in my judgment, lawfully is equivalent to "shall," and the word "may" in the rule, I think, is equally powerful. I hope my colleague the chairman of the committee will agree to it.

Mr. FERRY. I shall certainly yield to so experienced a parliamentarian as my distinguished colleague on the committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to amend the rule by striking out "shall" and inserting "may," so as to conform to the old rule.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the rule as thus amended.

The rule, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. FERRY. I believe this covers all the reservations. I desire to make an amendment in Rule 20. In line 3, after the word "may" I move to insert "enter a motion or," so that the rule will apply to entering a motion to reconsider as well as to a motion to reconsider. The point was suggested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] that in the case of entering a motion to reconsider, the rule would not apply. This will make it apply both where a Senator enters the motion and where he makes the motion.

Mr. WEST. That has been the usage heretofore.

Mr. FERRY. That has been the usage heretofore, as the Senator has well said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves to amend Rule 20, line 3, by inserting after the word "may" the words "enter a motion or;" so as to read:

When a question has once been decided by a vote of the Senate, whether that vote be determined by a majority or by two-thirds of the Senate, any Senator voting on that side which prevailed may enter a motion or move for a reconsideration thereof, at any time, on the same day on which the vote was taken, or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter; and all motions to reconsider shall be decided by a majority of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORDON. I move now to reconsider the vote by which, in Rule 1, these words were inserted:

Which shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn.

Those words were inserted after the word "quorum" in the first line of Rule 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. FERRY. I trust, in order that we may vote intelligently, that the Senator will suggest his object in moving a reconsideration.

Mr. GORDON. My object is to leave the rule just as it was reported by the committee. I am satisfied with the Constitution fixing a quorum to be a majority of the entire body.

Mr. FERRY. I will simply say in that regard that several Senators who are not present expressed their desire to be present and vote in favor of the old rule; and as I stated yesterday that I did not intend to press this question covering that rule in their absence, after conferring with them they have expressed their views, and with their consent I have called up the rules for conclusion to-day. The language employed by the rule as now agreed to by the Senate is the old rule, and we cannot be far astray in adhering to it, as we have been acting under that rule so long a time.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator allow me? He means by the old rule the rule that was adopted in 1864, I presume. He does not mean the rule that had appertained ever since the body was organized till then.

Mr. FERRY. The last rule in 1864, that the Senate shall be composed of Senators duly chosen and sworn, that that shall be the basis on which a majority shall be established to constitute a quorum. The Senator by moving to reconsider I suppose desires to cover all the Senators elected or all the Senators to which the States are entitled.

Mr. GORDON. That is what I mean.

Mr. FERRY. I supposed that was the point. As an illustration, take the case of Louisiana, represented to-day by my friend at my left. She has but one Senator. In that case we should require thirty-nine as a quorum instead of thirty-eight, the whole number being seventy-six with the States fully represented. To-day there are but seventy-five. The object of the Senator from Georgia would be to require the number of thirty-nine as a quorum instead of thirty-eight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was adopted to Rule 1.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. FERRY. In justice to the absent Senators with whom I conferred, or some of them, I feel in duty bound to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORDON. I suggest that the reconsideration be permitted by unanimous consent, and then the question can be fully discussed. There will be no trouble, if a majority of the Senate shall be in favor of the amendment, in putting in those words.

Mr. FERRY. There is nothing to prevent the Senator's discussing it now on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GORDON. The Senate is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum voting, the yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that and let us go into executive session.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am willing to withdraw it for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only motion at present allowable, there being no quorum, is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. The Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] who intended to speak on some question to-day, yielded for the consideration of these rules, and I assured him that before we closed the session of to-day that unfinished business should be called up. I trust that there may be unanimous consent given to the Senator from Missouri to call up the resolution at one o'clock to-morrow, so that he can submit the remarks he intends to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BOGY. I prefer to call up the question now and let it go until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum present and the Senator from South Carolina has moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HAMLIN. We can get a quorum here on the yeas and nays, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now let us have the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WEST. I should like to have the proposition reported.

Mr. WITHERS. It is merely a proposition to reconsider.

Mr. WEST. Let us see what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first rule was amended by inserting after the word "quorum" the words "which shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn." The motion is to reconsider the vote adopting that amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Chaffee, Clayton, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Price, Robertson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Mitchell, Morrill, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, West, Windom, and Wright—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, and Wadleigh—31.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the rules as a whole, unless further amendments be offered.

The rules were adopted.

Mr. FERRY. Now I move that the usual number be printed. We wish to have them for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I call attention to the fact that the new rules are in force, but it will take a day or two to have them printed for us; and I suggest that by common consent they be not considered in force until Monday next. We shall then have them printed before us and indexed so that Senators can understand them. I think that can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the suggestion. The Senator from Michigan now moves that the new rules go into operation on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. FERRY. Now, as I promised to do, I call up for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] the resolution on which he desires to speak, that it may be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] to instruct the special committee on counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President to inquire and report upon certain propositions in connection therewith, as the Chair understands. It is moved to proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and fourteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STONE, by unanimous consent, submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the bill (H. R. No. 3922) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma and for the better protection of the Indian tribes therein; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

Mr. KIDDER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4442) extending the time of payment for public lands in cases where crops have been injured or destroyed by grasshoppers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. KIDDER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Dakota, approved March 2, 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

BLACK HILLS LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. KIDDER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4444) to establish a land district in the Black Hills in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILLARD. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time the petition of the workingmen of the District of Columbia, praying for the right of suffrage in the local government of this District, and I ask that the memorial be read, as it is signed by over two hundred workingmen of the District. They ask that the principle of self-government may be recognized in this District.

The memorial was received and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The memorial was read, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to the commissioners appointed by Congress to frame a government for the District of Columbia to be reported to Congress at the next session thereof:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, residents and tax-payers of the District of Columbia, believing that taxation without representation and suffrage is contrary to the spirit and genius of our institutions, alike unrepublican and undemocratic, respectfully request and pray that your honorable body will in the re-organization of the government for the District of Columbia provide for and enact a law giving to us, and all citizens of said District of legal age, the right of suffrage, so that hereafter they may have a voice in their own local government in accordance with the principles enunciated in the Constitution of the United States, as your petitioners will ever pray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 13, 1876.

CAROLINE M. EGBERT.

Mr. CLYMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 4445) for the relief of Caroline M. Egbert; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT CINCINNATI.

Mr. BANNING submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report upon the expediency and utility of constructing a harbor of refuge upon the Ohio River at the mouth of Mill Creek, Cincinnati, Ohio.

RECUSANT WITNESS—E. W. BARNES.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the communication of E. W. Barnes, received by the Speaker yesterday, to report the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That E. W. Barnes be permitted to repair at once to New Orleans, in the custody of a deputy sergeant-at-arms, for the purpose of procuring the telegraphic dispatches heretofore mentioned in the report of the Judiciary Committee of this House, and within ten days bring them before the committee of investigation, at Washington, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, and abide the further action of this House.

Mr. CAULFIELD demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CAULFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

Mr. FLYE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of George W. Lawrence, of Damariscotta, Maine, praying for compensation for extra labor and materials required in the building of certain gunboats for the Government in consequence of changes made in the contract; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

TRANSPORTATION OF PETROLEUM ON PASSENGER STEAMERS.

Mr. TURNEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4446) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same refers to the transportation of petroleum on steamers carrying passengers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the following bills and petitions; and they were severally referred to the Committee of Claims:

The bill (H. R. No. 4210) for the relief of Joseph Brown, postmaster of New Castle, Maine;

The bill (H. R. No. 4216) for the relief of the administrator or legal representatives of James T. Johnson, deceased, late of Montgomery County, Mississippi;

The bill (H. R. No. 4215) for the relief of Mrs. Edith F. Ross;

The petition of Rufus M. Hodgkins, postmaster at Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, for re-imbursement for money paid by him to the Government, being the amount stolen from the post-office funds at said town; and

The petition of Samuel R. Atwell, praying the payment of $245 burned in a car.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. HOUSE. I ask unanimous consent that the committee on the recent election in Louisiana may have printed from time to time the testimony taken before the committee as fast as received from the stenographers engaged in transcribing the same.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no objection to that.

Mr. COX. I ask the same privilege on behalf of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, on alleged fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, and also on the post-office matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before leave is given, I desire to have it understood that this does not include the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Only the testimony.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Because before the reports are ordered to be printed I desire that there shall be an understanding about the minority reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] and the request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX?]

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

B. S. JAMES.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4447) to pay B. S. James money due him for the transportation of the mails over route 5610; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A. W. BURNET.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4448) to remove the political disabilities of A. W. Burnet, of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina. I ask that the bill may now be put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It removes from A. W. Burnet, of the State of South Carolina, all the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, by reason of participation in the rebellion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4449) for the protection of settlers on the public lands of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PETITION OF VERMONT VOTERS.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition of eight thousand voters from Vermont.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, (in his seat.) I object.

The SPEAKER. Who objects?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen who object must rise in their places to do so.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTY.

Mr. SAMPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4450) authorizing full payment of bounty to certain veteran volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF HENRY HOOVER.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4451) to relieve the heirs of Henry Hoover; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, made a special order therein for to-morrow after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I reserve all points of order.

THE GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the memorial of the governors of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Dakota, and others, praying action on the part of Congress in reference to the grasshopper plague, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the select committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States:

Whereas it is provided by article 2, section 1, Constitution of the United States, that each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress;

And whereas it is provided in article 12 of the amendments to the Constitution that the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be President, if such number be a majority of the whole number appointed: Therefore,
